Dr. W. S. Bell is able to make another splendid report in behalf of the endowment campaign—this time the report of the gift of the church at Hamlin, Kansas. It is not a large church, but it has some large hearted people in its membership and loyal Ashland College graduates as leaders. Brother William Schaffer, the hustling pastor, and his capable wife are doing a good work there. The gift from Hamlin was $1,665.00, which brings the Endowment total to $208,780.20.

Brother H. W. Koontz, pastor of the church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, testifies to the blessing of God on his work at that place, particularly through the evangelistic campaign recently conducted by Dr. Bame, who made report in a previous issue. The visible results of the meeting were seventeen baptisms, and others yet to be baptized. Also the membership was strengthened in faith and some who had grown careless were revived in their allegiance to the Lord Jesus.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for our mission work in French Equatorial Africa, where many of the native Christians are being severely tried. After you have read Dr. Gribble's letter, you can pray intelligently.

The pastor of the Second church of Long Beach, California, says: "We covet the prayers of the other churches."

Brother Drushal asks for prayers for divine guidance in the work at Riverside Institute.

Brother F. G. Coleman requests prayer for the continued success of the work at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, under the leadership of Brother Frank Gehman.

Dr. Charles A. Bame and Dr. Martin Shively pay tribute in this issue to the memory of the late Dr. J. C. Mackey, whose death we announced in a recent paper. Our lamented brother was not born and reared in the Brethren faith, but was converted to it. He was therefore not one of our pioneer ministers, but he had become one of our older ministers and had made no inconsiderable contribution to the success of our church in the earlier days of his ministry among us. Besides he was an intelligent, kind, brotherly friend to the editor, often inquiring about our work and dropping a word of encouragement. We are therefore glad to add this word of appreciation to the memory of our departed brother.

Brother G. E. Drushal, superintendent of the Riverside Institute at Lost Creek, Kentucky, says the school year just closed was very successful, and the closing events were impressive and showed a fine spirit prevailing. He says the school is still very much in demand. A new teacher with a college degree is desired for the new school term. Brother and Sister Early are leaving Lost Creek to take charge of the work at Limestone, Tennessee. This mountain valley was visited by a disastrous flood the week preceding commencement, but the damage at Riverside was negligible.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble gives us a history of the war situation that has confronted our missionaries in French Equatorial Africa, and concerning which partial accounts have been previously published. It is by no means strange but it is worthy of note that our missionaries have maintained an attitude of strict loyalty to the French government, under which they labor, and from which they have received their concessions and privileges. It is characteristic of missionaries that they "render unto Caesar" the allegiance that belongs to "Caesar," but that, we regret to say, cannot always be said of church members in the homeland. And the French officials have treated our workers very courteously, and God has worked through them to prevent our missionaries being required to evacuate their station at Yaloke. At the suggestion of the government officials, our work has taken on the added responsibility of an industrial school, which, we have no doubt, will result in permanent good of our missionary undertaking.

We are happy to be permitted to give our readers a view of the new Sunday school unit of the Second Brethren church of Long Beach, California. This church, the product of the missionary endeavor of the First church of that city, has made remarkable growth since its launching out upon its independent existence with a full-time pastor. Their first building has been outgrown, and now they have provided for themselves new and up-to-date Sunday school quarters. The remodeled old building is serving them as a church auditorium until they are able to erect the second unit of their plans. We congratulate Brother J. G. Lienhard (whose picture we regret we have not received with that of the church) and his sacrificing people on their splendid accomplishment. They gratefully acknowledge the large part that our lamented Brother A. C. Hendrickson had in their building operations and the unselfish way he gave himself to their cause. They were saved a considerable sum through his services. Dr. L. S. Bauman, of the First church, was very properly the principal speaker on the day of dedication, thought we notice by the program that was sent us that the pastors of the other churches of that district were present to lend their help and encouragement on the occasion.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us a good report of the recent meeting of the College Trustees. Rev. George T. Ronk was elected to the presidency of the Board, a place made vacant by the death a few weeks ago of Brother E. L. Kilhefner. There was much enthusiasm manifested among the trustees over the very promising condition of the college, as revealed by the president's report, and steps were taken to still further brighten its future. The outstanding feature of the report is that concerning the enlargement and strengthening of the faculty to meet the requirements of standardizing agencies. A number of new professors, some with "Ph.D." degrees, are to be selected, and one new department is to be added to the curriculum. Some of these new teachers are to take the places of men on leave of absence while doing further school work, and others are additions to the faculty. These measures are going to mean much in the way of strengthening the influence and popularity of the college in Ashland city and the community surrounding, and more and more it is gaining support from the local constituency. All this will give the brotherhood still greater reasons to take pride in its own educational institution and at the same time will challenge it still more to come forward with the utmost of support, both in students and funds. Aside from the generous response which many have given to Dr. Bell's campaign, we will all be given the opportunity to do still more, according to the Board's plans, during Education Week in June.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

XXI. Elder J. M. Murray

By Martin Shively, D.D.

It seems scarcely possible that almost twelve years have gone by since this stalwart servant of God answered the summons to come from labor to reward, for to those of us who knew him and loved him, it seems little longer than last year, since we saw his smiling face, and heard his cheery voice at our general conferences, where he was always an enthusiastic booster for the church, to the interest of which he had given so many years of his life. If there was a choir on the platform, you might be sure of seeing him there, for he loved to sing, and his voice joined lustily in the singing of the hymns of the church. He had very positive convictions, but was never disposed to take violent issue with any who held opinions differing from his own, and conferences or congregations made up of folks of his type, would never be otherwise than feasts or havens of love. I am sure he must have had some temper, but well as I knew him, I never saw even the tiniest expression of is, so far as angry words or deeds were concerned. And in a man so overflowing with enthusiasm, such equanimity was and is, very unusual. But he was an unusual man, as my readers will agree when I tell them that for 57 years he lived in the community from which the Lord called him home, and that for 29 years he taught in the schools of that community, and that for 27 years he was pastor of the Brethren churches in his community, during which time he officiated at 1100 funerals, and 300 weddings, besides caring for a farm and holding many evangelistic meetings many of which were wonderfully blessed to the salvation of men. I recall especially the evangelistic services at Lost Creek, Kentucky, where in the midst of physical surroundings not wholly unlike those amidst which he had lived so many of the years of his life, his love of the Word, his interest in the people, and the earnestness of his appeal to them, were so irresistible that scores turned to the Lord to whom he had pointed them. I have no information at hand as to even the probable number of people who had been brought into the church through his ministry, but I know that the number was very large, and thus, if the common interpretation of that scripture in the prophecies of Daniel, is justified, his crown is indeed a starry one. To have lived so long in one neighborhood, and to have been possessed of such convictions as his, and such an enthusiasm, would surely tend to develop some enmities, at least in ordinary folks; but so far as I know, he was exempt, and died leaving only friends to mourn his going. And he died as I think he would have chosen, if choice had been his, for he fell in the harness of service, passing without a moment's warning, as he was working on the lawn at his own home.

All except the first three years of the more than 60 years of his life, were spent in the hills of Green County, Pennsylvania, in or near the little town of Aleppo. Here I visited him several years before his death, to conduct a few meetings preparatory to a communion service which was to be held in his home church. I was a guest in his home, and did my best to climb the great hills with which that home was surrounded, but found he could do that far better than I, perhaps because he had been climbing them so long, and so many times. Practically all of my farm life was spent in a comparatively level country, and I expressed my wonder at his being able to farm in a country so rugged, but to him it was home, and he saw no difficulties, such as impressed me. And when he took me to Cameron on the morning following the communion service,—a service which had been somewhat hindered by a terrific downpour of rain, and when we were caught in another heavy downpour on the way to the station, and that on unpaved mountain roads which had become fearfully muddy, his unflinching good cheer did not fail to impress me, and for this and many other recollections of him, I shall always remember him as an outstanding apostle of joy. He was one of the finest examples of that type of preachers of the last century,—rendering a cheerful service in many fields not directly connected with their pulpits, thus making the finest possible contribution to the real welfare of their communities. They were business men, or teachers, or farmers and not a few of them were physicians, but no matter what they were, they were first of all Christians, and the whole-hearted service they rendered to their fellow men, left no room for doubt in the minds of any as to the matter. The modern preacher may know more about the fine points of scripture than did many of these, and in some instances at least, he may be a far more finished orator, but even the modern man might sit with profit at the feet of some of these men, where he could get some very helpful lessons on practical Christianity.

I cannot recall when I first met Brother Murray, but it must have been at some general conference, more than forty years ago. But I know that it seems that I have always known him, so immediate was the warm friendship which grew out of that first meeting. As I think of him now, he still appeals to me as having been one of the most unswervingly loyal followers of the Cross, that I have ever known, and no community can soon outlive the influence of such a man, if he has lived long in it. His good wife, Aunt Julia, still lives in the old home in Aleppo, Pennsylvania, ready to join him and the host of loved ones who live on the other side of the "mountain." Such as he, are like the righteous Abel, who, though being dead, yet live.

Neal Dow, Pioneer and Seer

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt.D., Director of Department of Education Anti-Saloon League of America

(The 125th anniversary of Gen. Neal Dow's birth was celebrated last month)

Neal Dow was the grandfather of national prohibition. He was more than a pioneer in the fight against one of the greatest social evils which threatened this nation. His contribution to the crusade was far greater than could be reckoned in terms of time or money. He put his life into this cause and so identified himself with it that one cannot think of the march of events which culminated in the ratification of the Constitutional Amendment without thereby paying tribute to the memory of Neal Dow. While others were discussing half measures, he kept his mind fixed upon the ultimate solution. He wrote boldly into the first drafts of the law which later was adopted by Maine as a pioneer in prohibition, not merely a ban upon spirituous liquors, but used the phrase "intoxicating liquor," as a definition, including not alone the whiskey and brandy against which many were then fighting, but the fermented beverages which were gradually coming into wide and dangerous use.

General Dow was one of the first to realize the economic significance of the prohibition of beverage intoxicants. In this he was far in advance of many of the temperance agitators of his own time. He recognized the moral questions involved, gave them their due emphasis, but forcefully and continuously dwelt upon the fact that the wealth and prosperity of the people of Maine depended largely if not wholly upon the banishment of intoxicating beverages. He was wont to make a point of the fact that the people of Maine "were consuming in strong drink the entire value of all the property of the State in every period of twenty years."

General Dow saw that involved with the economic well-being of the people were their health, their virtue and their morality. He fought against the liquor traffic not alone to make the people of his state wealthier, but to make them better.

Born in an epoch when the use of intoxicating beverages was assumed to be a necessity and when prohibition was only considered as applicable to Indian tribes, his prophetic vision foresaw the day when the flag would no longer protect that insidious enemy of American institutions. Dedicated from his earliest years to personal abstinence, he soon saw that the liquor problem was a social and not merely an individual question. While chief of the Volunteer Fire Department of Portland, Maine, he realized the difficulty in keeping men away from intoxicating beverages when their sale was licensed. In town meetings and in a debating society of which he was a member, he raised his voice in season and out of season against the evils inherent in the liquor traffic. He led the fight for local prohibition in Portland in 1839 which was lost by a few votes, and the splendidly successful battle of votes in 1843.

During the days of the Washington Movement and all through the forties of the last century, by "sowing the state knee-deep" in temperance literature, by petition after petition and by organized effort that brought increasingly definite results he became the herald of the new day of prohibition in American political life.

The fact that this state prohibition law was adopted by both branches of the legislature and signed by the Governor in three days from the time it was taken up in the legislature indicates the amount of public sentiment which supported this legislation.

This public sentiment had been stimulated by General Dow, who, from 1843 had been circulating petitions to the legislature, asking that the traffic in intoxicating beverages might be held and adjudged an infamous crime. In the intervening years General Dow had presented other petitions, one of which offered in July, 1846, was 59 feet long and had upon it 3,800 names, most of which had been obtained by the personal solicitation of General Dow. Other petitions secured largely through his influence brought the total signatures to over 40,000. Largely as the result of his leadership the license system was abolished by 1846 by vote of the legislature, although the penalties for violation were so light that the illicit traffic flourished widely.

The original Maine Act of 1846, while a marked advance over all previous legislation concerning beverage intoxicants, was really not a prohibition law, but merely a restricting measure. Its title was "An Act to Restrict the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors." It limited the sale of such beverages to licensed persons who could sell only for medicinal and mechanical purposes. Imported wines and spirituous liquors could be sold, however, in quantities of not less than 28 gallons which must be taken away at one time. The penalties imposed by this measure were a minimum fine of $1.00 and a maximum of $20 for the first offense, while second offenses were punished by minimum fines of $5 and maximum of $20. One person of "good moral character" could be licensed for every town having less than one thousand inhabitants and not less than three nor more than five for every town having more than three thousand inhabitants. This measure which made it practically mandatory for the selectmen, clerk and treasurer of each town, acting as a licensing board, to grant at least one license in every Maine city, can hardly be called a prohibition measure. The act was also weak in the absence of any search and seizure clause.

In spite of the weaknesses of the law of 1846, the liquor traffic virtually disappeared from many parts of the state and especially from the rural districts. It was because, however, of its very evident weaknesses that in 1849 an additional law was passed forbidding sale of liquors within two miles of cattle shows or fairs. In 1850, a search warrant provision was adopted by the legislature and vetoed by Governor Dana, who, in his veto message, declared: "Immediately on the announcement that I had withheld my signature from the bill, petitions signed by more than 3,000 persons were presented to me, urging its approval." In 1851, General Dow was elected Mayor of Portland on the prohibition issue, he was defeated in 1853 but was again elected in 1855 and was elected to the State Legislature in 1858. The true Maine law, adopted in 1851, was drafted by General Dow, who incorporated in the bill search and seizure provisions, provided stronger penalties and took the liquor traffic out of the class of legitimate business by providing that all payments or compensations for liquors sold in violations of the law should be null and void, and that no action was maintainable in any court in the state for the recovery or possession of intoxicating liquors or the value thereof. This radical legislation proposed and supported by General Dow hit the money nerve of the illicit traffic. That clause, probably, was more effective in causing the law to be observed than any other portion of the legislation.

That the Dow prohibition act of 1851 was effective was maintained by Horace Greeley who visited Maine in 1855 and wrote concerning it in the New York Tribune the following: "The pretense that as much liquor is sold now in Maine as in former years, is impudently false. We spent three days in traveling through the state without seeing a glass of liquor or an individual who appeared to be under its influence, and we were reliably assured that, at the Augusta House, where the Governor and most of the Legislature board, no liquor is to be had."

The Maine Law Party practically disbanded after the adoption of the Maine Prohibition Law. The question of slavery was becoming engrossing and many of those who had originally formed the Maine law party now joined with Whigs and Democrats in the organization of the Republican Party. As a natural result of the demobilization of the prohibition forces, the prohibitory law was repealed in 1855. Neal Dow, however, did not feel this repeal had any finality, and when he became a member of the state legislature in 1858 another prohibition law was adopted. He continued his educational work. Maine, for a season now, vacillated between various forms of license and regulation varying from the adoption of a state liquor agency measure to later adoptions of prohibition, which culminated in the prohibition amendment to the state constitution ratified by a popular vote in 1884.

While General Dow gave a splendid public service as Mayor of Portland and as a state legislator, it is probable that his larger service was rendered upon the platform. Not alone did he speak to record-breaking audiences throughout this nation but three times he toured Great Britain under the auspices of the United Kingdom Alliance, telling the story of the Maine Law, its general observance by the people and its successful enforcement, to those who were seeking to discover some practical method of dealing with a growing social evil.

The Civil War made a break for a brief period in Dow's activities in the prohibition campaign. He served as Colonel in the Thirteenth Maine Regiment and later as Brigadier General in command of the forts at the mouth of the Mississippi and later of the district of Florida. Wounded twice in the attack on Fort Hudson, in 1863, he was taken prisoner, spending eight months in Libby Prison and at Mobile. He was later exchanged for General Fitzhugh Lee.

At the close of the Civil War, Dow returned to the old campaign against the liquor traffic, stumping this nation and twice visiting Great Britain for lecturing tours.

In the estimate of the men and forces most influential in securing the ultimate adoption of the national prohibition amendment, General Neal Dow will probably be ranked with Dr. Benjamin Rush of Philadelphia and the Rev. Lyman Beecher. He supplied the third leg of the tripod upon which rests this great reform. Dr. Rush was the father of the scientific study of the effects of alcohol upon the human system. Others had casually referred to this phase of the alcohol problem but Dr. Rush gave it conscious direction. Dr. Lyman Beecher laid broad the foundations for the presentations of the social aspects of this problem. Others have developed his arguments or have readjusted them to the kaleidoscopic shifting conditions of our modern life, but Lyman Beecher's first formulation of the principles remains classic. General Neal Dow, possibly because of the intensity of the man, partly because of the commanding position he came to assume in the work of agitation, did more than any predecessor to direct the attention of the people to the economic arguments against any licensed sale of beverage intoxicants and to secure legislative action for its suppression. This service is all the greater since he advanced those arguments before modern industry had become so highly mechanized and before intensive competition had narrowed the profit margin to a point where the scale might be turned between profit and loss by a very small element. In reality, he was marking the dawn of a new age which few foresaw. The capital wasted through the consumption of intoxicants during Neal Dow's active period would not have been so highly significant a factor as the later drink bills, since investment opportunities and the constantly increasing demand for funds to finance large enterprises did not exist then as they do in this epoch. The economic loss was more largely personal or else confined in a large degree to the community wherein the drinker and his family resided. The principle, however, which was fundamental to General Dow's argument contains an eternal element of truth. The economic losses resulting from the consumption of intoxicants involves more than the comparative wealth or poverty of a neighborhood. We see today that money is merely an algebraic symbol by which we express manpower, comfort, service, opportunity, the march of progress and the development of civilization. We waste these when we waste those economic gains which are the fruit of labor.

There could be no better evidence of the fallacy which lies in Marc Antony's saying that "the evil which men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones" than the life of Neal Dow. Because of what General Neal Dow was and because of what he did in the face of obstacles that seemed almost insuperable and because of the remarkable service rendered by the hosts of Prohibition leaders who "followed in his train," we today live in a land from which has been banished beverage alcohol, where the trafficker in alcoholic beverages is a criminal and where doors of larger opportunity swing widely open to coming generations who will find it hard to understand the wilderness and the desert through which men like Neal Dow and his comrades led.

A Marked Faith

By Floyd Sibert

Text—When Jesus therefore saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee. But there were certain of the Scribes sitting there and reasoning in their hearts.—Mark 2:5, 6.

This little incident recorded by Mark was an actual occurrence in the life of Jesus. It is not an allegory, parable or a fairy tale, but was a real experience, an experience so vividly related that there is no mistaking the impetus of Divine purpose back of it. His experience has to do with one of the most tragic diseases of the day. In Matthew 3:6 we read of a centurion "grievously tormented"—always moving, never still, that is, PALSY. The woman's case in Luke 13:11, "a woman bowed together with a spirit of infirmity," may have been a case of palsy. Hence the disease with which he dealt was gruesome as well as tragic, for it partially or wholly paralyzes the nerve centers of the physical body. It was also a "grievous torment," for it gave the victim no rest from wandering about—like a lost spirit wandering in the vast ranges of eternal night.

But more grievous is the modern palsy of the soul that gathers in its victims like a "devil octopus" from eternity's sea. Oh, the tragedy of a mind afflicted with the "mental palsy"—a mind that, like the flickering rays of a moving light, is never settled, always changing; seeking, seeking yet never finding a fixed and definite hope for an anchor; doubting, doubting, yet never explaining how man could "evolve" without GOD, or where a mind can rest without a SAVIOR! So we have the whole parade of "mental devil dancers," spirits seeking to parade their skill by doing Satan's latest step—"the mental palsy hop" back of the pulpit and on the pages of religious periodicals. Christian Scientists and unchristian scientists, atheists, new thought promoters, modern religionists and all the rest who deny the saving power of Christ, are thus afflicted. Poor deluded souls! If their minds would stop long enough to think, they would see themselves, not as new thought promoters, but as doubting Thomases every one, simply because there is no riven side for them to feel. They seek a sign and no sign shall be given. They seek a religion without faith, and that sort of religion leads to hell. They seek without Christ for "that rest," mental as well as spiritual, and it shall not be found. For the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them for they are spiritually discerned." They reject the divinity of Christ, ignore the Holy Spirit and defy God because these seem foolishness unto them. They are marked for spiritual death and will be eternally separated from God unless they are saved by a FAITH that bears the mark of Christ's approval. Blessed is the man whose mind is stayed on Christ. And thrice blessed the church whose united faith is CHRIST-centered.

Next in line with a distorted palsied mind is a palsied heart. Palsy acts differently on the heart. Restlessness is supplanted by a stupor. The heart becomes calloused by sin. Its door hinges have become rusty, not having been opened to the Lord Jesus since the innocence of childhood. Its ears have become deaf, having been stuffed with the cotton of self-sufficiency. It has lost its natural affection. It has become a heart hungering after the shallow things of life, when it should be feeding on the deep things of God,—things that are rich and boundless. We read in 1 Corinthians 2:9, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." But a palsied heart does not love him. "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God." But a palsied heart does not open to the call of the Spirit. It therefore lacks revelation. They have eyes to see and see not, ears to hear and hear not. And this condition gives rise to all sorts of evils, even crimes of the most heinous sort. The Holy Spirit utters the warning signal, "Today if you will hear my voice, harden not your hearts." And in the face of the ghastly crimes of today we have need of hearing his voice, for with so many minds and hearts distorted from the natural purpose of God, the souls become withered and lifeless. A hardened heart does not hear. A deaf ear permits sin. And the soul that sinneth it shall die.

But whether the palsied man was afflicted in all these ways we know not, but this we know: he was a sinner afflicted with palsy. His cure was complete, physical and spiritual, and it was wrought alone by faith in Jesus. It was a faith marked by Divine approval. It is the faith that the church needs today. It was a faith that wrought a cure. But alas for the cures that are accomplished today, aside from those wrought by the schools of science. There is little faith to be found in the possibility of such cures. Such as are being effected are branded by modern skepticism as improbable or impossible and a work of the devil. Yet Jesus commands us to pray for the healing of the sick.

This man was in no wise favored. It was the preached Word that gave him his opportunity. While Jesus was preaching in the midst of a crowded house he was determined to go unto him. But his path was filled with difficulties. He was sick, he was helpless, he couldn't walk, but he would go. Every wishboned, excuse-loving sinner that hides behind the shield of moral cowardice should read of this man and blush with humble contrition. Helpless and without opportunity he sought opportunity and the help that was available. Jesus said, "Seek and ye shall find." This man sought Jesus and found him. He was not forced to believe but he came believing. He just took Jesus at his word, "Whosoever cometh unto me in faith believing, I will in no wise cast out" and Jesus did not fail him. Jesus never fails. And when that cot was lowered in his presence he looked first at the pale disease-marked face of the sufferer, then up at the helpers on the roof and he marked their faith, or saw it. Would that he might see more like it today.

Jesus didn't see their works, moral polish, social prominence, physical beauty or personality. But it was their faith which he saw, and which saved the sufferer. It was a united faith and a united faith always produces results. A united faith gave the early church perseverance and spiritual, soul-saving power that produced a revival with three thousand converts. Theirs was an undefeated faith, for when they could not come unto him for the press of the crowd, they removed the tile from the roof to come into his presence. There were objectors, scoffers and mockers but it was a victorious faith. The blind, palsied-minded Scribes reasoned in their hearts, for they durst not say it, "Who can forgive sin but God?" But Jesus said with authority, "Thy sins be forgiven thee" and when he perceived their (the Scribes') reasoning, he added, "But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he said to the sick of the palsy) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed . . . And he arose . . . and went forth." This proved the power of Christ on earth in conjunction with a faith marked by Divine approval. Notwithstanding the "reasoning" of the Scribes, there was a united, undefeated, victorious faith that Christ could honor. There was a vital belief "That he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. A seeking faith will cure a palsied body, mind or heart."

RELIGIONS OF THE CABINET

All the members of Mr. Hoover's cabinet are churchmen. Their church affiliations are as follows: Henry L. Stinson, Secretary of State, Presbyterian; Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, Presbyterian; James W. Good, Secretary of War, Presbyterian; William D. Mitchell, Attorney General, Presbyterian; Walter F. Brown, Postmaster General, Congregationalist; Charles Francis Adams, Secretary of the Navy, Unitarian; Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, Congregationalist; Arthur M. Hyde, Secretary of Agriculture, Methodist; Robert P. Lamont, Secretary of Commerce, Presbyterian; James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, Baptist. It is good to know that those who guide the nation are all churchmen and active in the work of their denomination as many of the cabinet members are.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

WISCONSIN JOINS NULLIFICATIONISTS

The referendum for the repeal of the state enforcement act in Wisconsin April 2 resulted in a majority for repeal of 132,105, out of a vote of 425,535. The majority against the manufacture of home brew was a few thousands less. The vote does not appear to have been a heavy one—about one in six of population as of 1920. Milwaukee rolled up a big vote for nullification. The fight now goes to the legislature as to whether it will vote the repeal. The chances are that it will. Of course those favoring prohibition regret that another state has joined the nullificationists, making enforcement in that state more difficult. President Hoover has made it plain that he does not regard that way of dealing with prohibition as very loyal.—The Presbyterian Advance.

TO TIGHTEN PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

The Hoover administration is said to be moving to tighten up Prohibition law enforcement throughout the country. The president has insisted that there shall be no dramatics connected with the enforcement program, but everything is proceeding quietly and consequently is expected to be the most effective and far-reaching of any effort since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. The drive is directed in its initial force against United States district attorneys whose record in the prosecution of liquor cases has not been good, who have shown lack of zeal for their work and lack of sympathy for Prohibition. These delinquent officials are being allowed to resign, and new ones are to be appointed who are both aggressive in their activities and in full sympathy with the purposes of the law. Moreover it is the purpose to ask the special session of Congress for legislation to carry out at once the president's recommendation, made in his inaugural address, to transfer the Prohibition unit from the Treasury to the Department of Justice, where it logically belongs and where William D. Mitchell as its head is expected to prove worthy of the country's faith in his ability and efficiency.

CHURCH WINNING RECOGNITION OF RELIGION IN SCHOOLS

After a quarter-century of endeavor, members of the Religious Education Association of America assembled in Des Moines, were assured by Dr. William Adams Brown of Union Theological Seminary, the president, that, instead of speaking about religion and education as two separate and competing interests, the conjunction could now be abolished and religious education be spoken of as an ideal realized.

Unmistakable signs of the growing recognition of character education as a community responsibility were seen by Dr. Raymond A. Kent, dean of Northwestern University. He explained that the modern movements in education were forming new problems, among them the change in concept of educational work from the individual alone to his relationship to society. At present he sees sharp disagreement as to whether the child shall be controlled by the forces within, or the social forces without, or "what kind of treaty can be made between them."

Dean Kent presented evidence of a pronounced "demand that public education, through its regularly established institutions, shall assume a definite responsibility for character education," and predicted the churches will soon find character education cared for by the secular educational institutions.

We hope for the sake of the youth of the land that such is the case. Only we do not want Christianity presented as "hypothesis," or "theory," or "problem," but as a certified demand on life; and it must be presented by men who themselves are Christians.—The Christian-Evangelist.

THE CROSS IN CITY STREETS

The use of the cross for other purposes than as a symbol of religion is questionable. It has been placed on the highways of the State of Ohio to mark places where people have been accidentally killed. This use may have its sentiment, but we question the wisdom of it from the religious point of view. Now we learn that some of our cities have decided to paint a cross on the street to mark the place where accidents have occurred, over which passes the traffic of the city. Why is this not a degradation of the most sacred symbol of our religious faith? Why is this not a violation of religious taste and an offense to our religious sentiments? Surely, such a place on the highways can be designated by something else. Why not use a skull and crossbones, in order to alarm and shock people with the fact that the shadow of death has fallen across that place in the highway? The time is coming when we must stand in protection of the sacred associations and sentiments represented by the Christian forces.—Western Christian Advocate.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

His Own People—Ezek. 9. The Lord knoweth his own people, and they bear his mark upon their foreheads. He has promised to keep his people, and is ever mindful of his own. Exceeding precious are his promises to them (Ezek. 11:17-20). Those who choose not to be known as his people or to bear his mark upon them, bear the mark of another master. May we, O Father, bear thy stamp so plainly that all men may know the Master whom we serve, and through us may learn to love and serve thee, too.

TUESDAY

Coals of Fire—Ezek. 10:1-7. A symbol of God's treatment of his enemies. In Rom. 12:20, Paul instructs us to feed our enemy when he hungers, and give him drink when he thirsts; in so doing, we shall heap coals of fire on his head. This is exactly what God has done for us all: when we were lost, without hope and without God in the world, he sent his Son to be unto us the Living Bread and the Water of Life. And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all!

WEDNESDAY

Where is the Promise?—Ezek. 11:1-12. In those days there were some who said of God's judgments: "It is not near." They failed to see the approaching storm, but it fell nevertheless, according to God's Word. Today we hear the same cry, even as it was foretold: "Where is the promise of his coming?" We grieve for the judgments that must first come to pass, and should be spurred to renewed activity by them; but we may be sure that he IS coming. May we, O God, be true to our privilege in this matter!

THURSDAY

Moving—Ezek. 12:1-16. Ezekiel here illustrated the way in which the children of Israel, taken by the enemy, should be compelled to leave their homes, taking with them only that which they could carry away. It is well to remember that this is not OUR permanent home, and that sooner or later all must move to another land, and other conditions. We thank thee, Father, that thou hast prepared a place for us, and hast provided a way of escape from our dread enemy. Help us, likewise, to prepare for the true life which is to come. Amen.

FRIDAY

"Modernists"—Ezek. 13:1-16. Often today we hear the cry: "Modernist!" Often the cry is without excuse; but even when it is justified, the terms is a mis-nomer: there is nothing modern about it. From the beginning there have been false prophets, leading the people in wrong paths. We have been cautioned many times that we be not deceived, and that we prove all things, holding fast only to that which is good. How grateful we should be for a Savior who has warned us of every danger!

SATURDAY

Useless Prayers—Ezek. 14:1-5; especially v. 3. The elders of Israel came to Ezekiel, to inquire concerning God's will. "Why should they ask anything at all of me?" was God's answer. The reason: these men were open stumbling blocks, in their hearts worshipping idols; hence, they could not possibly be true worshippers of God (Matt. 6:24). "If I regard iniquity in my heart," says the Psalmist, "the Lord will not hear me." May we allow nothing to come between us and God, and make our prayers of no avail!

SUNDAY

Redeeming the Time—Ezek. 14:12-14; read also Eph. 5. God reveals a time when the hearts of men will be so hardened in sin that it would be impossible for even such righteous men as Noah, Daniel, or Job, to win one soul for Christ. That time has not yet come, but we are told that we should be earnestly redeeming the time because the days are evil. On this, thy day, O Father, may each one be found busily engaged in worship and in service for thee, redeeming the time. Amen.—T. C. L.

After Mother and Daughter Week--What?

Suggestions for a Through-the-Year Program in following-up Mother and Daughter Week

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Too frequently in the past Mother and Daughter week has been used as an end in itself. If its influence is to reach out through the year in a vital way it should stimulate a desire on the part of mothers and daughters to pursue a study of the conditions that will make their relationship grow in beauty, harmony, and dignity, and to share in activities that will strengthen understanding.

A mother-and-daughter relationship is not a matter that concerns just two people. It concerns every other member of the family—fathers, brothers and sisters, grandparents, and any other relatives that may live within its precincts. It is not a single clear-cut problem that can be solved by sweeping generalizations or smooth sentimentalities. Each relationship involves such factors as the size of the family, the family income, the disposition of each member, family methods of discipline, ideals and standards, etc.

For that reason it is suggested (1) that mother-and-daughter activities be scheduled periodically throughout the year, and not just for one day or one week; (2) that mothers meet separately to study and discuss girl problems and how to meet them; (3) that daughters participate in discussions that will clarify puzzling and controversial family issues; (4) that mothers and daughters join in discussing questions of mutual interest and concern; and (5) that situations be provided for testing these standards practically. The following suggested activities have been prepared with these purposes in mind.

Suggested Activities

Activities for Daughters

1. Play "mother" in the home one day during the week. That would mean responsibility for the little ones, planning of menus, marketing, washing dishes, tidying the house, and acting as hostess to any guest or callers.

2. "Through the Looking Glass." An honest attempt to discover what you are contributing to happiness of home life. How would you rate yourself on the following?

Helping wash and wipe dishes? Getting supper? Making bed? Mending clothes? Getting up on time in the morning? Keeping room tidy? Taking care of younger brothers and sisters? Cleaning house on Saturday? Playing games with children of the family? Helping younger members with lessons? Keeping within an allowance? Not sulking or quarreling if things don't go exactly as you want them to?

3. Study with the rest of the girls in the class "What Federal and State Laws Do for Mothers." Or, "The Economic Questions of the Mother Today."

4. Put on a Mother and Daughter Week.

5. Hold a reception or tea for mothers and teachers.

6. Hold discussions on the following subjects:

What is a home? The family pocket-book? What is a "democratic" family? Dare I tell mother? Family friendships.

Activities for Mothers

1. Hold group meetings with other mothers, either inviting a speaker or holding discussions on such themes as:

How can I better understand my daughter?

How does a girl of 1929 differ from the girls of 1895?

What problem does a modern girl face that her mother did not have to face?

Life situations and how to meet them. (Problems involving discipline, church-going, lack of respect, etc.)

Where group meetings are impracticable, a reading list (compiled if possible by your public library) might be given to mothers with the suggestion that each mother read at least one book.

2. Discussions on same subjects mentioned above for girls.

Joint Activities for Mothers and Daughters

1. Ceremonials.

2. Vesper services.

3. Discussions on subjects of mutual interest.

4. Banquets, teas, parties.

5. Theater party.

6. Service projects—

Missionary baskets; bazaars; church supplies; Thanksgiving baskets; circle entertainments.

NOTE: It is suggested that these discussions precede the Mother and Daughter banquet and that the talks given at that time be the results of the findings girls have made with regard to ideal home life. If time does not permit this, it is suggested that discussions follow the banquet.

Suggested Discussion Topics

What Is a Home?

The following will aid in the discussion of this topic by any group.

1. Ask the girls in the group to shut their eyes. Say the word "home." Let the girls describe the picture that flashed through their minds at the mention of that word.

2. Define "home." Is it a building? A group of people? A room? A tent? A hut? Could it be any of these?

Here are some definitions of a home. Which most nearly approaches your ideal of what a home should be?

"Home is the place you can always come back to and know you have to be taken in."

"For something that abode endured

With temple-like repose; an air

Of life's kind purpose pursued

With ordered freedom, sweet and fair;

A tent, pitched in a world not right

It seemed, whose inmates, everyone

On tranquil faces bore the light

Of duties beautifully done."

"Wish to all

Flowers in the garden, meat in the hall,

A bin of fruit, a spice of wit,

A house with lawns enclosing it,

A luring river by the door,

A nightingale in the sycamore."

—(Adapted).

"Any relationship which, for the people involved, comes as near as humanly possible to providing everybody in it with the best background for her healthful growth and activity."

3. If you were about to be married what would be your idea of an ideal home?

Do you think your mother and father had similar ideals when they started out?

Have those ideals been fulfilled? If not, what has happened to prevent their realization?

If you returned home tonight to find your house and family had been destroyed by fire, what would go out of your life?

Could any of this be replaced? How?

In Europe some educators are advocating state homes for all children where they will be educated and trained without parental supervision or interference.

What do you think of such a plan? What advantages would it have? What disadvantages?

What are the essentials of a happy home? List fifteen to twenty real homes.

4. It will be interesting to see if the girls include the following: intimate companionship; privacy; understanding; freedom; affection; room for growth; respect for personality; democracy.

Whose responsibility is it to put these things into the home, parents or the children?

Which of these essentials should we consider next time in detail?

The Family Pocketbook

Group Discussion Questions

Some high school girls were discussing the thrill of being seniors and the prospect of graduation.

"If it only didn't cost so much," one of them sighed wistfully. "I had to borrow another $5.00 for my annual dues. That, with the $7.00 for class ring, $4.00 for Seniors' banquet, makes $16.00 over my allowance for this month."

"Yes, if that were only all," said another. "But then there's the crepe de chine dress, silk stockings, new shoes, and accessories for graduation. Mother says she is going to have to dress me and the whole family in gunnysack, if I ask for another single penny."

Have you been in a similar situation? How many girls in this group are on an allowance? How much does this allowance cover—recreation, books, school affairs, clothes or what? Should a high school girl have an allowance? Should she get all she can from her folks? Should she earn her own money? What are the advantages and disadvantages of each plan?

Is the amount of money you have to spend a fair portion of family income? If you overstep your allowance, who has to go without? In other words, who gets "left" when the money won't go all the way around?

If there is not enough money to dress both a high school girl and her mother well, which should have preference and why?

How far are the needs or desires of the other members of the family considered when we need a new dress for some occasion? If mother or older sister is willing to go without for the benefit of a younger girl, does that settle the question?

Does a modern girl expect too much money from her parents?

What conditions in a home should determine the amount a school girl should have to spend?

What Is a Democratic Family?

Group Discussion Questions

1. Who makes up your mind for you in your home?

2. In some European countries it is still customary for fathers to exact strict obedience from children even after they are married. What is your opinion of such discipline? Do you think parents are justified in expecting unquestionable obedience? Under what conditions? For how long? How far can a home be run without discipline? What are the advantages of an authoritative head? Disadvantages?

3. How far should judgment and experience influence home discipline?

4. When is a girl old enough to think for herself? To take care of herself?

5. As long as a girl is part of a family, fed, dressed and clothed by her parents, is she obligated to respect their wishes? How far has she a right to independence of action and of thought?

Printed Text—2 Chron. 34:14-16, 29-33.

Devotional Reading—Rom. 15:1-7.

"Historical Background

Josiah, the subject of our present study, came to the throne at the age of eight, about 639 B. C., and reigned until 608 B. C., just twenty years before the destruction of Jerusalem.

You will recall that Hezekiah's reign, for the most part, was a good one. He made blunders, for which he was corrected by Isaiah. But his influence was good in general.

Manasseh's reign, however, was characterized by all kinds of idolatry and sacrilege, and by subjection to foreign powers.

Amon, his son, was worse than his father, if that were possible. After two years on the throne, he was slain by his court officials, who in turn were put to death by the people. The boy, Josiah, was then put upon the throne.

Hilkiah was the high priest at the time. He was unusually sympathetic with the prophetic viewpoint, considering the kind of priests who were so often in power. He no doubt had a great influence on the boy king, which partially accounted for Josiah's character. The prophets Jeremiah and Zephaniah were also contemporary with Josiah.

During the reign of Josiah the world power passed from Assyria to Babylon. The transition gave Judah a measure of temporary independence. Egypt thought she would take advantage of the disorganization in the east, and began a march through Palestine. Josiah opposed her march, and was slain in battle.—Q. M. Lyon in Bible Class Quarterly.

The Bible in Our Lives

In a powerful chapter Pro. Austin Phelps once showed what would be the result if the Bible were lost to the world. We should lose our knowledge of the true God and become as degraded as the worst savages. All our institutions of benevolence would pass away—our hospitals, asylums, charities, homes for the aged and for little children. All our public schools would go, our libraries, our free press, our post-offices, art museums, telegraphs and telephones, a thousand conveniences and comforts of our daily lives. Civil liberty would go, and the institutions of freedom; our democratic legislatures, our just courts. Honorable marriage would cease, homes would become unholy. Women would become degraded, children would be freely slain, pestilence would rage unchecked, cannibalism would live again, war would be the chronic condition of society, hatred and terror and the most wretched poverty and misery would be the lot of every human being. That is only a feeble picture of what the continued influence of the Bible means to mankind.

And what the loss of the Bible would mean to the world, that, in all the most hopeless and eternal aspects of the matter, is the result of the loss of the Bible in individual lives.

Can we do less than honor the Book of books, cherish it, and seek ever to know it better and obey it more perfectly?—Illustrated Quarterly.

A Chinese Student's Appreciation

A letter written to a missionary after receiving from him the gift of a New Testament through "The Million Testaments for China Campaign" reads as follows:

"I like to study the Bible you presented to me lately, so much better than all my other books. It is diverting and beneficial to me. I read it daily and find much comfort in it. I spend an hour and three quarters every day reading the New Testament. Often my friends and I read it together. I feel that the Word of God is more necessary than tea or food for my people. For it not only takes away my faults, but it also saves my soul in death. Of all that is in the world, there is nothing that can be compared to the Holy Word. It is the only medicine for my people. When one reads the strange things that Jesus did, one is moved to worship the only Son of the true God, my Lord Jesus. It teaches me how to pray, to live, to be good, and to love others. I hope and pray that you may be able to present many of these Wonderful Books to my brothers and sisters, who need just such a good Book.—Di Yu Swei.

Finding the Bible

Finding the Bible by seeking the truth there, loving and obeying it, is like lighting up the dark wires of an electric light or the black iron of a gas-pipe. It is like the clearing away of a fog, or like a near-sighted boy putting on spectacles, enabling him for the first time to see the beautiful prospects that have always been around him, but unseen by him.

There are many ways of finding the Bible, of finding more in it than a hasty reading can give. To these we can barely refer.

1. "The sweet compulsion of its unique literary charm, and its spiritual grace.

which gives access to the Garden in which they can walk and talk with God."

Note the variety of literary forms in our Bible—history, story, biography, autobiography, arguments, orations, sermons, conversations, poetry in lyric, dramatic, idyllic, and epic forms, hymns, songs, epistles, parables, proverbs, fables, enigmas, metaphors, hyperboles, epigrams. These, written by all classes and conditions of men, are adapted to all conditions and ages, to all classes of mind, all degrees of culture.

2. Keeping ever in mind the movement of the history, so that every statement of truth, or fact, or morals, shall be seen in its own environment.

3. A clear vision of the geography of the Bible, and especially of Palestine and of the travels of Paul. Always, if possible, compared with the modern names.

4. We understand the Bible most perfectly when we are trying to put it in practice, and when we use it as a guide book.

5. On some parts of the Bible we receive no little light from the monuments discovered and the tablets, etc., found in the ruins of Nineveh, Babylonia, and other places.

6. Dwelling long and steadily on certain portions of the Bible will usually bring new views and visions.

It is mining deep and finding treasures which we had walked over again and again, unconscious of what was beneath the surface.

"Almighty and most merciful God, who hast sent this book to be the revelation of thy great love to man, and of thy power and will to save him, grant that our study of it may not have been in vain by the callousness or carelessness of our hearts, but that by it we may be confirmed in penitence, lifted to hope, made strong for service, and above all, filled with the true knowledge of thee and of thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen."—George Adam Smith.

Christian Endeavor, Its Work and Its Needs

Endeavorers have a work to do in the church, that has no limits and is incomparable to the work of any other organization. Christians who have been permeated with Christian Endeavor work are stauncher, steadier and better equipped to be leaders in the church. Today our public schools are teaching the children to speak in public through the public speaking taught in the English course. Christian Endeavor does for the youth just what public speaking does in teaching them to be public speakers. Endeavor work teaches us the spiritual side of address work where as the school teaches us the material value. Endeavor work teaches us to pray and enriches our Christian experience so that it serves as a spur all through life. Endeavorers need the support of all Christians. You older Christians can give us advice and help us stop the leaks in our dyke, caused by our impetuosity and inexperience. With this help from the older church members the society may be able to enlist all of the youth in the church and in the community.

Enough has been said concerning help from outside but what are we members going to do? Be present every Sunday evening at the regular prayer meetings and not only give our presence but all of our talents to make the meetings successful. Your cooperation is earnestly solicited by the C. E. cabinet in all of its plans for the year 1929. Shoulder your responsibilities and help complete the Bridge of Christ.—George J. MacDonald, in "The Spirit of Christian Endeavor."

THE STRENGTH OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

The other day I read where a number of workmen who were demolishing a building were injured, because some of the foundation of the structure had been removed before the upper part was all demolished. A building is always safe, granting that it has a properly planned and constructed foundation, so long as that foundation is kept intact. Just so Christian Endeavor is safe and will continue to prove trustworthy so long as its foundation principles are kept intact. These are four in number and may be expressed in these words: Loyalty to Christ; "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength." Keep trusting. Loyalty to Christian Ideals. "Will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible every day." Maintain your Daily Devotions. Loyalty to the Church; "To support My own church in every way, etc." Do not slight the Bride of Christ. Loyalty to the organization; "Be present at every Christian Endeavor prayer meeting." Who cannot be loyal to the earthly symbol of a heavenly relation will scarce be loyal to the great head of the Church. Be faithful in your attendance at and participation in the meetings of the Society. This is but an interpretation of the C. E. Pledge, which is the foundation of the movement, and has for its purpose "that just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to live a Christian life." This is the superstructure which we may hope to build upon this foundation.

Glimpse of the War Situation in Africa

Yalohe, Feb. 12, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

By the mail of February tenth we received the first letters and papers since the knowledge of the war situation reached you. Perceiving that the cable sent left much in your minds to be desired in the way of information, I have thought that it might be wise to "set in order" for you a brief glimpse of the revolt against the government up to this time.

Briefly the movement is spiritistic, that is to say, demon led, the chief sorcerer, Yarenou, now slain by the government with his associates dispensing a "medicine", which is in reality but little more than a stick, which he had blessed (?) or cursed, and which supposedly had power to protect them from government guns. Thus given a false encouragement toward success, they were inspired to revolt against French rule, and to an effort to re-establish their pagan government. The movement spread, as do most demon led movements, with incredible rapidity, as Satan exerts no opposition to his own supernatural forces.

How long the movement smoldered in the hearts and minds of paramount sorcerers and leading chiefs before it burst forth into flame, we can but conjecture. Suffice it to say, that the actual revolt first commenced in Carnot and Baboua in the Moyen Congo, and spread with incredible rapidity, as I have said, into Oubangui Chari. While at Leopoldville, attending the United Conferences, I heard of the uprising near Carnot, but supposed it would be quickly quelled, as such uprisings usually are, by the government.

I left Leopoldville by the Steamboat Djah, October 9th, arriving at Bangui, October 19th, expecting according to arrangement to be met by Mr. Jobson and Mr. Kennedy with the Mission car and truck. Neither were there, but instead letters from Bassai and Yalohe, telling me of the serious nature of the uprising, which had already enveloped Yalohe, and which it was feared would spread to the Karre tribe. Bassai had been requested to have guards and the Captain at Bouzoum had spoken of the possible necessity of removing the missionaries to Bozoum for protection. The rebellion, happily, did not, however, spread to the Karre. The roads also were inundated, and the cars broken. As though this were not dark enough a picture, both the nurses, Miss Tyson at Yalohe and Miss Myers at Bassai, were seriously ill.

I immediately sent Joseph Nguede, who was traveling with me, to Mr. Leytill for a hired automobile and to ascertain whether he could lodge me for a night or so. Saturday, October 20th was spent in transacting necessary business. Ngo, Tigara, and Boua arrived with the tepoi and a "chop" box, necessities for the trip which the missionaries knew were lacking. Also eighty-seven porters had been sent by request from Boali, (as porters were unobtainable at Yalohe) to carry the heavy shipment of freight, etc., that I was bringing from Brazzaville, the missionaries saying they feared however that I could not get through with them, as the natives were threatening to destroy property and were on the very verge of destroying the bridges. In endeavoring to give a bird's-eye view of the situation I cannot take time to more than mention the marvelous faithfulness of our God in supplying funds, strength, conveyances, and all that was needed in Bangui for the heavy and unexpected task of despatching this large shipment, part of which it had not been possible to take through customs at Brazzaville, and for my own leaving of Bangui by hired conveyance, Sunday, October 21st, hoping if possible to reach Yalohe before the bridges should be destroyed. Boali was reached in safety, and here in spite of my plea, I was refused permission to proceed. After two days of waiting and prayer, I was finally granted this permission on condition of exonerating the government official from all blame in case of (as he viewed it to be) my almost certain death or injury. Leaving Boali the same afternoon by the same hired automobile, which I had kept at considerable expense, I was again stopped at Iremou by Lieutenant Boutin, then in command at that point, and forbidden to proceed further. The administrator from Boali, having accompanied me thus far, returned by the same automobile that night. I had been obliged to leave much of my personal equipment behind me at Boali, as well as all of the freight, the porters having arrived, been paid, and sent to their homes a few hours before my departure. This circumstance, too, was another of God's providences.

During the week which followed, Lieutenant Boutin disclosed to me much information which I felt it wise to share with the members of our Board and others at home, especially as I was shut off, for I knew not how long from communication, with the other missionaries. Of course letters were written and despatched, but more and more I felt it would be wise to cable also, especially as Lieutenant Boutin had been ordered to proceed to Yalohe mission station and occupy it for a period of three months. The missionaries were to be ordered to leave during the occupation, as the battles were expected to take place at Yalohe which Lieutenant Boutin proposed to fortify for the purpose, these being the orders of Governor Lamblen of Oubangui Chari, who visited Iremou during the week.

But how was I to send a cable? I did not think it wise to divulge military information by sending it in French through the Bangui Post-Office, and I did not have, of course, the Mission Code-book with me. I therefore hit upon the expedient of sending it to Mr. Ross, the Secretary of the Congo Protestant Council at Leopoldville, Congo Belge, and asking him to put it in code, and forward it to Mr. Bauman. But Mr. Ross, not knowing but what Mr. Bauman's code differed from his, sent it in English. To me, at that time, the speedy return of Mr. Hathaway to the field, seemed a necessity, and in view of the fact that there are eight women and three children upon the field, with only four men, the coming forth of available men candidates seemed also distinctly advisable.

For a different reason which will later be explained this still seems advisable.

I have been asked whether the word reconstruction in the cable means reconstruction of the station or of the government. I had not thought of the possibility of the second interpretation.

But now this is what actually happened. Before Lieutenant Boutin's arrival at Yalohe, Captain Pouffouloux from Bozoum, hearing of Yalohe's need hastened to its rescue, and established occupation without evacuation, Lieutenant Boutin arriving a week later, finding that the Captain had done this in providential ignorance of the governor's orders, permitted it so to remain. The circumstance of the officers having the use of the large unfinished brick house, thus leaving the missionaries in possession of their mud homes, was another Providence.

Being expected to remain three months at Iremou, I ordered supplies from Bangui, finding I could not communicate with Yalohe nor purchase food from the natives, as all native foods were required for the native soldiers in the camp, and for their wives who accompanied them.

Receiving permission to teach, I decided to open an outschool at Iremou, meanwhile conducting services daily in the little chapel there. On Sunday, November fourth, having received my permission on Saturday night, I announced to the little group of interested auditors my intention to open a school on Monday. This announcement was joyously received. What then was my surprise to have Sergeant de Meritans who was aiding Lieutenant Boutin at Yalohe, come to escort me thither, bringing for that purpose the "push" belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Foster, he himself with his soldiers accompanying me. For when the Captain arrived at Yalohe, the natives all fled, and hence there were no battles there, but in the jungle in which they had taken refuge. There was to be evidently no destruction of property and no reason why the missionaries could not remain throughout the occupation, therefore Lieutenant Boutin decided to send for me also. Of the experiences of the missionaries at Ya-

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

HAMLIN, KANSAS

This is a small village about six miles from Morrill. We have a good church building and a fine group of members. Brother Schaffer is serving his first pastorate here and is making good. Both he and his wife are Ashland college graduates and deeply interested in the school.

While the membership here is small and the field is limited, I found a well organized work along all lines. The people have a keen interest in the general work of the church.

I enjoyed my work in Hamlin and was glad for the opportunity of getting better acquainted with Brother Schaffer and his people. With their own local financial problems I think they responded well to the endowment. The total gift was $1,665.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Board Meeting:

The Annual meeting of the College Board was held here last Tuesday, April 16. The following members were present: Brethren Teeter, Clapper, Bell, Zercher, Ashman, Ronk, Eglin, Benschoff, Switzer, Miller, Kem, Flickinger, Carpenter, and George Hildebrand, of Ashland.

Mr. George T. Ronk was elected president; Mr. Kem, vice president and Dr. R. R. Teeter, secretary. Prudential committee, Brothers Teeter, Zercher and Kem. Finance and Investments, Messrs. Balch, Clapper, and Kem.

Many points of business were taken up, the chief ones being as follows:

The Board voted to urge the observance of Educational Week, June 2 to 9. They did this because of the great urgency of the need this year. Most of the readers of this paper already know that our endowment resources include what is called Living Endowment, which is the capitalization of gifts from the church, approved and authorized by National Conference. That is to say, that every gift given that way counts as five per cent interest on so much endowment. In other words, every dollar given is multiplied by 20 and counted as endowment. Thus, $1,000.00 in gifts counts as $20,000.00 in endowment. You will hear more of this through the Evangelist.

Also voted to approve of the calling of several new teachers. This was done to meet the requirements of certain standardizing agencies. A new Department of Economics and Sociology was established. A new man is to be called. A friend is paying the expense of this department.

A new man in Education, holding the Doctor's degree.

A woman in Education, with the Master's degree.

A woman in History with the Doctor's degree, filling for Professor Mason. May continue after he returns.

A man with the Doctor's degree to supply in Chemistry while Professor Puterbaugh is in residence at Northwestern, where he has an appointment for a year.

In all likelihood, there will be resources outside the budget to pay the expense of one of the teachers in Education.

The teachers in the Seminary will have their work wholly within that department and not in the Arts college in the future. This is good news to all concerned. Thus the Seminary came in for improvement. Next year, if nothing prevents, the Seminary will receive special attention.

We are re-writing the catalogue and re-organizing the whole institution. Dean Anspach came home from the University of Michigan for this purpose. It is a big task.

At least one new recitation room must be fitted up.

All Saturday work will be on the regular weekly basis.

No teacher will teach in any department whatsoever than the one for which his graduate work prepared him.

In several departments there will be more than one teacher, viz., English, Education, Divinity, and History.

Dr. Bell, while he was at home, visited 44 nearby high schools, taking with him a musician or two, and an athlete. These gave a program before the students. We called it a "good will tour." We were cordially received and I hope the tours did good.

Dr. Bell is now in Kansas or Nebraska, where he returned immediately after the Board meeting to take up his work.

We all feel here that we are entering upon a new day. The local papers have widely announced our new plans. I believe it is sun-up at Ashland. And it is time that it should be.

Mr. Ira Wilcox of Pittsburgh, always loyal and interested in the College, is paying for some cement paving back of the new building. The work is about complete and it is a fine improvement.

There will be 43 A.B. graduates this June and 24 Two-year Education.

The Commencement speaker will be Dr. William Smyser, Dean of Ohio Wesleyan.

We will celebrate May Day, Saturday, May 25, with a ball game in the afternoon. The evening before, the Seniors will give the annual senior class play.

Summer school will begin Monday, June 10. There will be two five week terms of 30 days each. This will leave us out here in good time for National Conference.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH OF LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

During the past year or more the work at the Second Brethren church of Long Beach has been severely handicapped on account of lack of room, especially in connection with the Sunday school activities of the church. Our average attendance in Sunday school during the past year was 201. This entire school has been taken care of with an equipment of ten class rooms, which of course proved entirely inadequate, and this situation prevented us from endeavoring to reach more children with the Word of God.

For many months it has been on our minds that something had to be done to get larger quarters. Many weeks were spent in looking over the neighborhood hoping we might be able to find a better building sight where we could secure more ground. It was our plan if we were successful in this, to move the building we had, and put a basement under it. However we were unable to find a better location near here that would warrant us making a change. Therefore it was decided to remain here and utilize every foot of ground for building purposes.

After much prayer, investigation and thought, we decided the best move was to erect an entirely new church, as the present building did not warrant making any permanent improvements upon it. We then decided on account of lack of funds, to build in two units, the Sunday school unit first, and later, if the Lord tarries, a new church auditorium and basement over all the remaining ground.

The Lord was very gracious to us enabling us to secure the services of Elder Hendrickson, of Ontario, California. He being a contractor, drew up a set of plans for a building 75 feet long and approximately 42 feet wide, with a basement, and two floors above.

After the building plans were approved we proceeded to raise what money we could among ourselves, and with a White Gift Offering of about $800 from the First church, we found we had a little over two thousand dollars in cash with which to begin building operations.

About the end of December, last year, the steam shovel commenced the excavation work, and the construction work proceeded without interruption from that time forward, until now there stands a beautiful three story structure out here in North Long Beach, to the glory of God.

On March 24th, 2:30 P. M. in the presence of approximately 400 people, this new Sunday school building was dedicated to the Lord Jesus, who gave himself for us, and enabled us to complete the task we set out to accomplish. Dr. Bauman delivered a very powerful message, emphasizing the importance of the home work, of proclaiming the Gospel, and of bringing men and women to a saving knowledge of Christ Jesus.

In addition to this we enlarged the church auditorium by removing all the class rooms, this giving us the needed room for our church services. The large wooden posts were replaced by round iron ones. We now have an auditorium with a seating capacity of two hundred and fifty.

Our building operations has cost us approximately $10,000.00. On Dedication Day we raised $2,165.00. In raising money we have refrained from canvassing the neighborhood, nor did we resort to any commercial schemes in the church, but we have depended upon him, and his people to give.

We have taken up two notes totaling $5,000.00, and with the note of $2,500 which we had to assume when we organized about two years ago, making our present total indebtedness amount to $7,500.00.

At present we have a membership of 130. The past two Sundays our Sunday school attendance averaged 333, and we are hoping to reach the 400 mark in a few weeks. Professor Paul T. Lichti, General Sunday School Superintendent, and Sister H. A.

Kirby, Primary Superintendent, are both doing very effective work.

One very sad occurrence must be mentioned in connection with all that has been said, and that is regarding Brother Hendrickson. His entire heart and soul was in the work. He aimed at making no profit at all from the building, saying he felt it was of the Lord and that he wanted to do all he could to help the work along. He certainly made good his claim. However, as the work was drawing to a close this man of God was suddenly stricken, without any warning, and was for a considerable time unable to do any work. Our dedication program was incomplete without him. And since that event he has passed on to his reward. We sympathize with Sister Hendrickson in her sorrow, and it is our prayer that God may strengthen her in this hour of trial. We know that when the books are opened up yonder, our brother shall receive his reward from him who is mindful of every act and deed.

We have much to be thankful for in the cooperation on the part of the members during the building of this new addition. The labor that was donated by the various ones totaled over $1,000.00.

We covet the prayers of the other churches that we may ever remain in the center of his will, and that this church may remain true and loyal to Christ and his word, until he shall come and call us to be with himself.

J. G. LIENHARD,

Pastor.

"A CALL FROM BRETHREN RETREAT"

Winter with its cold wind has gone again. Its ice and snow gave place to the singing birds and the sweet scented blossoms of spring. Each day we watch eagerly the unfolding buds, and each day brings us nearer the summer with its vacation time, and we wonder, "where we can most profitably spend the time." Perhaps if you are broad minded enough, you will let some one suggest an answer to your problem.

Why not make a visit to our "Brethren Retreat" at the beautiful little Shipshewana Lake, in Lagrange County, Indiana? The season opens on Decoration Day and closes on Labor Day. There will be Sunday school each Sunday at the large tabernacle. July 14th is the opening day of the training school for young people. July 21st is the opening day of the Bible conference. These together with several other special days of program during the summer have been prepared for the spiritual entertainment of those coming to the Retreat.

Boating, fishing, swimming, croquet and tennis, are provided for physical recreation

Then, financially we are sure you can be well cared for. If you care to do your own cooking and occupy a pleasant room at the lodge, just write for reservations and prices at once to Mrs. Nora Shively, Nappanee Indiana. Men wishing to remain at the S. M. M. Lodge must be accompanied by their wives. Groups of girls must be accompanied by a chaperon, and groups of boys, by a responsible man. Price each per night, 25 cents, each person bring sheets and pillow slips and towels. Other bedding and dishes are furnished. A number of reservations have already been made. Two weeks' notice must be given by all groups who wish the use of the Lodge.

Perhaps it will be news to you to hear that the new hotel has just been completed, and best of all, it is paid for. The store has been moved from the Lodge to the hotel building, and a competent caretaker secured. So, good meals and a good bed to rest in are assured and the price will be right.

Remember, this all is the property of the Indiana conference and if you are a member of the Brethren church you have an interest in it. The building is paid for, but there are a number of things needed in order to properly furnish it. Also a few things are needed to replace some of the things which have worn out at the Lodge. There are 13 bed rooms to furnish complete and every room will need about the following:

1 double bed, 1 bed spring, 1 mattress, 1 chiffrobe or dresser, 1 small table or stand, 1 or 2 chairs, 2 pillows 21x27, 2 comforts or heavy blankets, 1 spread, 4 sheets, 4 pillow cases, 1 window blind, 1 pair window curtains, 1 wash bowl and pitcher.

In order to offer good accommodations it has been thought wise to purchase new beds, springs and mattresses. It would be fine if 13 different organizations would each furnish a room. If you feel that is out of the question, how about curtains, comforts, spreads, or some money? Any amount of money from a quarter, a half dollar or a dollar to $1,000.00 can be carefully used.

The trustees and committees are all elected by our Indiana conference, and so are your representatives. The kitchen in the hotel will also need to be furnished with stoves and all that goes to furnish a kitchen. Some silverware and dishes are on hand.

We know you want to do your bit to help, especially our women who have never failed us yet. So, whatever you feel you can do, please notify C. G. Wolf, secretary of the Board of Trustees, North Liberty, Indiana, or one member of the following S. M. M. Lodge committee: Chairman, Nora Shively, Nappanee, Indiana; Mrs. C. L. Hepler, Goshen, Indiana; or Mrs. Myron Long, Brighton, Lagrange County, Indiana.

What you do is for our beloved Brethren church and not for any individual, so the committee thanks you very much in the name of the church.

Yours in his service,

MRS. C. L. HEPLER, Goshen, Indiana, for The S. M. M. Lodge Committee.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

The close of the regular school year has come again. It was one of the best closing times we have yet had. The last chapel service on Friday morning was very impressive. This chapel service is given over to special talks by the teachers, visitors, students, and others. There was a fine spirit of good will manifest at this service, as one of the teachers said in a talk, "The spirit of good will and cooperation has been very manifest." It was a splendid service.

There were three programs given during the last week of school. These programs reflected the thoroughness of the work done at Riverside Institute, and included the high school, the grades, music, and expression. The programs were splendidly given.

The attendance during the closing weeks of this school year has exceeded that of any in or of recent years at least. This was a very encouraging feature of the year, and means also that the demand for Riverside Institute has not lessened one bit. The weather for the week was fine, the crowds possibly the largest we have ever had, especially on commencement night, and the order just fair.

It was with a GREAT DEAL OF SATISFACTION that we could announce that there would be but very little change in the teaching force for next year. Brother and Sister Early have resigned, and are taking up the work at Limestone, Tennessee. One of the regular high school teachers, Miss Austin, may also not be back. The rest will all be back, some of whom have now been in the work about six years. This of course means greater efficiency for another year. A High School teacher with a college degree is now being sought. Dear reader, if you know of any such, will you please give us their name?

We believe that we have never closed a regular school year with so many asking for their places back next year. This has been true of the recent years at least. The attendance for next year now promises to be large.

Again this section has been visited with quite a disastrous flood. This came the week before our commencement week, and we feared that it would hurt things a good deal, but apparently did not, though there was considerable inconvenience. Two of the county steel bridges were washed out, almost completely bottling up this section for the time being. These waters were about three feet under the flood waters of two years ago, but did more damage with the bridges. This is making it hard on industrial conditions here, as some work which some of our folks were depending on, is not now to be had. Up until two years ago last Christmas time, the chapel basement here had been flooded once, we believe. But in less than three years now it has been flooded three times. Twenty-three years with but one flood tide, and in less than three years, three of them, and all much higher than any before that time. This means much change in the weather for one thing. This last flood did not damage much here at Riverside, except tear the foot-bridge somewhat.

Riverside was much pleased to have the Gospel Team from Ashland College visit us. Their visit was much enjoyed, and we trust that they may come again.

Again, may we ask an interest in your prayers that in the days just before us, our God may lead, and that his leading may be followed.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

REPORT OF REVIVAL AT MASONTOWN BRETHREN CHURCH

We open this report with praise and thanksgiving to the Head of the church, the Lord Jesus Christ, for divine guidance and care with which we have been favored. With Christ as the Head of the church, we feel that in all things he is working out his plan in his body. The successes and failures he utilizes to make us depend less on self and more on him. The victories are ours that he might gather to himself more glory and praise.

One of these victories we gladly report to the Evangelist family. This was a revival victory that resulted in the salvation of a number of precious souls, each of whom is of more value than the whole world; that re-established some who had grown careless and were slipping away from the ideals of holy living in Christ; and that challenged us anew to the task of ever holding fast to the "faith once delivered to the saints."

The worker used of God to conduct the revival was Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church. Brother Bame was a laborer who surely did not shirk the task of putting forth every effort to save souls. Contrary to custom in many revivals, services were held for three weeks without giving the evangelist a single evening for rest, also the three Sunday afternoons were used for services. The first Sunday Dr. Bame preached at the Uniontown Brethren church. Brother Bame's sermons were in accord with the Word of God, his presentation of the doctrines of our church was masterful, and his denunciation of prevalent sins was most timely. Preaching was but a part of the work. The days were spent seeking the lost in their homes. It was a busy three weeks for the evangelist.

The visible results of the meeting were encouraging. Seventeen persons have already been baptized. All but one of these have come or will come into the church. A few await baptism; others are being kept from baptism by parents who consider them too young. The full results accruing from such an effort on part of a church of Christ will to a degree become manifest, but will only fully be known by the mind of the all-knowing God.

A GLIMPSE OF THE WAR SITUATION IN AFRICA

loke Station before my arrival there on November 5th, I will not speak at this time. That would require a separate article and would be best told by those who were actually present during those exciting days.

On receipt of my cablegram from Irem, Mr. Bauman naturally presumed me to be yet at Leopoldville and cabled me for further information. That cablegram reached me at Yaloke on January 16th (sent November 24th). Nevertheless, jointly as Yaloke missionaries, we decided to reply to the belated cablegram, and sent in code, via Bangui, a cable to the effect that conditions were improved, property was not destroyed, no loss of missionary life had been incurred, etc. But this is Africa and what was Mr. Foster's surprise (the answer had been sent in his name) to have the cablegram returned, saying the cable address was insufficient. We unanimously agreed that letters would now (February 10th) have had ample time to arrive, and that to make another attempt to cable would be useless.

Several other questions have been asked in regard to the situation—

Had evacuation taken place what would have become of the native evangelists?

So far as we know no human means could have been taken to protect them.

What would have become of the school children?

They would undoubtedly have been scattered in the jungle with the rest of the villagers.

What has been the health of the missionaries?

Four of us have had serious illnesses since October—one at Bassai, one at Bellevue, and two at Yaloke. All have now recovered, and are so far as we know well at the present writing.

What has been the attitude of the mission and missionaries?

One of strict loyalty to the French under whose auspices at present we are permitted to labor.

What has been the attitude of the evangelists?

Most commendable. Ngo, having come to Bangui to my rescue was imprisoned on the return trip. During his imprisonment he learned through prayer and chastening, many secrets of the Spirit's infilling hitherto unknown to him. Returning he found that his wife who had gone to seek him had been carried off in the jungle-tide, so to speak. Praying for her return he received assurance that she would be spared to him, and persevered in this assurance in spite of the terrible dangers, both moral and physical which assailed her life. Going one morning on a preaching trip toward Irem, he met her returning. Many times he had been to seek her, always failing. Now faithful to his duty he let her return alone, while he concluded his trip of several days' duration, a trip on which he contracted an infection which almost cost him his life. I wonder how many white husbands would have done the same? Indeed we would have considered them excusable if they had not. Pray for his health that it may be completely restored. Wayili and Yama on the way to me with food were severely beaten by natives, and obliged to return. They counted it all joy for Jesus' sake. Nothing gives me greater joy than the strengthening of the faith of the native Christians, even though it must come through suffering. Yolo went out in a fruitless attempt to save his own villagers, who had remained loyal, from the general destruction of the countryside. He is now with his wife and two younger children stationed alone at Bozoum.

Voloungou has endured untold hatred on the part of the natives, dear to him by ties of blood, who have followed the sorcerer, while he has resolutely remained true to Christ. We cannot dwell longer on this point. For the evangelists pray on. Your faith is being largely rewarded.

What has been the attitude of the bulk of the people that is, of the villagers, Christian and non-Christian?

We are sorry to say that many of the professing Christians fled at the approach of the soldiers, thus implicating themselves with the rebels, and casting reproach upon our work. There are those, too, who in this time of testing have deliberately turned their backs upon the Lord. Thus the church, too, needs reconstruction. Pray for us when we shall undertake this important task.

True to their word, the government continued the occupation but three months, approximately—actually three months and fourteen days. Since November 5th, Yaloke station is no longer a military post. The brick house is now vacant, the numerous soldiers' huts are gone. The government is establishing a permanent post on the hill opposite us, which although unfinished, is already occupied.

Mr. Foster is already pushing the long delayed completion of the house. We hope to have a missionary conference, hitherto impossible, March fifth.

The war still continues. Yaloke, our own chief, is still at large and seems to be the paramount rebel.

We were favored with a visit from the Governor-General on January twenty-fifth. He occupied our brick house with his suite, and favored us with a call on Saturday morning, January 26th, during which time we had an important discussion of mission problems, a report of which in full has been communicated to our Board, through Secretary McClain.

Suffice it to say that after his departure our Administrator, Monsieur Bouquet, called upon us intimating that it was the governor's pleasure that we should immediately submit to him through the Administrator an application to open an industrial (professional) school. As we hold it to be our duty to bow to all commands of earthly governments, which are not contrary to our consciences, Mr. Foster has already submitted such an application.

As I intimated before we still believe that we need Mr. Hathaway and reinforcements, not only women, but also men. God is able to supply the forces and the funds for this new branch of our work.

We are in no wise discouraged, but rather have increased hope and assurance in the Lord, not alone for the work already established, but that we shall be permitted still further to hasten our Lord's coming by the preaching of the gospel to those tribes waiting in darkness farther on, to the "Regions Beyond," to the veritable "last frontiers" which must be evangelized before he comes. This gospel must be preached.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Memorial to the late Dr. J. C. Mackey

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND AN APPRECIATION

John Crawford Mackey, A.B., A.M., Ph.D., S. T. D., was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, September 24th, 1854, and died, in Ashland, Ohio, March 24th, 1929. He received his literary training in the Central High School, collegiate standing, and by charter, conferring the same degrees as the University of Pennsylvania. He graduated from the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary (now merged with the Cedarville College) in 1880 and was licensed by the Philadelphia Reformed Presbytery one year before graduation. He was ordained by the Northern Reformed Presbytery, February 20th, 1881, and installed as pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, New York, having been called to the only vacancy in the Reformed Presbyterian Synod. Feeling that the field was not suitable, he entered the United Presbyterian church and accepted a call to the Jane Street church, New York City.

Dr. Mackey entered the Brethren ministry in 1891 as pastor of the Conemaugh, church, Pennsylvania, and while pastor of this church organized the Hagerstown, Maryland, church. He also organized the Altoona Brethren church. Feeling that the Hagerstown church needed his services, he remained with this church for a year until its prosperity was assured. His next charge was at Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, and while here, he organized the Salisbury Brethren church and remained with them until called to the chair of Sociology, Economics and History at Ashland College, which he served from 1909 to 1912. It was while he was pastor of the Meyersdale church that he was elected to the presidency of Ashland College, (1897-1899). To use the language of the General Conference, he was to "make this institution a power in the church."

Dr. Mackey served as Brethren pastor at West Alexandria, Ohio, and adjacent appointments, and also churches in Nebraska and Kansas. When he resigned his chair in Ashland College, 1912, he returned to the Presbyterian church, accepting a charge at Nankin, Ohio. He was honorably discharged by the Presbytery of Wooster, Synod of Ohio, in September, 1925.

The foregoing is largely autobiography and shows the part of his life upon which the departed placed emphasis. However, many Ashlanders will remember him as a professional man of another character. For the sake of the failing eyesight of his former wife, he studied Optometry and became one of the city's successful Optometrists. And while it is unmentioned in his own summary of his life, there are many people of this city and its surroundings who will thus affectionately remember him.

Dr. Mackey was a man of strong convictions and sterling character. Even during his business career, he was a wide reader of religious books and periodicals and kept apace with the thinkers of the day, to the last. He never lost faith in the Brethren church nor his friendship for the present pastor. Many were the encouragements he gave which will not be soon forgotten. More than fifteen years ago he said to me, "I believe that the Brethren church will be the Millennial church." When reminded of that statement more recently, he reiterated it. He was as faithful to our church as he could well be under the circumstances.

He died full of faith and with the undarkened hope of a happy home prepared for those who love the Lord, praying for release from the suffering caused by a broken hip, which hastened his death.

Dr. Mackey was twice married. Mrs. Jennie Hyatt Mackey preceded him in death, August 8, 1925, and is buried in the Ashland Cemetery where his remains were interred. The present Mrs. Florence Weltmer Mackey, together with his sister, Mrs. Hannah Mackey and a niece, Miss Jean McCarroll, both of Philadelphia, and a host of friends out of his long life of ministry and service, survive to mourn his departure.

Funeral services were held at his home on Liberty Street, in charge of the writer, assisted by Dr. Martin Shively and Rev. A. F. Beery, long-time friends of the deceased.
CHARLES A. BAME.

DR. J. C. MACKEY—AN APPRECIATION

In spite of the fact that I had known Brother Mackey well for a period of at least thirty-five years, I knew nothing of his ancestry, though I believe he was of Scotch origin. How well I remember him as he was in those earlier days,—a man weighing perhaps something more than two hundred pounds, well groomed, and the perfect expression of dignity. His utterances were clothed in the most scholarly language, and were always true to the Book,—a quality which they never lost. At the general conferences, if he had a message to bring, his custom was to deliver it from manuscript, though I well remember one such message, brought from a text taken from the book of Job, in which he did not have even a single note before him, and brought as splendid a message as I ever heard on such an occasion.

He was a product of the city, and never found it easy to adapt himself to the tastes and ideas of rural folk, and perhaps never quite understood their problems, but he could and did point them unerringly to the Christ, in whom all problems find their ultimate solution. For many years I counted him among my closest friends and his going leaves me poorer in earthly friendships, though richer because I knew him.

During his last days, he was but a shadow of the man he had been in the earlier years of our acquaintance, and I doubt if he weighed even as much as a hundred pounds at the time of his death. For some years he had been losing in weight, and when a fall resulted in the breaking of a hip, there was not sufficient vitality left in him to stand the shock, and endure the pain, so he quietly fell asleep in the Lord, whom he loved and served for so many years. None of his friends are among those who mourn without hope, for he was not only ready, but anxious to enter into the "rest which remaineth for the people of God." We believe he is among those of whom it was said, "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

MARTIN SHIVELY.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ELLET DEDICATION NEXT SUNDAY

Brethren, take note: Ecclesiastes 3:17, "There is a time for every purpose and for every work." NEXT SUNDAY, APRIL 28, is the time for the Brethren of Northeastern Ohio to come to Ellet for we have a new brick church to dedicate, "Whose builder and maker is God." For we know that, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it" (Psalm 127:1).

We rejoice and praise him for his continued blessings in the building project and doubly rejoice for the two splendid young families (six persons) who eagerly await baptism in the new baptistry and membership in the church. We also thank him for others who have said they were coming to be baptized with these. We sincerely urge and invite Brethren to come and "see what the Lord hath done," for I am convinced that only the power of God could do what has been done. We need that same power to do what yet remains to be done. Pray for the success of our dedication and come.

Rev. B. F. Owen will be with us, also Dr. Jacobs, Dr. Miller and others from Ashland, as well as neighboring pastors. We understand that Smithville and Rittman churches are dismissing services and coming to Ellet for the day. That, we would say, is true Brethrenism. The new building will seat about four hundred, so we will have seats for all.

An all-day program has been planned with a basket dinner and supper in the basement. The ladies of the church will serve hot coffee for everybody and will have a supply of plain and chocolate milk on hand. The morning service (bell service) will begin at 9:15 and afternoon service at 2:00. Gifts will be received at the afternoon service, and possibly in the evening. Dedication will be followed by a revival service.
REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XI—The Need of Reality in Christian Profession

By R. Paul Miller

In an eastern city where I was speaking some time ago, I asked the people to raise their hands if they had a family altar at home. And out of that crowd of seven or eight hundred people not one hand went up! To me, this constitutes the most tragic situation facing the Christian Church today! This same situation could be duplicated in the vast majority of Christian churches now. What does it mean? Simply this: spiritual life is not real to thousands of professing Christians! It has no part in their home life. And if it has no part in the home life how can it have any real part in the heart life of these same people? The constant burden of discussion in ministers' associations is the barren spiritual condition of the people: the prayer meeting is all but deserted and worldliness is popular in church activities. As true as God sits in his heavens, the church is swiftly riding on to the Laodicean stage foretold. "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." (Rev. 3:16, 17.) These words, spoken by the Lord who bled to death for the church are the picture of this day.

What can be done to stay this tragic drift? Quit trying to "draw crowds" by preaching, but rather to make real Christians out of those already in the church! That people really know what faith in Christ means; that life in Christ means real separation from the world; that it means love for one another and lost men! That it means fellowship with God in prayer and in his Word; that it means sacrifice that is deep and real in both time and money for the gospel! Then will we have the true riches of gold tried in the fire; then will we have sight that truly sees and understands as he does; then will we be clothed in garments of righteousness wherein we will not be ashamed in his presence. This should be the greatest concern for all ministers of Christ, lest at his coming they have nothing to turn over to him but leaves.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

During several days of illness, I have found leisure to renew my acquaintance with an old and valued friend, that classic by James Denny on "The Death of Christ." This is one of the few books the busy minister can afford to read more than once. In fact, once a year would be profitable. Every time I read it, I feel the urge to go out and preach its great Theme. A few books like this one are worth more to the preacher than thousands of volumes such as clutter up our libraries. Fewer books, better ones, and a more complete mastery of these—this would give the Church greater preaching, in my judgment. Here are some gems from Denny's book:

PREACHING and Theology

"Preaching and theology should never be divorced. The simplest truth of the Gospel and the profoundest truth of theology must be put in the same words—he bore our sins. If our Gospel does not inspire thought, and if our theology does not inspire preaching, there is no Christianity in either." (283).

PREACHING without the Cross

"There is such a thing as preaching in which the Death of Christ has no place corresponding to that which it has in the New Testament. There is preaching in which the New Testament interpretation of Christ's Death is ignored, or carped at, or exploded. ... It is not unjust to say that no man will so preach as to leave the impression that he has the Word of God behind him if he is inwardly at war with the idea of Atonement, constantly engaged in minimizing it, maintaining an attitude of reserve, or even of self-defense, in relation to it. We may take it or leave it, but it is idle to attempt to propagate the Christian religion on the basis and with the authority of the New Testament, unless we have welcomed it with our whole heart." (285).

THE Critic of "Substitution"

"It is easy, for instance, to criticize the insufficiency of any commercial figure, like that of 'debt,' to exhibit the personal and spiritual relations subsisting between man and God; yet Christ used this figure habitually and the whole impressions which it makes upon the conscience is sound. The words of the revival hymn, 'Jesus Paid it All, All to Him I Owe,' have the root of the matter in them; and, however inadequate they may be to the interpretation of Christ's Work and of Christian experience as a whole, they are infinitely truer than the most balanced, considerate, or subtle statement which denies them."

"The new life springs out of the sense of debt to Christ. The regenerating power of forgiveness depends upon its cost: it is the knowledge that we have been bought with a price which makes us cease to be our own, and live for him who dearly bought us. And we should remember also that it is not always intellectual sensitiveness, nor care for the moral interests involved, which sets the mind to criticize statements of the Atonement. There is such a thing as pride, the last form of which is unwillingness to become debtor even to Christ for forgiveness of sins; and it is conceivable that in any given case it may be this that makes the words of the hymn stick in our throats." (286-7).

THE Awful Urgency of the Cross

"To receive the Reconciliation, or not to receive it—to be a Christian, or not to be a Christian—is not a matter of comparative indifference; it is not a case of being a somewhat better man, or a man, perhaps, not quite so good; it is a case of life or death. ..."

"If therefore we are conscious that this note is wanting in our preaching ... it is probably time to ask what place in it is held by the Atonement. The proclamation of the finished work of Christ is not good advice, it is good news: good news that means immeasurable joy for those who welcome it, irreparable loss for those who reject it, infinite and urgent responsibility for all. The man who has this to preach has a Gospel about which he ought to be in dead earnest." (310-12).

THE Cross and the New Life

"The new life is constituted in the soul by the response of faith to the appeal of Christ's Death, or by Christ's Death evoking the response of faith. It does not matter which way we put it. Nothing can beget in the soul that life of which we speak

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

27. Should all Deacons in a Congregation always be members of the Official Board?

The Deacon is a permanent official in the church. His duties and responsibilities are quite definitely defined. I think therefore that the Deacons in active service in a congregation should be on the Official Board. Their duties make this quite imperative. Being responsible for the welfare of the congregation, with the pastor of course as the spiritual leader, they can not well discharge these duties and responsibilities unless they are in closest touch with the direction of the affairs of the congregation. By active Deacons I mean all who are on service in the congregation. My own views are that when men properly qualified for the Deacon's office are elected it should be for an indefinite period rather than for a term of years. I read in the First Epistle of Paul to Timothy the following words: "They that have served well as Deacons gain to themselves a good standing and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus." I think therefore that Deacons should serve during life, or at any rate during such a period of life as they may be efficient in the service. Older men who have faithfully served should be relieved of responsibility but not of their office.

28. Why was the tribe of Manasseh divided? There are several references to the half tribe of Manasseh.

When the Israelites approached the territory lying North of the Arnon River in the East Jordan country they began the conquest. From the Arnon, a river flowing into the Dead Sea from the East at about its mid-eastern point, to the Hieromax River as far north as the Sea of Galilee there lay rich and wonderful pasture lands. In the first battles of conquest this whole territory was conquered by Israel. It was then assigned to the tribes of Reuben, Gad and half the tribe of Manasseh. You can read the whole account in Numbers chapter 32.

29. Is there any good reason why Brethren people do not have grades in their ministry?

This question assumes that we have no coordinated and orderly system of church officials, that is in the Spiritual offices of the Church. Perhaps the questioner may never have heard of the Manual of Procedure adopted by the General Conference many years ago. It is to our shame and often to our confusion and downright loss in prestige and influence in a community that even our Ministers themselves do not know the order of the Church and the ways of doing things.

For the information of all who may not have a Pastor's Handbook at their command permit me to quote the gist of the Manual on the matter of the grades in the Ministry as agreed upon by the General Conference as reflecting our Polity. In Chapter I, section II we find the following: "The regular officers of the Church are first, Elders and Pastors; second, Evangelists; (a) Missionary, (b) Superintending or District; third, Deacons and Deaconesses."

Then in Article 2 of the same section we have: "The Ministerial office includes the following: first, Elders, from whose number pastors and superintending or district evangelists shall be chosen; Second, Missionary Evangelists who may be elders or laymen approved by their District Conference and commissioned by them to preach the Gospel in home or foreign lands."

We believe the above plan, brief and definite as it is, is Scriptural.

The Manual also makes provision for Ministerial Students or Candidates for the Ministry in the following manner: In Chapter I, Section IV, Article 1 it is provided

Fraudulent Advertisers

Every evil force or agency must have a means of reaching the people, some medium of advertising. And when we say that, our minds immediately revert to the newspapers and magazines. There is where the advertising is done—the vast majority of it. It is these agencies that people make use of when they want to get the ear of the public in order to create an interest in what they have to promote or sell. They have an unmeasured influence on their readers. What the printed page talks loudly about the people get on their toes about. Shrewd and persistent advertising will sell almost anything, whether it is a fraud or genuine.

The people are annually robbed of millions of dollars by false and misleading advertisements that appear in the periodicals and daily papers of our country. Some are obviously false, and some are near the border line and in the twilight zone. Possibly it is not surprising that many should be deceived by the latter type of advertisements, but the fact is that vast numbers are daily becoming victims of those that are openly and shamelessly false on their face, those about which no reasonably intelligent man ought to be mistaken. This class of advertisers takes its toll of millions annually from the sick, the unfortunate and the ignorant; those who are ready to try anything as a forlorn hope.

Now, every means is being made use of to suppress this gigantic evil. The Department of Justice, the Post Office Department and the Federal Trade Commission have waged war unceasingly against it, not always with the most satisfactory results, however. But the important fact being brought to the minds of publishers is that they are responsible right along with the fraudulent concerns back of them for the robbing of the people. The publisher brings the victim and the crook together, and he shares the guilt of the crook. Therefore he is being made a party to all suits against fraudulent advertising by publication. As this fact gets more and more into the consciousness of publishers, they will be more cautious and possibly more conscientious about the kind of advertising they send out through their publications.

But the thing that makes this situation of special interest to us in this connection is the fact that it brings to our minds forcibly another type of false advertising that needs to be exposed, a type that is not generally recognized. One of the most important means of giving the appearance of respectability to questionable and unworthy agencies and institutions is to get people who are members of the church to line up with them, to come out in the open in their behalf, or to participate in the thing they advocate, or make use of the product they make and sell. The things thus advertised may be wrong on the face of it, but when a godly number of professedly Christian people give it their support, thousands are deceived thereby. Without the assistance of such church members many of the forces of evil would find it impossible to seduce the vast numbers that they are now able to victimize. Knowingly or unknowingly, these professed friends of Jesus help rob many of their fellow mortals of ideals, strength and wholesomeness and leave them much impoverished in character and in the grip of habits that are, to say the least, despiritualizing, if not devitalizing and vicious. Such a church member is the moral crook's best advertiser. By his moderate indulgence or participation in the thing that is questionable or clearly wrong, he gives the cloak of respectability to it and many an innocent and inexperienced individual is made an easy victim thereby. Let us have no misunderstanding at this point—the church member who carries sin in his life is as truly a fraudulent advertiser (all sin is fraudulent) as is the publication that advertises crooked business, and his act is as reprehensible as the publisher's.

Walking advertisements of evil are on every hand, but it is a pity that they must be counted among church members. We need to be shamed by the spectacle. We are accustomed to putting the problem to ourselves in a gentler fashion. We say the Christian is the only Bible the world reads, and therefore it behooves us that we be careful to give them the true Word and not an adulterated version of it. But it will do us good occasionally to approach the problem from the opposite direction and see ourselves, not as inconsistent Christians merely, but as positive instruments of unrighteousness. The suggestion may not be pleasing to us. Indeed, it is possible that we may even be offended at such an ungloved handling of the matter. But when we have calmed ourselves we shall find that the seriousness of the situation warrants the method of reproof. It is no light thing that men and women who claim membership in the body of Christ are so constantly being used to advertise the things of the devil by their questionable conduct, their support of institutions that are evil and their indulgence in things that are recognizably worldly and sinful. No one is so responsible for the popularity of the evils of a community as church members who give them their support. It is in the respectable magazine that fraudulent advertising does the greatest harm. Even so it is through the respectable church folks, from whom the community has a right to expect most, that evil practices and sinful indulgences work their most sinister influence. Let us face the fact frankly and endeavor to put an end to fraudulent advertising on the part of church members.

Daily Bible Reading

In our local Sunday school the superintendent is endeavoring to encourage more extensive daily Bible reading on the part of the scholars. And the weekly show of hands reveals the fact that a large percent of the adults and young people alike do not have any very fixed habit of Bible reading. And the situation in this Sunday school, we take it, is quite representative of the situation in general. People do not read the Bible as they ought, not even Christian leaders, who profess to love it and to revere its teachings. But there are many who do not read the Bible at all; they know little or nothing about it, and so have no love for it. There are many benefits to be derived from daily Bible reading, but one of the most important is that it tends to build up an intelligent love for the Bible, and until men love the Bible, they will not put themselves to much inconvenience to obey it.

A missionary to Brazil referred to a conversation he had with Dom Pedro, when Emperor of that country. The Emperor's words will act as a gentle reproof to many of us for our rather lukewarm attitude toward the Bible. He said: "I love the Bible. The more I read it the more I love it. There are some people who do not love the Bible. I do not understand them." Those words surprised the missionary, but the manner and voice of the Emperor surprised him even more. He said: "Not only did I listen, but I watched the lips which uttered the words with evident though suppressed emotion. I also noted that instead of looking me intently in the face, as he was wont to do with those with whom he was conversing, his eyes were in humility cast on the floor. When there was a pause I broke the silence by saying that those who did not love the Bible were those who did not read it. He answered: 'I do not understand such people, but I love it; I love its simplicity, I love its repetitions and reiterations of truth.' As I said, I read it daily, and the more I read it, the more I love it."

That is the way to build up a strong love for the Bible, and such love does not stop with the mere book, but loves the truth and the Christ of the Book.

Moral courage is not given as much prominence as the physical variety, but it is as sorely needed, and is usually more difficult to exercise because it lacks the inspiration of the brass band and of the crowds.

Living Cigarette Advertisements

The intensive advertising campaign which the tobacco interests have been carrying on, especially their cigarette advertisements, have been causing much comment, and have brought upon the tobacco companies adverse criticism, as well as possibly having induced many to think more favorably of the cigarette. But striking as these advertisements have been, they have not had the influence as have their living advertisements. The tobacco interests have been very brazenly daring in the placing of their printed advertisements, but still more so with their living advertisements. Some of these are being placed on church steps and almost within the lobbies or entrance-ways of many of our churches. One of our pastors complains: "We are informed that it (the cigarette trust) has had several living advertisements walking from our church doors at the close of services with the abominable cigarettes sticking from their lips. It would be a terrible thing to have to put a 'No Smoking' sign on our church building but this thing positively must stop. The members who do smoke should at least have enough respect for their church that they will not be seen reaching for their tobacco while in sight of the church." That pastor has the right attitude, and we hope his members support him in it. And there are other places needing some one to do some plain talking, too. Suppose the Christian laymen who have a conscience on this point take the lead and save the pastor the embarrassment.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There are no freemen in the kingdom of God; all have been bought with a price, the price of the blood of his own Son. Therefore, all are bond-servants of Jesus Christ.

Prof. Alva J. McClain says some of our people have been inquiring of him concerning his attitude toward the unfortunate disturbance at the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, and he replies by publishing a copy of the resignation which he tendered the Board of Trustees of that institution.

In a communication just received from Brother C. C. Grisso, later than the letter commented on elsewhere on this page, he informs us of six baptisms at Harrah, Washington, on April 21. Three of them are heads of families and all will unite with the Brethren church. So the Lord continues to give victory.

Our correspondent from Winchester, Virginia, informs us of a pre-Easter revival conducted by the pastor, Brother E. J. Rohart, and resulting in eight confessions, seven of which have been baptized, and one received by transfer. This is one of our newest mission points and the progress that it is making is most encouraging.

Brother F. G. Coleman writes with commendation of the splendid work being done at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, under the leadership of Brother Frank Gehman and of the fine spirit that pervades the people. The dedication of the new building and the meetings conducted under the evangelistic leadership of Brother Coleman were recently reported by the pastor.

Brother Freeman Ankrum will have completed six years as pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, on September 1, and will then enter upon his seventh year in response to the call of the church. The congregation has made most commendable growth in numbers and in equipment during his leadership. They are planning to entertain the Southeastern district conference (formerly known as the Maryland-Virginia) on June 11-13.

The report from the Second church of Los Angeles shows the work there going steadily forward under the capable leadership of Brother A. V. Kimmell. Sixteen have been added to the church since last report, the Sunday school attendance is around 400, five Christian Endeavor societies are maintained, and an Easter offering of $900 was made for foreign missions. An evangelistic campaign is scheduled for May with Brother A. L. Lynn as the preacher.

There has been a revival among Christian Endeavorers at Canton, Ohio, as well as among the church members, and it seems that the young people contributed their full share toward the success of the campaign recently held by the pastor, Dr. Beal. The Endeavorers are now more thoroughly graded than formerly, and that, as usual, makes for success. See their report in this issue. Now, let us hear from other places where Christian Endeavor is wide awake.

A post card message to the Evangelist office from Mrs. Hattie Cope Sheldon, written on board the S. S. Olympic and dated April 23, 1929, says: "We are due to arrive in New York tomorrow (April 24). Have had a pleasant voyage and we are feeling fine. Left Bellevue station February 21, so have been a little more than two months en route." We bespeak in behalf of the Evangelist family a hearty welcome home to Brother and Sister Sheldon, and we trust that their first furlough may be one of real rest and recuperation.

Brother W. H. Schaffer, pastor of our church at Hamlin, Kansas, informs us that he and Brother Lowman of the Portis church, have planned an exchange of one week's evangelistic meeting. The Portis meeting begins on April 29th and closes the following Monday night with communion, and the Hamlin meeting starts the next evening and closes the following week with a communion service. Each pastor will assist the other in the communion and it is thought that Brother Lowman will preach the baccalaureate sermon at Hamlin while he is there.

The church at Turlock, California, under the pastoral leadership of Brother N. W. Jennings, has been showing evidences of real advancement. They have enlarged their quarters so as to take care of the growing Sunday school and social needs of their church by the building of a Sunday school annex, which was dedicated free of debt. Brother Roger Darling, a former pastor, was the special speaker at the time of dedication. This event was preceded by an evangelistic campaign conducted by the pastor, resulting in a number of additions to the church membership and in the deepening of its spirituality.

Our good friend and correspondent, Brother A. Glenn Carpenter, writes of the successful campaign recently held in the Ardmore church in South Bend, Indiana, and concerning which editorial mention was made in a previous issue and the twenty confessions reported. Brother C. R. Sensenbaugh, the pastor, was an Ashland Seminary graduate last June and we rejoice to learn of the splendid success that is attending the beginning of his ministry. Ardmore is a young church of splendid promise. Its fine young people recently entertained the young folks of the northern Indiana churches. That feature reads very much like the Endeavorers' activities of Cambria county in Pennsylvania, concerning which reports have been published. Why not have a report occasionally from our Hoosier young people?

Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the church at Sunnyside, Washington, reports eight persons recently added to the church by baptism, and eight others awaiting the rite. He states that more than three score persons have been added to the church during his pastorate and that the future looks bright for still further victories. At a recent business meeting he was retained as pastor for another year. Brother E. W. Reed as Sunday school superintendent, is proving an able co-worker and is rendering a splendid service. The work at Harrah, where Rev. Grisso gives one service in midweek is making progress and has a Sunday school of about one hundred. We are grateful to Brother Grisso for the words of appreciation which he writes about the Evangelist and the Sunday school literature. Brother Lyon joins us in saying that such kind words help wonderfully in our work, and such an attitude of loyalty will contribute much toward the success of our publications.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the meetings at Portis and Hamlin, Kansas, where the pastors are exchanging a week of services.

Pray for the revival at Ellet, Ohio, where Brother B. F. Owen will serve as the evangelist, following the dedication on April 28th.

The Church's Final Triumph

By C. C. Grisso

(Preached in the Sunnyside Brethren Church, Sunnyside, Washington, March 10, 1929.)

TEXTS—Matthew 16:18 and Ephesians 5:27. Scripture Lesson—Ephesians 5:23-33.

One of the easiest characteristics to develop in one's life is that of looking on the dark side of things. And there is a dark side. There is also a bright side. "Be of good cheer," said the Master, "I have overcome the world." "He that is in you is greater than he that is in the world."

We are all more or less looking for the disagreeable and the imperfections in the lives of our friends and our brethren. The world seems to be abounding with pessimists. They eulogize the past and depreciate the present. They say all the great men are dead and that the present is a weak, puny, worthless race. The favorite target of such is the church. We are hearing much in these days about "the Vanishing Church." "Did you ever see an institution crumble like the church?" they ask us. They point to its weak members, its failures and its shortcomings. Now, it is this present day sentiment of which I desire to speak this morning. Let me remind you first of all that the church that our Lord founded is not a failing, dying church, but it is by its very nature a conquering church. King Solomon saw her glory three thousand years ago and cried out, "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?" The church has its enemies today, but let me remind you that it has ever had them. God's people before the church was organized had their enemies. Look at their history again. Look at them in Egypt, in the wilderness, and even on into Canaan. They suffered many a loss but they were never fully overcome. Elijah felt one time like many persons since his day have felt. There is no use, we might as well give up and quit, for I am the only one that is left. But God assured him that "he had left seven thousand in Israel which have not bowed unto Baal." There are plenty of juniper tree Christians in the world yet, and God's call is to get out from under the juniper tree, and gird up your loins for service for the battle is not yet done.

When the infant church of the first century was upon one occasion passing through some very bitter persecution, Gamaliel the wisest of the Sanhedrin said, "If this work be of men it will come to naught; but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it." He spoke more wisely than he knew. For men have tried in vain to overthrow it. Celsus, Nero, Diocletian, Julian, the apostate, yes, but all have failed. Voltaire said, "It took twelve men to establish Christianity in the world, but I will show how that one man can overthrow it." He has passed into history and has been forgotten but by a few, but the church moves on. Although her high and holy mission has been betrayed by false teachers and hypocrites within her ranks, she still remains and the "gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

It is easy to find fault with the church. It is easy to find fault with any great movement. It doesn't take a person with a special degree of intelligence to find fault. How easy for the scribes and Pharisees to find fault with the Master. "He eats with publicans and sinners" they said. But it wouldn't have been nearly so easy to find some one to take his place and to do the work that he was doing. If only the world could understand him, how much they would help instead of hindering his cause. The gospel of Jesus Christ in the hands of his chosen ambassadors is changing the face of this old world. And what we need today is men and women of faith and hope and vision, and who believe tremendously in the cause they

As I look at the world as it is today, I am frank to admit that I am both discontented and optimistic. There is much in politics, and education, and much that goes under the name of religion, that we cannot endorse as the truth. There is wickedness, and unfairness, and injustice, and rivalry, and hatred. But what should be the attitude of the Christian in the face of these conditions? Simply this, a DEEPER FAITH ROOTED IN THE VERY HEART OF GOD.

Yes, there is much that we cannot countenance. Wrong seems well entrenched. War, Desolation, Sorrow, Madness, Suffering, Poverty, Pestilence. Can there be any deliverance from these? Can our Christianity offer any solution, or any word of cheer and comfort? Are the forces of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ rugged and powerful enough to prevail? Can we in a sin-cursed, power-drunk, pleasure-mad, idol-worshipping, commercialized age, place our hope in the workings of a gentle gospel? What shall be our answer in this time of storm? Listen, while I give you the answer to these questions. A great storm was raging at sea. All on board were terrified save one little girl. Some one approaching her said, "Why are you so calm and contented when the storm is raging?" "Ah," said the

With Christ

By C. F. Yoder

*They were a group of rustic men, Whose voices in Jerusalem,
Were heard at any hour.
The multitudes at once gave heed,
And pressed to hear these preachers plead
With strange and wondrous power.*

*A cripple lay beside the gate
And asked for alms of small and great,
When passed these preachers bold.
Then in the name of Christ they spoke,
And bade the cripple rise and walk,
In lieu of gift of gold.*

*The magistrates took note of them,
That they were but unlettered men,
But they had been with Christ.
His wondrous words they had believed,
His wondrous Spirit had received,
And that for them sufficed.*

*As Jesus called the fisher folk,
And latent powers within them woke,
And made them mighty men,
He takes your humble life and mine,
And fills them with his life divine,
And people marvel then.*

*He touches all the common things,
And to them all his beauty brings,
—The beauty of his love.
And where he walks, the scenes of earth
Are transformed into scenes of worth little lady, "MY FATHER IS AT THE HELM." Yes, Yes, my brother, there is one thing that no man can afford to do, and that is to lose his faith in God, for "Faith is the victory that overcometh the world."

When Moses came down from the mountain with his personal meeting with God, he had in his face what every person expects to see in us, THE REFLECTION OF THE FATHER. They were ready to believe in, and follow a man like that. Hope born of faith in God is the secret of success in the Lord's work. We serve an unchangeable God whose hand is not shortened, nor whose ear is heavy that he cannot hear. Let us know that the eve of our Leader is upon us, and the conflict of today is to be crowned with victory tomorrow. Beyond the horizon is the promised land with hosts encamped in peace and victory, for there is no failure with God. This wondrous Book, (the Bible) holds no chapter headed with those dark words, despair, defeat, retreat, dismay or failure. Every halt is for the purpose of a swift impetuous charge. Even those hours that once seemed the uttermost of blackness and failure for the plans of God are now seen to be glorious with victory. Black was the hour of persecution for the apostles. But "their blood became the seed of the church." As for the missionaries, their persecution has only lifted them into a loftier eminence. Yes, all things grow old, the sun may burn out, the mountains waste and dissolve like a faded leaf, empires perish and leave not a trace behind, BUT THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD LIVES ON BECAUSE THE MIGHTIEST FORCE IN ALL THE WORLD IS THE SILENT FORCE WITHIN HER. I believe in God. I believe in the power of the Gospel. And in the strength of this belief, defeat does not haunt me. Many have said with reference to the presence of certain evils, "it is no use, they cannot be overcome." To say the least such an attitude is a concession to the power of the enemy. Listen again, "He that is in you is greater than he that is in the world, be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." No greater obstacles can be encountered than those that have been overcome. The Gospel has shown itself sufficient in every case. It has scored its triumphs on every field. It is the same gospel that in the first century vanquished the bigotry of Jerusalem, the idolatry of Antioch and Athens, and the magic of Ephesus, and won triumphs on every field from the prison in Philippi to Caesar's household. That Gospel has lost none of its divine power, and can still point to splendid victories.

But another thing that I wish to note is that the church may win at any time. Verily the time may be at hand when Christ is going to establish his universal kingdom upon the earth. For long years the prophets foretold his birth in Bethlehem of Judea. They had waited so long that many became indifferent, and when he did come they were completely taken by surprise. Again and again throughout the New Testament we are told that he will come again for his church. Yes, I do believe his promises. And it is our privilege today to lift our eyes away from the sin and sorrow that surrounds us and look away "to the hills from whence cometh our help." I plead with you today in Christ's stead, join the Gospel army, that when he comes you may have a part in that glorious time when all heaven and earth shall unite in celebrating his dominion from sea to sea.

My brother, sister, let me ask, Are you doing anything for his glory now? If not, how can you hope to share in his spiritual triumph? Is it not about time that some were giving up living lives of selfishness and join the Gospel host that is working and watching and praying for his coming? Oh what a day when the Bridegroom shall claim his bride, and shall share in his eternal glory. "THEN IT SHALL BE TO HIM A GLORIOUS CHURCH NOT HAVING SPOT OR WRINKLE." Then the scoffing, unbelieving world shall behold her glory exalted at the right hand of God. Nothing less than this awaits the church of Jesus Christ.

At the close of the Crimean war there was a great celebration in London, when the good queen gave out medals to the heroes. Some of the soldiers came with empty sleeves, some on crutches, some with bandaged foreheads, but there was the same royal smile, and the same reward for all. At last there was carried a poor wreck of humanity on a litter, for his limbs and arms were gone. He was only a common soldier, but in the service of his country had done his best. Then the good queen with tears streaming down her cheeks, went over to where he was and pinning a badge to the poor fellow's coat said, "Well done, good and faithful servant." So it is. I know in that great day of triumph of Christ's kingdom some of us poor humble servants are to get our reward from the hands of him whose we are, and whom we serve, and "whom having not seen we love." I recall the words of the sainted Dr. Dwight.

I love thy kingdom Lord,
The house of thine abode
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.

I love thy church, oh God,
Her walls before me stand
Sure as the apple of thine eye
And graven on the hand.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend,
To her my cares and toils be given
Till toils and cares shall end.

Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise.

Sure as thy truth shall last
To Zion shall be given
The brightest glories earth can yield
And brighter bliss of heaven.

Law or Grace

By Dr. J. H. Crofford

Law briefly defined is a rule of order or conduct, governing our social or spiritual lives, with a penalty attached for violation. The law has no terror for those who live uprightly. Our civil laws are made to deter those disposed to evil from doing violence to others, by inflicting punishment for their violations. "The powers that be are ordained of God," and every person to be a good, loyal citizen owes his obedience to them. Law simply means that certain stipulated things must be done, or must not be done, or we become subject to a penalty.

Such matters in our civil government are too well understood to admit of further discussion, but we have a record of another law, the will of God, governing his people during the Jewish age. There were laws many, but we refer more particularly to the Mosaic code, the commands of which are so analogous to our civil laws, and to what we consider our Christian duty that we become confused and are inclined to want to obey the law, and to exalt the place of the law rather than submit ourselves to the rule or service of grace. This has been the bent of many ever since the day of grace, especially on the part of those unable to discern the difference between law and grace. In the days of the apostles they had just such a difficulty to guard against.

The law was until John the Baptist, when a preparatory work began to fit the hearts of men for the reception of a different service, to be introduced and taught by him whom love brought down to earth to take unto himself a bride. While he was upon the earth he drew people unto himself, not by the force or power of law, but by acts of kindness, by performing or miracles. And to those who came to him he taught the way of eternal life. He, being the Bridegroom, had no service such as he taught men, that he himself must render, but he could not do otherwise than be obedient to the law. He never transgressed it.

The decalogue, or the law, could only bring judgment. It consisted of commands with penalties attached. Only one of the Ten Commandments was given with a promise, a temporal blessing—"that thy days may be long upon the earth." But are they binding upon us? What is our situation? Do we refrain from killing because we do not wish to violate the law? No. Do we keep the Sabbath, because it is commanded? No. If we attempt to keep the law, we must keep it perfectly, for as James says, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2:10). But we are not under law. Many have become discouraged in their Christian pilgrimage, because, having a wrong interpretation of Scripture, they imagined they must keep the law, and of course, keeping it perfectly, lest they be guilty of the whole law by breaking it in one particular. Such will find encouragement and the solution to their problems if they will search for and find the word grace.

Grace is so full of meaning, that space will not permit us to attempt to fathom it, but briefly, it is the free, unmerited and eternal love and favor of God, which is the spring of all the benefits we receive from him. "At this present time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works" (Rom. 11:5, 6). Works alone will not save us. He who was obedient to the law (the same is true of our civil laws) if he liked it or not, escaped the judgment of the law, but under grace, God looks upon the heart and the motive of service must be love. Our service knows no servitude, but it is a pleasure. We are the bride; Christ is the Bridegroom, and the more we love him, the more we will want to serve him. Every true, loving bride strives to please and serve her bridegroom; she never stops to consider it a slavery or burden to do so. The church being the bride, must experience the same bridal or conjugal love; then she will seek and strive to serve, which is the culmination of her love. The refraining from following the worldly fashions, and from indulging in questionable amusements will be a pleasure because they are not in harmony with the wish of the Bridegroom. "Now are we delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held: that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (Rom. 7:6). Therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13:10).

The ages were divided into dispensations with their forms of government which need no repealing or annulling, but which automatically end with the entering of a new dispensation. None of the Mosaic code has been carried over into the dispensation of grace as a law to the bride class or church. The Jews continue to obey the law, and if we choose to obey it, then are we not under grace but under law, and obliged to obey all of it, and in that great day we will be judged according to the things in the book we have obeyed (Rev. 20:12).

Which would you, my sister, prefer to be a loveless bride, getting your meals at the regular hours, washing and mending, keeping the house tidy and rearing your offspring, because the bridegroom laid down such requirements as a law when you were married; or a bride full of love, seeking every opportunity to do the things you know will please, and avoiding doing those things that mar his happiness? We well know the answer.

This is a veritable illustration of obedience to law and service through grace. The law says thou shalt not kill; thou shalt not commit adultery; thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not covet; thou shalt not bear false witness. The people were restrained from doing these things under command, but grace put an end to such service; and now we abstain from doing any of the harmful things as enumerated in the decalogue because we love. Nine of the ten commandments are covered by our concern for the welfare of our fellow-man. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13:10). All the ordinances given under the dispensation of grace must be observed through love as a privilege, yet essential, and as a compulsion.

There remains one more command to which your attention is called because of the manner in which the mass of the people consider it. The Sabbath was to be kept at the end of six days' work, as a memento of the creation, as a day of rest to the observer after having spent six days in selfish labor. The observing of the day is void of love. Under grace Christ demands the first and best; and through love for him, instead of a day of rest, we give him the first day of the week, as a day of service without the Sabbath restrictions. Be careful not to keep it as the Sabbath and place yourselves under obligations to keep the whole law. Love will suggest the manner of keeping the day. Whatever you do, be sure not to call Sunday, Sabbath; it is not a day of rest but of service.

Love must be the motive of obedience to the Gospel call to preach and to evangelize the world. When Peter affirmed his love for Jesus he was told: "Feed my lambs" (John 21:15-17); but not for hire but for love. We serve through love, and "by grace are we saved through faith" (Eph. 2:8).

For Smoking Women to Think About

By Will H. Brown

A young woman passenger on a Los Angeles street car sat down next to a plasterer and lit a cigarette. The laborer, after taking one good look at her, arose and walked into another section of the car, where he stood in the aisle, rather than to have any one misjudge him because he sat next to a smoking woman.

Many smoking women do not seem to realize that the habit places them among a certain class of women who are not held in the highest esteem by self-respecting men. No self-respecting woman can afford to forget this important view-point of a vast army of clean-cut, clean-living men.

Women should not only protect themselves but the race from the stain of tobacco upon their name or their person. Parents in every state in the Union are calling out for help to protect their boys and girls from the tobacco propaganda that is flooding the land, for the purpose of inducing the youth of America to take up cigarette smoking. Every woman should protest against this onslaught, in every legal way possible. Officers everywhere should be called on to enforce the law against selling tobacco to minors.

Tobacco men do not hesitate to call for government aid in their behalf. When the black-root rot struck the tobacco fields of Kentucky and Virginia, the wail for help from the tobacco raisers brought government agricultural experts to the scene in a hurry.

The loss of the entire tobacco crop in the United States would be small compared to the loss the nation is suffering in the enslaving of boys and girls to the tobacco habit, to the profit of greedy tobacco men in raising the weed and in manufacturing it into smoke-products.

Personal Evangelism

By H. H. Smith

A few years ago, a pastor of a large Methodist church in the North, who is noted for his evangelistic success, gave this incident: "Among the 213 received into the church was a man 79 years old. He was won by my walking into his house on his 79th birthday and telling him God had sent me for his soul. All a-tremble, he called out, 'Mother, mother, the preacher says he has come for my soul. Mother, you know our house has always been the home of Methodist preachers, but this is the first one that ever came for my soul.' God got it that day. A few weeks ago the phone announced this man was dying and urged me to come quick. Standing by his bed he pulled me down and whispered with his failing breath, 'I could not die without thanking you again for coming after my soul that day.' A million people are waiting for us to come after their souls this year. We can have them if we will go after them. 'Where there's a will, there's a way.'"

But don't let us forget that personal evangelism is a matter that concerns laymen as well as preachers. The early Methodists were all evangelists in practice. After hearing Billy Sunday preach, a prominent banker said to a friend, with deep emotion: "Last night I went to hear Billy Sunday. He said there were some people who considered themselves Christians, but if they should get to heaven they would have a mighty lonesome time of it. They would not find a friend or other person there to welcome them for whose salvation they had been responsible. I am one of that class. If I should go to heaven today I could not find a person there whom I had asked to become a Christian. But if God will permit to live another week I promise you there will be those whom I have asked to accept Christ and to meet me in heaven."

A rich banker, but a spiritual pauper! Alas! how many are there like him! But this man was true to his pledge, became an enthusiastic personal worker, organized a band of workers, and many heard the call to a Christian life.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

SAYS HOOVER'S FIRST ACT WAS "HOCUS-POCUS"

Whatever "hocus-pocus" is, President Hoover was guilty of it at his inauguration, according to The Lynn, (Mass.) Unitarian, which said in the recent number:

"Herbert Hoover brings to the presidency a mind trained in the field of science. Yet his first act as chief of this land is one of pure hocus-pocus, an act which cannot possibly have any other significance.

"It is not to be believed that a man of his intelligence and general scientific training is superstitious about Holy Writ. Nevertheless, he kisses it. He even kissed it at a text particularly chosen because it contains something about obeying the law."

But this paper goes to even worse extremes when it finds a parallel between the act and that of a condemned murderer shortly before he was electrocuted.

"It is easy enough to understand why an ignorant, itinerant barber, about to be electrocuted for the murder of a girl, would perform such a superstitious act," the article says. "But it is difficult to think of any good reason why the world's best-known engineer, on his way to the White House, should do the same thing."

It seems to us a great thing that a man about to die for crime should find consolation in the Bible, while at the same time a great, upright man about to take upon him the burdens of a nation of 120,000,000 people should find strength and guidance in the same book. What a wonderful book! It has help for people in every condition of life. We recommend that this Lynn editor and minister read the Bible, which he has probably never done, and find out what his religion has needed all along. —Christian Evangelist.

THE WORLD SEEMS STRANGE WITHOUT F. B. MEYER IN IT

He chose the Easter season to take wing for glory. In the world's life is a vacant place which F. B. Meyer occupied, and it will henceforth pass into eternity unoccupied. But it is full of holy memories and associations. Where in the English-speaking world has there been in the last half century any general movement for a deeper and more genuine evangelical Christianity, which has not derived from him sympathy or his active support a distinct reinforcement? Moody movement, Keswick, Northfield, Bible conferences without number—who can tell all of the places around this world of ours that have been made fragrant and beautiful with the bloom of a gracious eternity that sprang from his footprints? There is no place for a sigh at his departure. Salute him and let him pass. —The Baptist.

LOS ANGELES BIBLE INSTITUTE REVERSES POSITION ON MACINNIS' BOOK

Directors of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles in a recent statement have reversed their position on the book, "Peter, the Fisherman Philosopher," written by Dr. MacInnis, formerly a member of their teaching staff, but who, some months ago, was released because of criticism of the book, which the directors of the institute at that time approved. In their present statement they say: "We hereby express our disapproval of said book, and declare that its thought and teaching does not represent the thinking and teaching of the Bible Institute today; and further, as a first step in the execution of our determination to pursue a course which will put this institute's loyalty to the Bible beyond question, we already have discontinued the use, sale and circulation of the book, 'Peter, the Fisherman Philosopher,' in the Bible Institute or elsewhere, and all remaining copies, together with the type-forms, have been destroyed."

Dr. MacInnis has issued a pert reply. Referring to the fact that they had previously pronounced his book sound and that now they pronounce it unsound, he says: "The book has not changed. We are quite sure God has not changed. The source of the change of front must be sought elsewhere. . . . Why do you not have the courage to say so frankly? In other words, tell the people frankly that you have sold your convictions and Christian freedom for the favor of an extreme group. . . . For the institute I have nothing but sincere pity, for obviously all honor has forsaken its tattered banners and its house is left desolate, because it knew not the day of its visitation."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

BUILDING OBSOLETE NAVIES

Improvements in naval construction have recently come so rapidly that the average taxpayer who pays and pays can not help but wonder just what is the point of building ships that are out of date before they are laid down. All of which would seem to be the case with the American cruisers recently authorized since details of the Er-satz Preussen have come to hand. This German built warship is said to mark an epoch in naval design. Perhaps the most outstanding innovation in her construction is that of welding parts in place of using rivets. But other innovations are almost as significant. And now warships in commission and even those contracted to be built, are out of date before they are started. Why build an obsolete navy?—The Gospel Messenger.

AGAINST CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

It is interesting news that a vigorous campaign against capital punishment is being waged in England. That country has been contrasted with ours to the great discredit of the latter, in the matter of capital crime, and there has been a very general disposition in this country to attribute the difference to the greater efficiency of England in enforcing the laws, including capital punishment. There a murderer stands a very good chance of paying the penalty for his crime within a few weeks, and the practical certainty that he will hang for murder gives the potential murderer pause. If capital punishment should be abolished there, the experiment would be watched with a great deal of interest in this country. It might be found that less crime there is due to the swiftness of punishment rather than to the character of it. There is another interesting thing in connection with the demand for the abolition of the death penalty: Some one said not long ago, that the skepticism concerning immortality was due to a depreciated estimate of the value of human life. If that be true, how is it that there is a growing sentiment against capital punishment? It could hardly be said that a decline of the faith in immortality would give an exaggerated impression of the value of the present life in a way to cause increasing protest against capital punishment.—The Presbyterian Advance.

A BUDDHIST MISSION

Here is something brand new in foreign missions.

A Chinese Buddhist has arrived in New York for the purpose of converting us all to Buddhism. So far, so good. The gentleman is within his rights, and will find no angry mobs seeking to drive him out as a "foreign devil."

But here is the new feature. He is to begin by raising, in New York and in this country generally, a fund of three quarters of a million dollars, to which Chinese Buddhists are to add another quarter million. Admirable! Let these miserable Occidentals furnish their own conversion fund! Why not?

So Chinese Buddhists start out on their work of foreign missions with this original beginning. Occidental Americans are proverbially "easy." Let them contribute first, and afterward get converted in order to get their money's worth. Otherwise the money would be wasted.

If the plan is good, why not ask Buddhists in China to prove it by contributing to the cause of Christian missions in China? It may not be a bad idea.

And it certainly vindicates the reputation of the heathen Chinese for successful high finance in his dealings with the West.—The Living Church.

Our Worship Program

MONDAY

Fruit.—Ezek. 15; John 15:1-8. In these parables of the vine, God teaches that in us dwelleth no good thing. The one thing that makes the vine of value is the fruit it bears, and there is no fruit except as we abide in him. May we, O Father, this day lay aside all pride of self, and may our lives be so deeply rooted in thine that we must bear much fruit. Amen.

TUESDAY

Helpless Babies.—Ezekiel 16; read Rom. 7:18-25. Under the type of the wretched infant who developed into a beautiful young woman because of the love wherewith God loved her, is again pictured the experience of the believer. With nothing of our own to recommend us, he yet loved us, and has given to us all those Christian graces which are ours in Christ Jesus. Let us forget not all his benefits, but rather let us praise him for all his wonderful works unto the children of men.

WEDNESDAY

The Broken Covenant.—Ezek. 17. The children of Israel had been untrue to the covenant which they had made with Babylon, and therefore God could not bless them. When we were baptized into his body, we made a solemn covenant with him, even as a bride to her husband; if we are untrue to that covenant, we cannot hope for his blessing. May we learn faithfulness from the covenant-keeping God who cannot deny himself, but is faithful even when we are unfaithful.

THURSDAY

A God of Justice.—Ezek. 18. I am glad that God has spoken so plainly on a subject so misunderstood. Many believe that God is unjust enough to hold a child responsible for the sins of his forefathers. Undoubtedly there is such a physical heritage, but God is too just to hold any one responsible for the sins of another. More than that, his justice is so tempered with mercy that he forgives me for sins I have myself committed, if I confess them to him. Hallelujah, what a Savior!

FRIDAY

The Lion's Whelps.—Ezek. 19:1-9. The young lions, nourished by their mother, must have presented an awesome sight, as they raged up and down the land in their strength; yet they were readily taken captive, first by Egypt, then by Babylon. How like a man relying upon his own strength and falling into sin, first on the one hand, then on the other! Let us praise him that we may live a life of victory through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

SATURDAY

Promises to Prayer.—Ezek. 20:1-4; Psalm 24. God has not promised to hear everyone who prays. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?" asked the Psalmist—that is, who shall enter into his holy temple, on Mount Zion, to worship him? And the answer: "He that has clean hands and a pure heart." Give us, O Father, cleansed hands and a heart that is perfect toward thee, that we may cry unto thee and know that thou hearest our prayer. Amen.

SUNDAY

Unconcerned!—Ezek. 21:8-10; read Matt. 25:31-46. There is no question that needs greater emphasis today than that asked by Jehovah in Ezekiel 21:10: in view of the coming destruction and judgments, should we then make mirth? It seems to me that many of our churches, forgetful of the fact that men are dying in their sins, and that at best we are living in the last days, are chiefly concerned with providing social entertainment for their people. They are unconcerned! In Matthew 25, our Lord pronounces his judgment upon those who are unconcerned with these vital needs. May we this day realize the seriousness of these great issues, and may we dedicate ourselves wholeheartedly to thine own task—to seek and to save that which was lost. Amen.—T. C. L.

Thoughts on Prayer

By Arthur T. Pierson

There is, at this time, in various lands, a strangely simultaneous turning unto God, in united prayer for world-wide blessing.

It was a wise man who said that "by no political alchemy we can get golden conduct out of leaden instincts;" and another sage, long before him, had rebuked those whose 'golden precepts' were put to shame by their 'Earthen practices.' One wiser than the sons of men, has taught us a divine lesson, that only so far as we abide in him have our prayers prevailing power.

This article has but one object, namely, to lead those who would know the real power and privilege of praying to lay right foundations in a consecrated life, and keep prominently before them the scriptural standard of fellowship with God. Not in vain are we so often reminded that Moses was bidden to make all things according to the pattern shewed him in the mount. Prayer being one of God's choice structures, must follow his own model.

Adolph Monod, in dying, gasped out four brief but telling sentences: "All in Christ—By the Holy Spirit—For the Glory of God—All else is nothing!" Let us try our prayers by such tests. How much of what goes by the name of Prayer, is after all, judged by such standards—nothing!

When Pope Innocent IV, parading the wealth of the church before Thomas Aquinas, said, "You see, we can no longer, with Peter, say, 'silver and gold have I none,' the hermit quickly rejoined—"Nor can you say, like Peter, 'Rise up and walk!'" We have far declined from apostolic poverty, self-denial and worldly reproach, but we have also lost primitive purity, simplicity of faith, and power in Prayer. We need primitive piety revived, even though it brings primitive persecution instead of popularity. If we are to prevail with God and men, the secret of Peniel must be learned anew, even at the expense of a halting and limping gait.

Empowerment means not human equipment but divine endowment. It is possible to be "splendidly equipped" from man's point of view, and yet "magnificently disqualified," in God's estimate. Prayer gives a new vision to the soul, a new contact with God, a new hold upon God; it makes possible a larger recognition of Divine resources, a fuller distribution. There is consequently, says another, "a Prayer Power, defensive, aggressive, Creative."

We must learn to make prayer a business. Carey was once reproached for going about preaching, because it led to the "neglect of his business." "Neglect of my business," responded he, "My business is to extend the kingdom of God; I only cobble shoes to pay expenses meanwhile." Supplication and intercession must be lifted to so high a plane that all lesser interests shall take their proper lower level. Worldliness inverts God's order, and makes the highest things change places with the lowest.

Our purpose and prayer in writing these lines are to help to the reestablishment of God's true order in the life of saints. We must put first things first. If he would but open our eyes to see the value of heavenly treasures and the worthlessness of worldly baubles, the priceless worth of human souls and the divine power of the redeeming blood, it would make us mighty to bring down anew the Heavenly fire and the flood of blessing!

We add a few maxims on prayer suggested both by the teachings of the Word and by the experience of praying saints:—

I. Before making definite choice of an object in prayer consider well whether the Spirit of all Prayer lays it as a burden on your heart. That being clear, "pray without ceasing," till you have the answer, or at least the assurance of answer.

II. Those who deliberately choose for themselves the part of a supplicator and in-

COURAGE

*Courage is not just To bare one's bosom
To the saber-thrust, Alone in daring.*

*Courage is to grieve,
To have the hurt and make
The world believe
You are not caring.*

*Courage does not lie Alone in dying
For a cause. To die
Is only giving.*

*Courage is to feel
The daily daggers
Of relentless steel,
And keep on living.*

tercessor, will study to meet all the conditions of a true channel of blessing, removing all known obstacles either to the inflow or outflow of the Spirit's Fullness. All privileges have their price.

III. Prayer is the very breath of Piety. There is, therefore, no surer index of what you are spiritually, than what, in your inmost self, you most desire and yearn for; and of this the true prayer habit is the natural and a necessary expression.

IV. "Come boldly unto a Throne of Grace." The rent veil has opened to all believers the way to the mercy seat. God is more willing to answer than we are to ask. Let us not interpret beseeching as though it were besieging. We have only to ask and receive.

V. Saints have never yet reached the limits to the possibilities of Prayer. What ever has been attained or achieved has touched but the fringe of the garment of a prayer-hearing God. We honor the riches both of his power and Love only by large demands.

VI. Do not measure the blessing of prayer by feelings. When you feel least like praying, you need it most. Satan uses discouragement and despondency to break up habits of supplication; but a traveler might as well give way to drowsiness and inaction when in danger of freezing!

VII. Prayer is an all inclusive duty. The injunction to "Pray" is at least a seven fold command: it means "acquaint thyself with God," keep thyself in his love, "study to show thyself approved unto God," "Taste and see that the Lord is good," "walk by faith, not by sight," "be careful for nothing," and be a "co-worker together with him."

VIII. True Prayer is seeking first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. It puts first things first, and so, according to his promise, God adds the secondary good, unsought. When we guard his interest, he takes care of ours. Nothing so tends to merge our will unto his as real prayer.

IX. There is great advantage in united prayer. It makes intercession more unselfish. We are prone to give undue emphasis to what personally affects us and our narrow circle of sympathies and interests. To join with other devout souls in prayer enlarges its range and scope and refines its spirit.

X. God uses Intercessory Prayer to comfort and sustain others in great crises. A missionary, being reproached for "burying himself in China," calmly responded that he always felt in any danger or difficulty, "the prayers of two thousand converts holding him up."

XI. A prayerless disciple is an obstacle in the way both of God and man. The barrier to the conversion of men may, in God's sight, be found, not more in their evil heart of unbelief than the unbelief of his own children who have no grip on his promises or power.

XII. Time is not a necessary factor in prayer. Yet it is necessary to take time to pray. A ruffled lake cannot reflect the starry heavens. And a disturbed and restless soul gets little vision of God. We need to wait before him, get calm and quiet. Then, when we realize his Presence, praying becomes natural, as the child asks of his father, who is before him.

XIII. There are scriptural terms of prayer, mainly seven: Abandonment of known sin, a forgiving spirit, unwavering faith, spirituality of motive, in Jesus' name, according to the will of God, and importunity. Compare Psalm 66:18; Mark 11:25; James 1:6, 7; 4:3; John 14:13, 14; 1 John 5:14, 15; Luke 18:1.

XIV. Keep before you the grand leading promises to the prayerful. God's immediate help, the possibilities of faith, and of abiding union with Christ, God's infinite power and riches in glory, rest from anxious cares, and the special promise to those who are in agreement. Compare Isa. 65:24; Mark 9:23; John 15:27; Eph. 3:20; Phil. 4:6, 7, 19; and Matt. 18:19.

XV. Be encouraged by Scriptural Examples of Intercession such as that of Abraham for Sodom, Job for his friends, Moses for Israel, Samuel for Saul and the people, Elijah for the heavenly fire and flood, Daniel for his fellow captives, Paul for Israel and fellow saints, and the great Intercessory Prayer of our Lord. Compare Genesis 18:22, 33; Job 42:10; Exodus 32:30-34, and Numbers 14:11-21; 1 Sam. 7:5-12, and 12:16-25; 1 Kings 18:36-46; Daniel 2:16-23, and 9:3-23; Rom. 9:1-3; 10:1; Eph. 1:15-23; 3:14-21, and John 17.

May the Hearer of Prayer "teach us to pray," and show us that path of Life which leads straight up the shining way to the Throne of grace, "and develop in us this crowning grace of Intercession." Amen!

A TRACT.

Group Discussion Questions

1. Do most girls take friendship in the home for granted just because circumstances placed them there?

2. Does it require just as much positive effort to be friends with one's brothers and sisters as with one's best chum?

3. What are some ways in which we can take our share of the responsibility? In what ways do we add to our mother's work? to her anxiety?

4. What difference does it make whether or not we habitually get up pleasantly in the morning or come in from school in the afternoon?

5. Do we allow mother to wait on us or do we wait on mother? Do we see to it that mother has leisure time to do the things for herself she would like to do? How could we?

6. What are some elements that make for "togetherness," a deepening of love between the members of a family? Would you include in that list the following: sharing of ideals, time, possessions, thoughts, favorite books, good times?

Some one has said that the blossoms of the "togetherness plant" are three in number:

1. Celebrations; birthdays; seasonal holidays; picnics.
2. Secrets—codes over telephone; special names for people and things; code words of warning to avoid dispute or prevent unconscious rudeness.
3. Silliness; jokes; sharing swift silly impulses that keep a tense situation from breaking into quarrels. (See Inch Library—"Being Friends with One's Family.")

What others would you add?

How many of us really know the members of our family and what they care about, what they are interested in? Do we give our parents and brothers and sisters a chance to share their interests with us?

Do we know their favorite books, friends, candy?

Why do some girls seem naturally to talk over everything with their mothers and others tell their mothers very little?

Is the difference in the girls, the mothers, or both? What makes the difference?

In which of the following would our mothers be most interested? Our school success and failures, good times, girl friends, day dreams, boy friends, problems of conduct, compliments, criticisms, ambitions, or disappointments?

Do we usually tell them the things we know would interest them? Why?

What secrets might any girl wisely keep even from her mother?

Does a high school girl need the confidence of her mother in everything or just some things?

Suppose something goes wrong at a party or a dance is it better for her to work it out alone or with her mother?

Which will we usually do? Why not the other? Do we keep or lose friends by this course?

What definite things can any girl do to build and retain the confidence of her mother so that she need never fear misunderstandings?

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

The Early Ministry of Jeremiah

(Lesson for May 12)

Scripture Lesson—Jer. 1:1-10; 6:10, 11; 8:18; 9:2; 26:1-24.

Printed Text—Jer. 1:6-10; 28:8-15.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 26.

Golden Text—We must obey God rather than men.—Acts 5:29.

Introductory Note

The first selection we study today tells of the call of Jeremiah to the work of a prophet. We have already studied the call of Isaiah—and we can see the differences in the method God uses in different cases. Jeremiah tells us that God chose him before his birth for the work he later gave him to do. He was a priest, though there is nothing to indicate that he ever performed priestly functions. His father was Hilkiah, probably the high-priest mentioned in our last lesson. His uncle was Shallum, the husband of Huldah, the prophetess. He had received God's command not to marry, and therefore he was free to devote his entire time and strength to his work as a prophet. (Illustrated Quarterly). In heeding God's call to the prophetic office instead of serving as a priest, he made a great sacrifice. Priests were of the "established order" and served in the temple. They were often honored even above the king as the representatives of God to the nation and they were assured of their living from the tithes and offering which came to the temple services from the people. But the prophet had no such privileges. He had no official standing and no place in the temple services. He must deliver his message wherever he could find a hearing and get his living the best way he could. He spoke on the streets and in the outer courts of the temple and sometimes even from the flat, low housetops.

Jeremiah a Type of Christ

The Illustrator reminds us that the prophet Jeremiah was a type of the Lord Jesus, because Jeremiah suffered and wept so much over the sins of his nation. How much sorrow sin makes in the world! We never can commit sin without causing some one sorrow. "Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God." Jer. 26:13.

One time, a young woman married a man, and then discovered that he was a drinking young man. She felt so ashamed and sorry, that she wished to keep it to herself; she did not even let the servants know of it. When her husband came home drunk late at night, she would get up from bed, put on her slippers and quietly open the door for him, so that the servants would not know what time he came in, or that he was intoxicated. One cold night he came home late, and as she let him in, he swung her out on the steps and closed the door in her face; then he went up to bed. She felt so ashamed that she would not make an outcry. She crouched down in the doorway all night, and was almost frozen. She never told any one of it until she was on her dying bed. She suffered because of his sin. So everything that has been done in the world that was wicked, has caused Jesus suffering. "Christ . . . suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." 1 Peter 3:18. Therefore "arm yourselves likewise with the same mind," 1 Peter 4:1, that is, with the same readiness to suffer in flesh as Christ manifested. "Because he who has suffered in the flesh has done with sin (is at rest from)—that in future you may spend the rest of your earthly lives, governed not by human passions, but by the will of God."—Weymouth.

The Writings of Jeremiah

The book of Jeremiah is in large part subject and not in the order of time. Pro-written in chronological order, though some prophecies are grouped according to their fessor A. B. Davidson divides the book into five sections: prophecies of the reign of Josiah (chapters 1-6), of Jehoiakim (7-20), of Zedekiah (21-38), events after the fall of Jerusalem (39-45), prophecies against foreign nations and historical conclusions (46-51).

Jeremiah's style (Streane) is marked by (1) absence of ornament, a sad and pain-filled simplicity, fitting his themes; (2) frequent repetition, to be expected where the writer is constantly emphasizing one message; (3) frequent correspondences of language and thought with the earlier prophets and the book of Deuteronomy, Jeremiah thus answering his enemies by showing the identity of his message with the messages of those whom they nominally revered; (4) the use of many illustrations, similes, parables, these being often acted out by the prophet.

"Jeremiah's style, however it may form a contrast with that of Isaiah and others, is yet truly poetical."—Streane.

"If we compare Jeremiah's land with the fruitful Carmel and cedar-forests of Isaiah, it is a waste, but a poetic waste, and a true image of the melancholy state of things which lay before his eyes. He is certainly the greatest poet of desolation and sorrow, because he most deeply feels them."—Umbreit.

"The writings of Jeremiah are characterized by great ideas rather than by literary excellence. Although frequently powerful and searching, and not without a certain charm, the style is on the whole diffuse and unadorned. There is no attempt at artistic word-painting."—Fairweather.

"How could he soar, when there was so much to depress his imagination? He at any rate can touch the heart, and is free from affectation. His greatest poem is his own fascinating character."—Cheyne.

"Evil never surrenders its hold without a sore fight. We never pass into any spiritual inheritance through the delightful exercises of a picnic, but always through the grim contentions of the battlefield. Every faculty which wins its spiritual freedom does so at the price of blood."—J. H. Jowett.

In 1882 the export of cocoa from the Gold Coast was valued at $20; today it is valued at $15,000,000.

Before the Moslem invasion, North Africa had 40,000 Christian churches, but in 696 A. D. Moslem Arabs overran the country.

The Berbers, who comprise seventy per cent of the people of North Africa, still have in their folklore stories of the cross of Christ and the Christ of their ancestors. They are therefore more easily reached than other Moslems.

In Egypt, only three women on an average, out of 1,000 can read or write. The deaths of infants under one year of age in Egypt are thirty-one per cent of the total native deaths. One person in every ninety in Egypt is totally blind.

Ignorance, superstition, poverty, neglect, are the inheritance of the pagan African.

Hundreds of thousands of natives are 100 to 200 miles from the nearest trained physician. The "witch doctor" is both physician and priest to the African.

Every Mohammedan trader from the north is a potential missionary for his religion among the Central African blacks.

The white man is in Africa seeking gold, diamonds, ivory, rubber, cotton, hides oils, copper, tin, wool.

Rum and commercialized prostitution are the two blights that the white man has brought to Africa; the latter is far more dangerous than native polygamy.

Three main railroad lines penetrate the heart of Africa; the Cape to Cairo, one from the Indian Ocean on the east, one from the Atlantic by the Congo route.

Three great missionary problems claim the attention and resources of Christianity in Africa: 1. There is the vast Mohammedan population in the north, extremely difficult to reach with the message of Christ. 2. In Central Africa is the vast Negro population, with 800 languages and in thousands of villages. They live in ignorance, superstition and poverty. 3. In the great mining regions of South Africa the Negroes come into closest contact with the worst representatives of so-called European and Christian civilization, and many become physical and moral wrecks. The solution of these problems is to be found in the acceptance of Christ and the application of his principles in the every day life.

Despite the years of work and noble sacrifice of lives, less than two per cent of the vast millions in Africa are members of evangelized churches.—The Missionary Review.

THE PREFECT FURLOUGH

By Rev. James B. Rogers, D.D.,
Manila, Philippine Islands.

It is very delightful to dream about one's coming furlough to the homeland. "My own, my native land" seems very attractive from the other side of the world, and then the thrill when the shores arise and the Golden Gate appears, or perhaps the Statue of Liberty waves a welcome; what missionary has not felt it?

This furlough toward which we have been looking with longings is going to correct all our troubles, is sure to be an unadulterated pleasure and perhaps a panacea for the perplexities that have been with us during the years on the field; but there is a tinge of disappointment in spite of the warmest of welcomes and the most cordial of hospitalities. One is a visitor and has no part in the life of the home and town. He feels rest-

Christian Endeavor at Canton, Ohio

The Christian Endeavor society of the First Brethren church of Canton had 45 members before the division of the society into the Junior, Intermediate and Senior divisions. After this there remained 37 members in the Intermediate group, which age limit is 12 to 21 inclusive.

During the three weeks' revival which was held here, the Endeavorers were divided into two sides, and points were given for the attendance at these meetings. The contest was very interesting and many other folks came because of invitations extended by the members. The sermons were very good and the people came to hear them as well as to help their side. The losing side entertained the winners with a social which was a great success. Now nearly all of the Endeavorers stay for church because of the fine sermons.

We have good workers and fine helpers in our society. Many of our young members are glad to read the Scriptures, answer questions, or give talks on the topics. The programs are carefully planned so that everyone enjoys it and gets their share of good from it. Our Christian Endeavor was asked to take charge of the church services one Sunday evening during the absence of our pastor. We gave a missionary program. The meeting was interesting and well attended. We have no difficulty in getting finances for foreign missions, which was proven by our last Missionary Offering. At Thanksgiving time we took up a donation for the needy and received enough to supply four families each with a basketful of provisions. Visitors are always welcome to attend our meetings which are held in the Christian Endeavor room at 6:15 each Sunday evening.

LEO SAINER, Secretary.

N. B.—Just a word to tell you that our Junior Christian Endeavor was begun April 21st with about 30 in attendance. We felt that was very encouraging. The Senior division has been well attended also, and the organization plans for both societies will be completed within the next few weeks. At present we are simply holding the meetings under the direction of the superintendents, thereby gathering in those who expect to become active members when the final organizations are completed.

Facts About Africa

North Africa (including Egypt) has forty million people, mostly Mohammedans. South Africa has ten million people, many of them nominally, at least, Christian. Between them is the great mass of ninety million blacks of Pagan Africa.

Africa has an area of 11,500,000 square miles, one-fourth the territory of the globe, almost four times the area of the United States.

Africa has three times the area of China, one-third her population, and a far greater wealth of raw material.

The coast line of Africa is equal to the earth's circumference.

Liberia, a Negro Republic, with 2,000,000 people, is three times the size of Holland.

Portuguese East Africa is eight times the size of Portugal; the French Congo is three times the size of France; the Belgian Congo is seventy-nine times the size of Belgium and has twice the population; British East Africa is five times the size of England.

Cairo, Africa's greatest city, has a population of 791,999 and contains 430 Mohammedan mosques.

Half the gold in the world is thought to lie buried in Africa.

The annual output of the Kimberley diamond mines is about $25,000,000, ninety per cent of the world's output of diamonds.

The copper fields of Africa are greater than those of North America and Europe combined and its iron ore exceeds that of North America.

Africa has 800,000 square miles of coal fields hardly touched as yet.

less. The visions of the past do not materialize, and then again, before one went to the field, he could move about readily and freely with no particular ties. A vacation was a time of utter freedom from responsibility, but the furlough vacation carries with it its own responsibilities. The presence of two or three little children in the family curtails that freedom. Shall one roam about the country to leave his wife and babies to get along the best they can? That would be selfish. Furloughs are often a time of the heaviest responsibilities and the greatest cares, so that in planning for a furlough one must take into consideration the fact that all one's responsibilities and all the difficulties of life are in a country where you visit and do not live.

How to get 80% or even greater value out of a furlough is a problem. Perhaps one may say that a perfect furlough does not exist; but there are certain principles which may help the missionary coming home on his furlough and enable him to make the best possible use of his months in the United States.

First of all, a furlough to be worth while should be earned. The Fourth Commandment enjoined six days' solid work as well as one day's thorough rest. One cannot enjoy a vacation unless he can take it with a clear conscience. On the eve of my first furlough I remember the horror of finding myself in my dreams on the streets of New York but with the very bitter consciousness that I had fled from duty.

In the second place, a furlough should be planned for. The vacation months are just as much a part of our service as the years on the field. We must no more think of wasting them than we should think of idling through the years abroad. The duties will be different, responsibilities less; burdens will change, but they will exist. A furlough is a detail. One is transferred from the line to the staff; from the front line to the service of supply. In order to make the best use of these months of furlough one should carefully plan and attempt to fully realize the purpose of the furlough.

In the third place, there is the question of physical recuperation. One's vitality is usually lowered by the climate and environment of the field station. The body is like a storage battery that needs recharging. One must deliberately plan such occupations and such surroundings as will restore lost vitality.

One hardly needs mention the burden of months without definite employment, and no one will confuse rest with laziness. It would be helpful if the field-work during furlough could be done systematically and not spasmodically. One's vitality is often restored as is the battery, by activity and motion. The association with people of his kind, the possibility of being in touch with the great movements of one's own country, the new acquaintanceships one makes and the new friendships, all serve to add to his stock of strength. Deputation work, if wisely done, is not only a benefit to the cause at large but also to the individual who undertakes it. His contact with the church groups of men and women is one of the greatest blessings of the furlough time.

Fourth. Of late years the theory has been advanced that the first term of service is a time of preparation for the fullest work and because this is so, it is the desire of the Mission Boards that the first furlough so far as possible be spent in further study; the physician in Medical College; the evangelist in Theological Seminary; the teacher in a Teachers' College. When the missionary first goes to the field he scarcely knows what form of service he may be best fitted for; his first term teaches him. The furlough should be given to specializing along this line.

Fifth. If possible, it is a good thing for the missionary to spend a few weeks near the Board headquarters. He needs to understand the problems that confront those who are working at the home-base. It gives one a sense of God's presence quite as much as the miracles that we see in our field of work. Another source of inspiration comes from looking back over the term of service just passed. One of the greatest blessings that coming home brings is that of being able from a distance to review the work of the years on the field and to see how God has blessed it.

In conclusion, a furlough is a failure that does not give full opportunity to gain the spiritual blessings that come through association with one's fellow Christians. During my furloughs I have counted it as a matter of great privilege to catch the thrill of the call, to have revived in my heart the lure of the field; then one goes back with new courage, new faith, new power, and his well-earned furlough has been well spent.

So it's home again, and home again,
America for me!

My heart is turning home again,
And there I long to be—
In the land of youth and freedom—
Beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight
And the flag is full of stars.

the efficiency of our choir director and the quality and assiduity of our choir members. The special numbers given at our regular services are an outstanding feature of our church.

The Love Feast following Easter was largely attended and while sickness prevented many of our members from attending, yet almost every place was occupied and all received a blessing.

Maintaining a Sunday school around the 400 mark, five Christian Endeavor societies and a wonderful mid-week prayer meeting and Bible Study class, we are striving to be a gospel light-house in our community.

We are looking forward to revival meetings some time in May, which will be conducted by Brother A. L. Lynn of La Verne, California. Our prayer is that many souls may be saved at this time.

Our first quarterly business meeting of the year shows a gradual increase in our work, a moving forward in the Master's cause. Sixteen have been added to the church since our last report. Our missionary offering taken at Easter time will reach about $900.00.

UNIONTOWN REVIVAL

At Uniontown we found a fine group of loyal Brethren folks. They have faced some trying difficulties in the past several years, but have come out of them with a keen determination to win. Few churches could have come back after such discouragement. After worshipping four years in a school building several blocks from their former location, they have returned and built a new building on the old foundation. It was equal to starting a new work in a new location, but these people are people of vision and ready to sacrifice. The attendance at all services is on the increase. You are going to hear some mighty good things from these folks in the future. It is going to take a lot of hard work on the part of the pastor to get things in shape, but the results are going to be so pleasing that the work will be a joy.

Brother Frank Gehman is in charge of the work at present: (He is one of our young pastors in his first pastorate and from the reports we heard, he is certainly making good. His people have a lot of nice things to tell you about their pastor and express the hope that he will see fit to remain with them.)

We were entertained in the home of Sister Walters, who gave us a delightful room with every convenience. We had the pleasure of visiting Brother Bame in his Mason-town meeting, and on another occasion to be at dinner where Bame, Koontz, Gehman and myself were entertained.

We regret that we were unable to stay longer than two weeks with the Uniontown Brethren. The meeting was just getting underway when we had to close. Folks were coming to the Lord and a real spirit of revival was working among the people. Brethren, pray for this work at Uniontown that they may continue to go forward.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH Los Angeles, California

Our services on Easter Sunday were especially helpful due to the special meetings held on the preceding Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, preparing our minds and hearts for that wonderful day. Our sunrise prayer meeting was well attended, bringing the spirit of our Risen Lord very close to each one of us.

The message of the morning was brought to us through the children's program which was a credit to our Sunday school workers as well as to the children themselves.

The Cantata rendered by the choir was a fitting climax to the day, demonstrating the word of God; and our brother, Mr. Harley Zumbaugh of Tiosa, Indiana, very creditably brought the message in song. These two men make a splendid evangelistic team. The visible results of our meeting were twenty confessions, and an awakening in the spiritual lives of our members.

Ardmore has been making a splendid and commendable growth since its organization eleven years ago. Our present pastor has been with us since October 1st, giving full time to the work. His ability in the pulpit and his Christian sincerity and devotion to his work have won for him the love of our people.

Our Sunday school is growing steadily and our Christian Endeavor society is active. Ardmore has long had a fine group of young people to work with. It was their real delight on the evening of April 12 to be host to the young people of our northern Indiana churches. A banquet was served to 155 people representing our churches in Warsaw, Tiosa, Goshen, Nappanee, Elkhart, Brighton, South Bend, and Ardmore. Vocal and instrumental numbers were given, and Mr. Long of South Bend led in singing "pep" songs. Rev. W. I. Duker was the speaker of the evening. His inspiring address was a plea to our young people to be loyal and true to the ideals of Brethrenism, and to take advantage of the great opportunities being offered at our Brethren Retreat at Shipshewana Lake.

Ardmore hopes to be well represented at the Shipshewana activities this summer. It is our earnest prayer that our church may continue active in the Lord's work and that we may have even better reports for you in the future. ARDMORE SCRIBE.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

"We are glad to report that our pre-Easter revival, continuing two weeks, and which was conducted by our pastor, Rev. E. J. Rohart, was uplifting and inspiring in every way. There were eight (8) confessions by faith, seven (7) were baptized, three (3) more are thinking seriously about it, and one (1) to be received by transfer. The meeting was one of interest and instruction as was proved by the crowded church each night, also a great success and victory was obtained for Christ in spite of all the attempts of our adversary, the devil.

We feel blessed to have for our pastor, Dear Brother Rohart, and wife, whose sweet Christian lives and faith have been a help not only to the Brethren congregation, but to the whole community. "There is nothing that makes men rich and strong but that which they carry inside of them."

MRS. W. H. RITENOUR, Secretary.

NEWS FROM TURLOCK BRETHREN CHURCH

It has been some time since the readers of The Evangelist have heard from the work at Turlock, our pastor, Brother Jennings, having sent in only one report since he has been serving us. We might explain the long silence by saying, that we have been so busy accomplishing real things that we did not realize so much time had elapsed. In this report I hope to pass on to you some of the outstanding work that has been done in the past year and a half since Brother and Sister Jennings came to work in our midst. The Turlock Brethren church has shown a very definite growth, not only in point of numbers but in the enlargement of the church edifice. With so efficient and spiritual a leader, almost every member of the church has been inspired with a new vision of what can be accomplished if there is a spirit of oneness and a faith to believe that, "he will supply all our needs."

As the space for the Bible school work has, for some time, seemed inadequate, to do really efficient work, we found it necessary to make plans, whereby we could relieve the congestion of overcrowded rooms. With that thought in mind, after much prayerful and untiring effort, we decided to build an annex at the rear of the present building. Plans were drawn, and with very little exception almost the entire amount of money necessary to cover the cost of construction, was subscribed before the work was begun.

This annex which has a floor space measuring thirty by thirty-six feet, may be made a part of our present Sunday school room by the use of four large folding doors. We not only felt the need of this room for Sunday school purposes, but that we might have a place for the social activities of the church.

By March tenth, the room being ready for use and other changes having been completed, we arranged for dedication services. Three weeks previous to this, Brother Jennings conducted an evangelistic campaign, which not only reached the unconverted but was a real spiritual feast to all who availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing his inspiring messages. There was a number of fine confessions and such an increase in spirituality among the members of the church that we feel that God has very richly blessed us, and to him we ascribe all the honor and glory. The dedication service was a fitting climax to this season of worship. An all day service was held on March tenth. Brother Roger Darling, who for twelve years had served as our pastor, delivered three addresses which were appropriate to the occasion and full of truth and spirit from the word of God. There was a real spiritual feast as well as a feast of temporal things. The ladies of the church served dinner at noon to approximately two hundred people. Special music was arranged for all the services, in fact, nothing was left undone, that it was within our power to do, to make the day a day of real dedication of our church and ourselves to God.

We would not fail to mention at this time, the splendid cooperation given, and the sacrifices made by our young people's class and their teacher, Brother Kenneth Ronk. With a vision of having some very definite part in the work of making our church more attractive, they saw the need of redecorating the main auditorium. With that objective in view, the required amount of money was raised and the work placed in the painter's hands. We deeply appreciate the stability of these fine young people and the unselfish spirit manifested in this labor of love for the beautifying of God's house.

On Easter Sunday an appropriate program was given by the children, during the Sunday school hour. In the evening the young people's class presented a very beautiful pageant, entitled "The Cross Triumphant," which portrayed most forcibly the dynamic lifting power of the Cross of Calvary. Again may we express our pride and joy in a body of young people, who are so willing to give of their time and talents in such a glorious manner.

Realizing that greater blessings come to us if we are willing to share those blessings, we freely gave our pastor permission to spend two weeks in Kerman, California, where he held evangelistic services from March seventeenth to the thirty-first. He reported splendid meetings, with very gratifying results. We are happy to have him home again, but most thankful that he was able to give spiritual help and guidance to others who need strengthening.

To our Heavenly Father, who hears our prayers, to the Son who ever intercedes for us and to the Holy Spirit which dwells within, we lift our hearts in praise and thanksgiving for the many blessings which have been bestowed upon us. May we show ourselves worthy of them.

(MRS.) CLARA POWELL LUNDAHL,
Correspondent.

NEWS FROM THE NORTHWEST

In response to the request of our good editor we shall endeavor to report the Lord's work entrusted to our care. The months past have been busy ones for us all, but not without their victories. On last Lord's Day eight persons received the rite of baptism and will all be added to the church. Some of these confessions were received in our revival and the other came at regular services since. There are as many awaiting the rite yet.

On Thursday evening of the Passion Week the Philathea class of the Bible school, a class of young ladies taught by Mrs. Grisso, gave a missionary program to an appreciative audience. This same program was given at Harrah two weeks later.

The various organizations of the church are functioning nicely in their respective fields of activity. The woman's Missionary Society is again affiliating with the National Organization with splendid results. Thus far all goals have been met and it promises to be one of the really strong organizations of the church. Mrs. Don Hadley is president of this organization.

This church is also sponsoring four Christian Endeavor Societies—Junior, Intermediate, Young Peoples and Alumni. The two latter ones have recently been started and are proving their worth in a very great way. We are also maintaining a Junior church with Mrs. Henry Kortemeier as Superintendent.

The Bible school under the direction of Rev. E. W. Reed is keeping up splendidly. Many things have hindered in our attendance during the winter and early spring, but now things are coming back to normal again. Brother Reed is also conducting a union Bible class in the town with a marked interest.

Our worship services are largely attended and are growing in power and interest on the part of the community in general. One peculiar feature is that we have larger audiences for the worship hour than what we have in the Bible school.

At a recent business meeting attended by more than one hundred and fifty persons the pastor was extended a call for another year's service. We believe that this will be our best year of service. While more than three score persons have been added to the body of believers during the present pastorate, the future bids fair for greater victories. At this same meeting a committee was named to invite the Church of the Brethren to unite with us in union Sunday evening services throughout the summer. If our plans in this materialize it will be a step in the right direction to bring about a closer cooperation between these two bodies here.

An encouraging feature of our work is the host of young people that are ever loyal to the work in every way. It would make any pastor's heart rejoice to see so many of them in the worship services. The pastor has been asked to deliver the Baccalaureate sermon this year. We are also editing the Bible school lesson each week for one of the local newspapers. This is an entirely new feature for a local paper and there are many words of appreciation for this service.

From all that has been said thus far we would not desire that any should infer that the work here is without its difficulties. As Brother Lowman says, "some folks are never quite satisfied with anything." To preach a "whole Gospel" in these days will necessarily bring some opposition as it ever has. The adversary never sleeps, he has many ways of working. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory. No trick of Satan can overthrow the Lord's work. "He that is in us is greater than he that is in the world."

The work at Harrah, where the writer ministers each Wednesday evening in spiritual things, is moving along splendidly. Their Bible school is a real force in the community and is lingering about the one hundred mark. They are anxiously awaiting the arrival of their new pastor, Brother Fred Kinzie, of Krypton, Kentucky, who is expected to arrive in the valley about July 1.

In conclusion I should like to speak a word of appreciation of the work of our editors of the Brethren Evangelist and our Bible school literature. Surely our entire brotherhood ought to be appreciative of the very high class of literature that is being provided our churches, and out of this appreciation use every opportunity in speaking a word for it and seeing that it be placed in the homes and in every Brethren Bible school in the land. I am sure that these who are giving their lives to this work need our sympathy and our encouragement and our support. Yes, and they need as little criticism as is possible for us to give.

We rejoice for all the victories that have been wrought throughout the brotherhood. We ask an interest in the prayers of all his faithful ones for his work here in the Northwest. May we have no other purpose than to be true to the Great Head of the Church in all things, even till he comes. We still believe Romans 8:28. We are your servant, under the Precious Blood.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The following is a reprint from "The Fayette Tribune," Fayetteville, West Virginia, under date of April 17, 1929:

In the quarterly business meeting of the Oak Hill Brethren church last Thursday night, Rev. Freeman Ankrum was given a call to continue the work for the next pastoral year commencing September 1. This will be the beginning of the seventh year of his pastorate in Oak Hill.

During this pastorate the parsonage, an all modern brick bungalow was built, many members have been added to the church and in 1928 the splendid modern brick building in which they now worship, was built on the site of the old frame building that was torn down to make way for the new. The years have been marked by hearty cooperation and a harmonious working together that has made possible the strong church as it stands today in Oak Hill. The work from every angle, is better today than it ever was in the history of the congregation. Rev. Ankrum is the only man to be pastor of this church for more than a couple or more years with the exception of the late Rev. A. B. Duncan, founder of the church, who was pastor for 10 years.

Rev. Ankrum was granted a three weeks' vacation that will be spent in the Middle Atlantic states in July.

The church is now planning on entertaining the conference of the southeastern district of Brethren churches June 11-13. Delegates will be here from Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee and Washington, D. C.

RESIGNS FROM LOS ANGELES BIBLE SCHOOL

The Brethren church has had a peculiar interest in the Bible Institute of Los Angeles because of the comparatively large number of our young people who have taken its training. A number of people in the churches have been writing to inquire about the situation here and my own attitude toward it. The following copy of my resignation, tendered last month, will answer these inquiries at least partially.

Alva J. McClain.

(COPY)

March 27, 1929.

To the Board of Directors of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles:

I hereby tender my resignation from the Faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, to take effect upon June 12th, 1929. This step is being taken because I cannot agree in all parts with the Boards' final statement regarding the book, "Peter, the Fisherman Philosopher." That particular part of the statement to which I object in its present form reads as follows:

"—its thought and teaching does not represent the thinking and teaching of the Bible Institute today."

Now it is well known that the "thought and teaching" of the Bible Institute is set forth in a formal Statement of Doctrine which includes the fundamental truths of Christianity. To declare without any qualification, therefore, that the "thought and teaching" of the book in question does not represent the "thinking and teaching" of the Bible Institute is to deny all agreement between this book and the fundamental truths of the Christian faith.

Such an unqualified declaration, in my judgment, cannot be justified. That there are parts of the book which do not represent the Institute's real position, I have asserted more than once during our many discussions in attempting to formulate a statement which would be true to the facts. But, even admitting the most extreme criticisms, there still remains Christian truth in the book. If this has ever been denied by anyone, I am not aware of it. I cannot join, therefore, in such an unqualified repudiation of the "thought and teaching" of this book.

I would be the last to take a stand against the Board's judgment merely because of an inadvertent form of words. But the particular declaration to which I object was not adopted by the Board hastily. More than once its unqualified form was brought to the Board's attention and protested by myself and others. I also pleaded for the introduction of some qualification into the statement, if any were intended. The fact that the Board declined to do this fixes the intended meaning beyond dispute. Hence I have declined to assent to the statement in its present unqualified form.

The Board will recall that I have not been opposed to an official statement dealing with the book in question. The form of statement which I suggested, at the Board's request, reads as follows:

1. We desire to reaffirm our belief in the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity as expressed in the Statement of Doctrine of the Bible Institute.

2. Because we earnestly desire our testimony and teaching of these doctrines to be absolutely clear and above suspicion, we are led to express our disapproval of the book, "Peter, the Fisherman Philosopher," and to discontinue its use, sale and circulation in the Bible Institute and elsewhere.

I am sorry that some such statement as this was not adopted instead of the present one which, in its unqualified form, I regard as a mistake. However, I am not unmindful that other mistakes have been made in the Bible Institute. "In many things we all stumble." The School has survived the mistakes of the past, and I am confident that it will also rise above this latest one.

I hope the Board will sometime see fit to rescind at least part of their present statement. According to its declaration, no teacher will be elected to the Faculty unless he is willing to repudiate without qualification the "thought and teaching" of the book in question. Now there are Christian teachers, thoroughly sound in the faith, whom the Board might sometime desire to consider, but who have never even read this book. It seems unfortunate that the orthodoxy of such men should be determined by their willingness or unwillingness to disavow without qualification the teaching of a book concerning which there has been wide disagreement even among the critics as to its real meaning.

The Bible Institute has a very complete Statement of Doctrine which all teachers are required to sign upon coming to the School and every year thereafter. This solemn pledge should be sufficient. If it be said that some one may sign this Statement with mental reservations, the answer is that such a man would not hesitate to sign any number of other statements with the same reservations.

In this connection, I am sincerely glad to note that "complete harmony" with the Board's present declaration regarding the book has not been made a condition of election for Board members and members of other departments of the Institute staff outside the Faculty.

I love the Bible Institute and shall continue to pray for its welfare and success. For me, no other attitude is possible toward the School in which I began preparation for the Christian ministry, and which was founded upon the great truths of the Word of God which I believe with all my heart.

It is with genuine regret that I offer this resignation. Several times the thought has arisen that I might have saved myself much distress and misunderstanding had I resigned when the book first appeared, as I then felt strongly inclined to do. It seemed right at the time, however, in response to the urgent appeals of the Board, to stand by the School. The experiences of the past year have been difficult at times, but they are not worthy to be compared with the joy I have found in Christian fellowship with the Faculty and the students.

May our great God and Savior bless them all and guard them unto the Day of His Appearing.

Finally, I desire to express my appreciation for the Board's courtesy during our many conferences, and also for their confidence as expressed to me by the President following our last meeting.

Sincerely,

ALVA J. McCLAIN.

P. S. I have suggested June 12th as the date upon which this resignation shall become effective because that is the close of my teaching year, according to agreement when I joined the Faculty; and also because I would like to keep faith with the student body.

ANSWERED PRAYER

The inquiry, "Does the Lord answer prayer?" is an ever-recurring one. There is no question about the fact that God promises to answer prayer. But a prayer may be answered when to us it seems to be denied. We cannot understand God by short visions. The eternities are his, and many a prayer is answered when the man himself has gone home to God. Sometimes prayer is answered by denying the thing we seek because we are not wise in the asking. At the close of each prayer there must be a leaving the matter with God, for his will is best because he knoweth all. A devout woman in Scotland prayed that her son might become a gospel minister. It was her heart's desire and she prayed to heaven with all the concentration of her soul for this boon. The young man answered her prayer by starting to get ready for the ministry. Before his preparation was complete he came to the conclusion he was not intended to preach and he entered into business and became a banker. But he continued a deeply pious man, fulfilling all his obligations most carefully. In the course of time he amassed a great deal of money and died rich. The mother's prayer seemed to have gone unanswered, but when her son's will was read it was found that he had left his large fortune for the endowment of a theological seminary, which is now the Kentucky Theological Seminary of our own country. So that by this not one minister but many were given to the world to preach the gospel of Christ. The mother's request was not granted, but her prayer was answered in a most wonderful way. So it may be with our prayer. We may have to feel the disappointment of the granting of our special request, but in a larger way God may answer our prayer.

After all, prayer is more an atmosphere than it is a begging for the thing we want, and if we live in fellowship with God so that we become intimate with him, there is about us the atmosphere of prayer all the time and we will walk with him and we will talk with him and out of the fellowship of such kindred spirits will come the answered prayer. We do not have to tell the mother all we need or be constantly suggesting to her our needs. We only need to keep the fellowship and mother and child will live in an atmosphere where the mother shall know the child's need and answer the child's prayer, even though it be unspoken.

It is a splendid practice to ask oneself now and then: "Do I really pray? Am I living in such fellowship with God that he knows me and I know him? And in the interchange of a perfect understanding on both sides all things will come to me that are best according to his holy will."—The Methodist Protestant.

"AND WHEN THEY CAME THAT WERE HIRED ABOUT THE ELEVENTH HOUR, THEY RECEIVED EVERY MAN A PENNY."

The gracious Lord will deal likewise with those who serve him in love and truth. It is not how much we do, but how well we serve. The last are treated the same as the others. He, the Searcher of hearts, will have great mercy toward all who truly love and serve him.

For Service

*"Tis not how much we shine;
But rather how our light
Shines on some darkened way
And makes it bright."*

*"Tis not how much we tell;
But, rather, how our voice,
Love-filled, will lead to life
And heavenly choice."*

*"Tis not how wide our name
Is flung with Honor's dart;
But, rather how our life
Will cheer the heart."*

*"Tis not how wide our name
Or strong our selfish will;
But, rather, can we live
A helper, still?"*

except the appeal of the Cross, and what the appeal of the Cross does beget is a life which, in its moral quality, corresponds to the Death of Christ itself. It is a life to which sin is all that sin was to Christ—law, and holiness, and God, all that law and holiness and God were to Christ as he hung upon the tree; a life which is complete and self-sufficing, because it is sustained at every moment by the inspiration of the Atonement."

"This is why St. Paul is not afraid to trust the new life to its own resources, and why he objects equally to supplementing it by legal regulations afterwards, or by what are supposed to be ethical securities beforehand. It does not need them, and is bound to repel them as dishonoring to Christ. To demand moral guarantees from a sinner before you give him the benefits of the Atonement, or to impose legal restrictions on him after he has yielded to its appeal, and received it through faith, is to make the Atonement itself of no effect. St. Paul, taught by his own experience, scorned such devices." (331-33).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

that "Candidates for the Gospel Ministry shall be called by the congregation at a regularly appointed quarterly or business meeting, and the results of said election shall be transmitted to the District Conference through the officers presiding at said election."

The remainder of Section IV describes in detail how Church officials shall be elected and certificated.

Section V provides that "A candidate for the ministry, (that is, a candidate for ordination to the eldership), may preach the Gospel while pursuing his course of preparation at such times and places as he may have opportunity."

I have taken more than my allotted space to answer this question in full and hope it may prove helpful and to the profit of all who may read it.

Symbol of Eternal Goodness

Mothers' Day Meditation*

To our mothers, we go through life surrounded by the light that illumined our childish faces; they always see us through this early enchantment. If they could, they would keep us eternally young. As Joshua halted the sun over the plain of Gibeon, so they would arrest above us the smile of the morning. But since they cannot check the changes of life, they shelter their dream in a changeless heart.

Even under the features of the degraded man the mother sees those of the innocent child, and for love of the child she pardons the man. It is nothing that we are big or old or ugly, that our locks are thin and our faces careworn; our mothers still picture us on their knees; we have blonde ringlets, and they are twenty.

Age makes no change in us, time can do nothing, no more can death. To our mothers we are never dead. So the love of father and mother, that faithful and unalterable tenderness, is even the symbol, in this passing world, of the Eternal Goodness.—Charles Wagner.

MAN and the Brute

Many readers of this column have doubtless seen that little Japanese ornament which is often used as a decorative paper-weight, three monkeys sitting together, one with his eyes covered, another with hands over his mouth, and the other with ears steppod. The idea is that these three little monkeys hear no evil, see no evil, and speak no evil.

A writer in a leading western newspaper facetiously observes that no human descendants of these particular monkeys have ever been discovered.

There is some very profound truth in this observation. The writer of it has hit upon a fundamental difference between man and the animal world. The beast neither hears, sees, nor speaks evil. The very word "evil" indicates a problem which does not exist for the animal, namely, the problem of morality. No dog ever brought back a stolen bone because his conscience troubled him. No monkey ever repented of his sins. As a matter of fact, no animal is capable of committing "sin," in the ethical sense of that term. In the physical world, man alone is capable of "moral evil."

It is this awful possibility, for one thing, that puts an unbridgeable chasm between man and the brute. Man can do some things that no animal can do. If you do not believe this statement, go back and read the record of the Loeb and Leopold and Northcott cases.

You can teach the parrot to repeat evil words, but you cannot train a parrot to "speak evil." No animal can deliberately and with predetermined malice poison minds and destroy reputations under the guise of pious intention. Only men can do that. "For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil full of deadly poison." (James 3:7-8). Here is one difference, at least, between man and the animal.

EINSTEIN'S "god"

Professor Einstein, famous for his relativity theory of the universe, has been accused of atheism by a Roman Catholic Cardinal. This charge is indignantly denied by a Jewish Rabbi who claims that the great physicist believes in God. Einstein's own version of the matter is that he believes in the god of Spinoza, the noted Jewish philosopher.

Now theoretically, the Jewish Rabbi is right. But practically the Catholic Cardinal has the best of the argument. For the man who believes in the god of Spinoza might just as well say that he believes in no god. Spinoza was perhaps the most thorough-going Pantheist that ever lived; to him nothing existed but God. Therefore, technically speaking, Spinoza was no atheist. But mark well, this god of philosopher was identical with the world. Actually then, from the Christian viewpoint, Spinoza was no better than an atheist. The Pantheist has nothing more than the rankiest materialist. Both the Materialist and the Pantheist start with the same world. Neither of them admits the existence of anything outside or above the world. The only difference between them is that the Materialist looks at the world and calls it "Matter," while the Pantheist looks at the same world and calls it "God." It is merely a matter of calling the same thing by different names.

Two little boys were riding tandem on a broomstick. One of them got tired and said, "It ain't nothing but a stick of wood." The other boy, being more of an idealist, replied indignantly, "It is too. It's a horse." Here you have in embryo the only essential difference between the Materialist and the Pantheist. The one has more imagination than the other. But both deal with precisely the same object. The whole controversy between the Materialists and the Pantheists is nothing more than a case of "verbalism."

The God of the Christian is not Einstein's "god." We believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth. Our God is in the world as its sustaining power, but he is also beyond and above the world, distinct from the world.

THE Coming "Superman"

Dr. Oscar Riddle, speaking at the annual meeting of the American Philosophical Society, made the startling prediction that science would soon be able to manipulate the processes of nature so as to produce different types of "supermen." Some men, he said, will be made giants physically. Others will be produced with an "overpowering intellect." It was even suggested that science will be able to develop human beings who will be incurably optimistic! (We already have some of these).

Doubtless, most of these predictions are rather speculative. The Christian, however, will recall that the Bible does predict the coming of a "Superman" at the end of time. So great he will be that "All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb." (Rev. 13:8). This "Superman" will be Satan's great masterpiece for the purpose of deceiving those who have rejected the truth.

Perhaps Satan will employ the discoveries of an atheistic science in the bringing forth of his "Superman." Who knows?

WHAT GREAT MEN AND WOMEN HAVE SAID ABOUT MOTHERS

Somebody prays for a boy astray,
Afar from home, at close of day,
Somebody loves him, in spite of sin,
Somebody seeks his soul to win,
Would give her all, his soul to win;
That somebody is mother.

Somebody's heart is filled with joy,
To meet a penitent, erring boy,
To know her prayers were not in vain,
To welcome home her boy again,
In spite of every sin and stain;
That somebody is mother.

—Richard Jones.

"A man may go over all the world; he may become a pirate, if you please; he may run through every stage of belief and unbelief; he may become absolutely apostate; he may rub out his conscience; he may destroy his fineness in every respect; but there will be one picture that he cannot efface; living or dying there will rise before him, like a morning star, the beauty of that remembered goodness which he called 'mother.'"—H. W. Beecher.

"The happiest part of my happy life has been my mother."—Phillips Brooks.

"All that I am or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother."—Abraham Lincoln.

"I am more indebted to my mother than to all others except my God."—Mary Lyon.

"Mother! Her love and mindfulness have never failed me. I am as sure to have them as I am to have the sunshine, air to breathe, or God's mercy."—Frances E. Willard.

"Every man for the sake of the great blessed Mother in Heaven, and for the love of his own little mother on earth, should handle all womankind gently, and hold them in all honor."—Alfred Tennyson.

"Mother is the truest friend we have."—Washington Irving.

"I owe to my mothers' loving wisdom all that was bright and good in my long night."—Helen Keller.

"I remember my mother's prayers and they have always followed me. They have clung to me all my life."—Abraham Lincoln.

"In the memory she stands apart from all others, purer, doing more, and living better than any other women."—Alice Cary.

"All that I am my mother made me."—John Quincy Adams.

In the Heavens above,
The angels, whispering to one another,
Can find, among their burning terms of love,
None so devotional as that of "mother."
—E. A. Poe.

"Mother is the name for God in the lips and hearts of little children."—Thackeray.

"A mother is a mother still—the holiest thing alive."—Coleridge.

"One good mother is worth a hundred school masters."—George Herbert.

"An ounce of mother," says the Spanish proverb, "is worth a pound of clergy."—T. W. Higginson.

Cooperating with Mother in Home-making

Mother is the supreme home-maker. She has both the spirit and the knack, as well as the responsibility of home-making in a unique degree. Her hands make the home attractive. Her skill and understanding make its meals appetizing and wholesome. Her thoughtfulness is usually responsible for the little plans for home activities and programs that make for home interest and pleasure. Her anxious concern seeks the welfare of every member of the household and her sympathy is the first aid to every hurt. Her love and sacrifice give character and spirit to the home and make it a place to be prized above every other place on earth. No one can compare with her in power to influence the home, and in responsibility for moulding its life and making it what it ought to be.

But mother needs help in home-making, and has a right to expect it. While she is the first in influence and in responsibility in actual home-making, she is not alone; it is a cooperative task and every one who shares in its life, must contribute his share. That is a thing that we do well to take note of on this occasion set apart for the honoring of mother.

We are apt to let the burden rest too heavily upon her, or to let her bear the whole of the responsibility. Husbands and children alike are inclined to become so engrossed in their outside interests, that they forget that mother needs their help, and that they have a duty to perform. And what is worse, they often come to look upon the multitude of things she does for them as simply their due; they receive them as a matter of course, with little thought of gratitude and no effort to requite her kindness. In many a home mother is looked upon as little more than a servant. Her task is to take care of the home, to prepare its meals and to meet the sundry needs of the various members of the household, so they think; and it never seems to occur to those on whom she lavishes her care, that she too has a hunger for social affairs, that she is interested in sports and play, or that she has a taste for cultural activities. They accept her services and then rush on to their diversions without her, instead of helping her in her home duties and then sharing with her their own pleasure-giving and self-improving activities.

Many a mother labors on lone-handed and uncomplaining, while others become weary with disappointment and speak out their protest. Some of us are so thoughtless and seemingly unconcerned about mother's lot, and so blind to our own responsibilities to the task of home-making, that we need the impassioned protest of a wearied mother to arouse us to a sense of our duty. Helen Gregg Green, writing in the Reformed Church Messenger, comments on such a protest which appeared in a popular magazine recently. It was a letter written by a woman past fifty, the mother of several children, we are informed. She was discouraged and worn out, mentally and physically, with her years of responsibility and work.

"We are to blame for many of our troubles," the letter read. "We ask nothing in return for our labors but the pleasure of our dear ones; it is a great mistake.

"We teach them from babyhood to take our services as a matter of course, and by the time we realize what we have done, we are too tired and worn out to care; and it does not pay."

This is only part of the soul-revealing letter, but in it there is food for thought and study, and a warning to young mothers—a warning to begin with the just-around-the-corner-from-babyhood days to give the children small duties and small responsibilities, so that the burden which usually falls to the mother's lot may be lessened. When boys and girls discover how much actual labor there is connected with a house they realize the great help they may be to Mother.

So many mothers will continue taking the entire responsibility for running a house smoothly and efficiently year in and year out. The only sign of protest they ever make is a weary little "I'm a bit tired" at night, without ever a heart-to-heart talk with the family asking for cooperation.

The piping-hot breakfasts, the dainty, wholesome lunches and delicious dinners, the cozy, cheery, neat home, are taken as a matter of course. Children who have had no experience in doing household tasks do not realize the effort, time and hard work back of it all. It looks so easy, so simple.

And who is to make them realize and appreciate, if not the parents? It is not fair to the "dear ones" to allow them to take all this for granted.

"If we allow ourselves to be left behind, if we work so hard we are too tired to take part in the daily lives of our children and husbands," the letter continued, "they simply learn to do without us."

Isn't there a lot of truth tucked away in those words? Shouldn't they make all mothers who have tiny children think?

I remember a certain Thanksgiving that shames and grieves me. We did not have a maid, so Mother cooked and served a delicious Thanksgiving dinner for two guests, and our own family. After dinner the guests, my father and I hurried down town for an afternoon's merry-making, leaving Mother who was not strong to clear off the table and do the stacks of dishes. Mother was the one who deserved and should have had the happy afternoon. And now that I have come to a realization of the many sacrifices she made and have learned how much help I could have been and would like nothing better than to lighten her burdens, it is too late.

That is what the writer of the letter suggested:

"And by the time they marry and have children of their own, and learn from experience what life means, and what children mean in a mother's life perhaps it is too late; you may have passed on, and if not, it is still rather difficult to teach old dogs new tricks!"

So the wives and mothers must remedy this. They should commence with the husbands at marriage, and with the children in their very early years. It is really very easy to teach the children to hang up their wraps, to run errands, to keep their rooms tidy, and to do the hundred and one other little things which inculcate in them the habit of service and the sense of responsibility.

A mother, like a child, needs understanding, love and play. She should share these and also her household cares with the family. This would make happier, sweeter-tempered, younger and more charming mothers the country over, and better and happier boys and girls.

American Churches Grow in Membership

Dr. H. K. Carroll has brought out his annual statistical analysis of the church situation, appearing in the Christian Herald of April 20th. His figures show a net gain of more than a million during 1928, the actual number being 1,114,987. Last year the total clear gain, as shown by Dr. Carroll's statistics, was 573,000, so that the gain revealed this year is nearly double that of last year. This is indeed cause for rejoicing. And it is encouraging to note that our Brethren church and the Church of the Brethren contributed their share to the total gain. The annual gain in our own group according to these figures is 974, and for the larger Dunker group the gain is 2,103. The other two groups show no gains; in fact, it seems that they made no report for this year, as the space for gains or losses is left blank. The total number of Dunker people is 165,111, which puts the family group the eleventh in point of size. Following is a table showing the groups of churches of the same name and family:

If the various church families were united, as most of them are now longing to be, it will be seen that Christendom would not be so badly split up as it has seemed to be. Fourteen or fifteen denominations of considerable size would not be cause for any great complaint from the standpoint of division. It is not likely that we can reasonably hope for any more complete organic union than the merging of those groups having marked similarities, but it does seem highly desirable that they should become united to that extent. Sentiment is growing along that line very rapidly, and let us pray and work to the end that the Dunker groups shall not be the last to realize the folly and sin of division, where no vital principle is at stake.

The grand total of church membership, including Jews and Catholics, is placed at 49,709,150, while the total number of ministers is 222,202 and the total congregations is 238,371. The gain in number of ministers is 4,998, and the total number of new congregations is 2,380.

It will be noticed that not half of the population of the United States has membership in some church or religious organization. But that does not mean that more than half of the population is pagan, or unbelievers, or irreligious. Nor is that vast number untouched by any religious instruction or influence. There are a great many Sunday school children, and adults as well, who are not church members, and so are not included in these statistics. Besides there are very many people who believe in Christ and are religiously inclined, but are not church members, and many more who have been church members at some time but are not now affiliated with any congregation, and so are not included in these statistics. In making a religious canvass of a community one is made to realize how difficult it is to find people who do not claim membership in some church somewhere. Taking all these items into consideration, we are safe in saying that the vast majority of the American people are religious, and even Christian, nominally at least. This does not mean that there is not a very great amount of Christianizing and evangelizing work facing the church, but it does mean that the country is very much more Christian, nominally speaking, than Dr. Carroll's total of church members would seem to indicate.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Communion services will be held at Ankenytown, Ohio on Sunday evening, May 12th, and at Danville, Ohio, on Sunday evening, May 19th. Brother D. B. Flora, the pastor, will officiate.

Sister Hattie Cope Sheldon gives us the first installment of a record of the journey homeward of herself and Brother Sheldon to begin their first furlough. We shall be interested in the subsequent installments.

The church at Columbus, Ohio, where Brother R. E. Gotschall is the aggressive pastor, has suffered considerably because of illness, the pastor himself being the greatest sufferer. He has recovered sufficiently, however, to occupy his pulpit.

Brother R. I. Humbert writes an appreciation of the splendid service being rendered by and the exemplary lives of Brother and Sister G. E. Drushal, our pioneer missionaries in Kentucky. They have truly been sacrificing and consecrated workers of the Lord and have a large place in the affections of the brotherhood.

The church at Ellet, Ohio, will observe the communion service on Monday night, May 13th. Neighboring Brethren are invited. This will be the first service of the kind in their new church. Their revival meeting under the leadership of Brother B. F. Owen will come to a close on the Sunday night preceding, according to word from the pastor, Brother Floyd Sibert.

Our correspondent from the church at Harrah, Washington, writes encouragingly of the work at that place, notwithstanding their being without a pastor for several months. Nine souls are reported added to the church. Brother F. V. Kinzie is on his way west by auto to take charge of the church. Meantime Brother C. C. Grisso from Sunnyside is giving this mid-week services.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter, pastor of the churches at Burlington and Loree, Indiana, tells us the work in his circuit is making steady progress. At Loree a revival held by the pastor resulted in one addition to the church. The church basement is being remodelled in the interest of better Sunday school equipment. At Burlington a ten piece Sunday school orchestra has been organized.

In the statement of the Pennsylvania Ministerial Examining Board in last week's paper there occurred an omission in the third paragraph. The action was taken "Upon the recommendation of the Official Board of the Pittsburgh church and the Ministerial Examining Board of the Pennsylvania Conference." The words in bold face type were omitted in our publication. We are sorry for this error and make the correction in the interest of accuracy.

The church at Lanark, Illinois, having been released from their ten weeks of ice and snow, is now showing more activity, according to our correspondent. Special occasions are being planned with a view to enthusing the membership. Improvements in the parsonage indicate the people's interest in the welfare of their pastor and family. Brother Harold D. Fry, the pastor, has been called for another year of service.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives us another report of White Gift offerings, which brings the total up to $4,400. The good gifts reported this week should be encouraging to the Association, both because of their size and also because of the evident unwillingness of the schools in question to be left out of the support of the work this organization is doing. Perhaps there are yet others.

Dr. J. L. Kimmel, pastor of the church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, believes in the slogan, "Never give up," for when he was apparently defeated in an evangelist effort by weather and sickness, he postponed it a few weeks and tried again with new plans and succeeded. Seven additions to the church are reported. Communion was observed with an unusually large attendance. Effort is being made to liquidate the debt on their building.

Brother E. M. Riddle, president of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor organization writes a message to Endeavorers this week. A new Junior society has been organized at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. The date of the International Christian Endeavor Convention to be held at Kansas City is announced for July. Let us have more society reports. Tell us what your society is doing. Some mention may have been made of it by your church correspondent in a general report, but it will be an encouragement to other societies as well as to your own if you make a special report.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, tells of the dedication of a new Sunday School Annex, which was made by the remodeling of two parts of the triple house adjoining their church. This greatly enlarges their facilities and makes possible greater efficiency in Sunday school work. Brother E. L. Miller was the special speaker for the dedication. The "Loyalty Crusade" was a splendid idea and proved to be a real success. Aside from the benefit to the members, eighteen new members were added to the church. Brother Carpenter has been called to serve the ninth year in this field.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER THIS WEEK—

Brother R. I. Humbert requests prayer for the meetings which he is to conduct with Brother J. S. Cook and his people at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania. He is to begin at McKee on May 6th.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter asks prayer for his work at Burlington and Loree, Indiana.

Pray for Dr. J. L. Kimmel and his people at Fort Wayne, Indiana, that they may "pay off the last of the contractor's debt by July 1st.

Our Lanark, Illinois, correspondent asks prayer for the church at that place.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter asks readers of the Evangelist to pray for the full recovery of Dr. J. M. Tombaugh, of Hagerstown, Maryland, for many years an outstanding figure in the brotherhood's councils and work.

Our correspondent requests prayer for the work at Columbus, Ohio, where the pastor, Brother R. E. Gotschall, has been greatly afflicted and many members ill.

A card from Harrah, Washington requests prayer for the safe arrival of their new pastor and his family, and that the Lord may bless their work under the leadership of Brother and Sister F. V. Kinzie.

Mothers of Men

By Daniel A. Poling, D.D. L.L.D.

(An Address Previously Published in Christian Herald and Christian Endeavor World)

About the story of the first recorded miracle performed by Jesus many controversies have raged, but for me the marriage at Cana in Galilee, aside from the manifestation of divine power, has its chief interest in the fact that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was there.

We know little enough of this blessed woman. Her years are very largely hidden years. Eagerly we search the Scriptures for every bit of information concerning her. But there is something very reassuring about the fact that she was present at this marriage-feast. We know now that her life was not altogether heavy and colorless, that she was a woman of moods, that she must have smiled, that her heart must have had its moments of joy and gaiety. Picture the young life of Cana gathered to wish the bride and groom a happy future; catch the echo of the singing and the laughter; remember that Jesus himself came to the celebration; and then gather a truer perspective for a final judgment as to the character of Mary as you read the words, "The mother of Jesus was there."

I think of her today as a typical mother, for who more than a mother enters into the full life of the child? who more than a mother can appreciate the gayer moods as well as sympathize with the graver moments?

Always, wherever Jesus might be, Mary, the mother, was there. Physically she was often far separated from her Son, but in the more intimate relationships of the spirit she stood ever by his side.

Let the hand of imagination serve us for the moment to shift the scenes while we follow with the eye of the soul. The noisome odors of an Eastern stable surround us; we bend beneath the low beams of a sagging roof, and, jostled by the cattle, come at last to a dark manger. But from that darkness shines the everlasting Light. We are in the birth-room of the Messiah, where humble shepherds kneel and where royal wise men bring their gifts and homage. This cradle-song is the song of freedom from sin's bondage, and this Babe nestled upon the Virgin's breast is the mightiest conqueror of the ages. We stand in Bethlehem of Judea, Bethlehem, once least among the cities of a little land, now first upon the records of human progress. What pain and sorrow pass through this narrow stable door! What mixed emotions and what triumph! Mary, the mother of Jesus, was there! Without her there is for the world no manger-song, no Bethlehem anthem, and no Christmas carol. Motherhood is forever the heart of the tragic mystery of birth, and Mary's story is forever the epic of motherhood.

But how quickly the scene changes! Now the young mother is hurrying through the night before the wrath of Herod. With anxious eyes she searches the darkness for a possible foe. Under her rough garment she holds her babe tightly against her heart, and by the side of the beast upon which she rides stalks the quiet, resourceful Joseph.

It is good to remember that in the hour of danger, when death came close to the world's Savior, Mary was there. It is not difficult to imagine her in the years of the Egyptian seclusion, playing her pre-eminent part in the life of her first-born. He knew, of course, the petty trials of childhood that are so real to children, and mothers are always perfect sympathizers. And Mary must have had a particularly difficult situation to meet when, returning to Nazareth, her boy faced upon the playground the questions that were surely raised concerning his birth. Only mothers fully understand such matters. Always mothers are there when such tribulations come upon their sons and daughters.

But again the scene changes; and now we find this woman, destined to know multiplied sorrows, bringing her babe to the dedication of the temple, giving him to the God of her people, surrendering him to the cause of Israel. One is reminded of the prophetic words that have been ascribed to David Livingstone, As, little knew my mother On the day she cradled me Of the lands that I should wander o'er And of the death that I should die.

When children are given to church and state, to God and country, motherhood it is that understands more intimately the anguish of the giving; motherhood it is that bears as no other the soul-destroying load; and motherhood it is that in giving those she has brought into the world gives first and chiefly herself. Amelia Josephine Burr has expressed in exquisite thought and language the intimate details of motherhood's dedication.

"I hold no cause worth my son's life," one said;

And the two women with her as she spoke Joined glances in a hush that neither broke, So present was the memory of their dead.

And through their meeting eyes their souls drew near,

Linked by their sons, men who had held life dear,

But laid it down for something dearer still.

One had wrought out with patient iron will

The riddle of a pestilence, and won,

Fighting on stricken, till his work was done

For children of tomorrow. Far away

In shell-torn soil of France the other lay,

And in the letter that his mother read

Over and over, kneeling as to pray—

"I'm thanking God with all my heart today,

The Mother's Hymn

William Cullen Bryant

"Blessed art thou among women"

Lord who ordainest for mankind
Benignant toils and tender cares,
We thank thee for the ties that bind
The mother to the child she bears.

We thank thee for the hopes that rise
Within her heart as day by day,
The dawning soul, from those young eyes,
Looks with a clearer, steadier ray.

And grateful for the blessing given
With that dear infant on her knee
She trains the eye to look to heaven,
The voice to hush a prayer to thee.

Such thanks the blessed Mary gave
When from her lap the holy Child,
Sent from on high to seek and save
The lost of earth, looked up and smiled.

All gracious! Grant to those who bear
A mother's charge, the strength and light
To guide the feet that own their care
In ways of Love and Truth and Right.

Whatever comes" (that was the day he died),
 "I've done my bit to clear the road ahead."

In those two mothers common pain of loss
 Blossomed in starry flowers of holy pride.

What thoughts were hers who silent stood beside Her Son's uplifted cross?

But again the scene changes, and now Mary's Son is riding in triumph down lanes of wildly cheering people, sweeping on a crest of glory through waving palms into the city of the great king. We do not know from any record that the mother of Jesus was there, but I have no doubt about it. She saw it all. What mixed emotions must have possessed her on that day as from some point of vantage she saw the sunlight streaming across the face and form of the One whose baby fingers had played upon her cheeks and whose tiny lips had drawn life from her breasts.

Strong men have always testified in the moment of their glory and power that chiefly their mothers are responsible for their triumph. Garfield, immediately after his lips had rested upon the Bible and when he had taken his oath as President of the United States, turned to kiss the gray-haired woman who had borne him. Lincoln affirmed with sublime emotion, "All that I am, all that I ever hope to be, I owe to my angel mother."

Yes, on Palm Sunday the mother of Jesus was there. And once more the scene changes. Three trees stand in blood, heavily weighted with their crop of death, against the sky on Calvary. It is the crucifixion. Through Gethsemane and the howling mob in the trial chamber of Pilate and through bitter insults in the courtroom of Ananias; through the denials of the disciples, the stripes and the jeers of the fickle populace, Jesus has come to his ignominious death. Words are wasted in any attempt to picture the catastrophe; but Mary, the mother, was there! Close by the cross, near enough to hear the words that fell from the lips of her dying boy, near enough to see the play of agony upon his face; near enough to clasp his suffering feet and feel upon her hands the hot blood from his wounds, Mary, the mother of Jesus, was there!

"If I were hanged on the highest hill,
 Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine,
 I know whose love would follow me still,
 Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine."

The dominating impulse, the supreme motive, the consuming passion of womanhood, is motherhood. Whether she bears children of her own or mothers another's; or mothers a community, a State, a reform; or, in her interests and dedication, mothers the whole world, womanhood's dominating impulse is the mother impulse; her motive is the mother motive; her passion is the mother passion. She lives chiefly that her sons and daughters, the sons and daughters of the race, shall be worthy, well bodied and unspoiled of soul.

Women compose music, but they are not musicians. They paint pictures, but they are not artists. They find new stars, but they are not astronomers. They chart the rocks, but they are not geologists. They heal the sick, but they are not physicians. They superintend the schools of great cities, but they are not educators. They enter with success well-nigh every department of human endeavor, but they are not administrators. They glorify the pulpit, but they are not preachers. They exert a healthy influence on politics, but they are not politicians. They contribute largely toward the solution of problems among nations, but they are not statesmen. They enter constructively every field of reform, but they are not reformers. Pre-eminently they are always the mothers of men.

You ask me where I learned this wisdom? The winds did not carry it to me; I did not learn it in the stars; I saw it first in my mother's eyes, but then it was altogether a mystery. I found it in the brave eyes of the mother of my children when she came back from the valley of the shadow of death. There in life's holy of holies, with love and suffering embattled all about, I found this wisdom; but I did not understand, for it is given to no man fully to understand. Forever woman's sphere is the home.

Yes, forever woman's sphere is the home. But today we are confronted by the facts and conditions of modern society. What is the modern home? What are its necessities, its opportunities, its peculiar problems, and what are its boundaries? We hear the words of distant Cana in Galilee, "The mother of Jesus was there;" and those words are as appropriate now in describing the place and the spirit of "the mothers of men" as they were when first the sacred writer entered them upon the record.

But we have come out of the past, and the present is different. What is the modern home? Certainly the modern home is not a harem shut away from the life around it, and certainly it is not now as it was in the days when the narrow confines of a settler's cabin and clearing contained it. The modern home is a link in the chain of modern society, and as such is exposed to every peril and problem which confronts society. It is surrounded by the food-doper, the peddler of poisonous drugs, the bootlegger, the exploiter of child toilers, the cheapener of labor; by reckless automobile drivers and by organized vice. The home is different now!

Yesterday the grain from which the family flour was ground grew on the home acres, was prepared in the home mill, and mother baked the great loaves in the home oven. Today the grain grows in thousands of far-away fields, is ground in any one of a thousand distant mills and baked into loaves by any pair of ten thousand more or less cleanly hands.

Yesterday mother made William's suit and Sarah's dress from flax raised, gathered, cured, corded, spun, woven, designed, cut, and fashioned, all within a loud shout of the kitchen stoop. Today perhaps a haggard-eyed consumptive, fighting for bread and breath in a crowded sweatshop of a distant city, bending close her poor diseased eyes, and with bleeding fingers, hastily stitched together the little dress your baby wears.

Yesterday the children gathered in the great kitchen, and played charades, or romped under the orchard trees in King William, or in hours of rare abandon danced to "Skipto-ma-loo." Today every child of the city is menaced by the vicious dance-hall, the low theatre, and a hundred other places of questionable, or worse than questionable, amusement.

Yesterday our gum came from the healthy pines of our own forests. Today an unwashed native slides down a distant jungle tree, opening a groove in the bark as he passes, through which the gum flows into an uncovered receptacle below.

Yesterday we went to school on the hill where the schoolhouse was red and the shutters green, where the rule was the rule of three, and where no child was ever spoiled because Solomon's warning was not heeded. Today our children find on the road that leads to knowledge car-tracks, automobiles, contagious diseases, and the whims of an ever-changing educational system.

Yesterday mother settled the child-labor problem with

"All the World Loves a Lover"

So goes the old adage, and there is abundant evidence that it is true. The movie managers have long since learned and recognized the truthfulness of the statement. That is why they nearly always show love stories—they are in continual demand. Whatever may be the nature of the picture presented the audience is prepared for it and put in a good humor by a love scene, a love story in picture form, mostly fiction, but not infrequently true to life. The wonder is that some one has not seized and dramatized the most charming little love story ever written, a story of early Hebrew times whose principal character is Ruth. But it is more than a love story. It is the story of courtesy and hospitality that is independent of both age and sex. It is the story of the making of the kind of friendship that makes life worth while. How many of your young people in the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor really know the story well enough to tell it? Why not devote the Christian Endeavor hour some Sunday evening to the study of a story so eminently worth while?

A Disturbed Conscience

There never can be any real peace of heart and mind while there remains a disturbing conscience inside of us. Years ago a well-dressed man walked into the ticket office of the New York Central System and handed the agent a dollar bill telling him that three years ago, on a train between Albany and Buffalo, he cheated the company out of that amount. When asked why he told of it, since no one knew or could know, he answered, "Friend, did you ever have a strong feeling inside yourself that you wanted to be square with yourself? The world thinks I am an honest man, but inside myself I know that in this matter I am not. Now I have satisfied myself. Good day." What, think you, would happen to church treasures everywhere were people to take a similar attitude toward their God,—the attitude of this man toward the railroad company? Why does not our conscience smite us when we cheat God the giver of all we possess? It is because God is not a reality in our thought and life. There are scores of people too conscientious to cheat a railroad company, who nevertheless do not have that "feeling inside to be square with themselves," when they withhold from God what is due him. If Christian people everywhere would recognize and conscientiously meet their obligations to God, how our church treasures would begin to overflow.

Peace in Persecution

Read Matthew 5:10 and then the following story: A Brahman girl, belonging to a wealthy family, who found no peace in the devout performance of the rites of her religion, at last begged her mother to allow her to go to a mission school where Tamil was taught, not, as we might suppose, to get the benefit of gospel teaching, but simply to learn the language which would enable her to perform some special rites requiring a knowledge of Tamil. "I will take their Scripture lessons in one ear, and let them out at the other," she assured her mother, and was allowed to go. For a year and a half she studied earnestly, and then found herself interested in the Bible, and turned from her idols in disgust. She was forbidden the school, but ran to the missionary's door and begged to be taken in. To her family who came and pleaded with her, telling her that they would have to perform the funeral ceremony for her she said, "I know it. I am dead to all, but I yet live and will tell Christ's love to my people."

The family burned her in effigy, putting the ashes among the dead; there was a funeral ceremony, and the poor mother made a pilgrimage to the Ganges, walking fourteen hundred miles, to try to expiate her daughter's sin. It is a sad, broken home, but the poor girl has peace in her heart, and a great hope of helping others to share with her the kingdom of heaven. Her reward is certain, and she does not mean to go to heaven alone. If being a Christian would mean all of that to you and to me, would we be really Christian? The right way, the Christian way, is not always, if ever, the easy way.

Breaking the Whole Law

In Bultmann's notes to Besser is found an instructive story. An honest farmer, Michael, on his death-bed, bade his son Jack get the catechism and see how his life compared with its teachings. The first two commandments were read to him. "These two have I kept; I have not worshipped idols, like pagans, nor bowed before images, like papists. Read the third, Jack." "Here I am right again, for I never swore an oath, save in a court of justice. Read the next." "Remember the Sabbath day." "Well, I have gone to church of a Sunday, and never played cards, nor made servants work. Next." "Honor thy father and thy mother." "Jack—follow my example; for, as a boy, I showed all honor and respect to my poor parents, God bless them! Next." "Thou shalt not kill." "Well, thank God, that is not on my conscience; I never, even in lawful war, slew a man." "Thou shalt not commit adultery." "Of that I have kept clear; always faithful to your dear mother." "Thou shalt not steal." "Yes, I never took what did not belong to me. What is next?" "Thou shalt not bear false witness." "I never swore false against any person. Next." "Thou shalt not covet." "Stop, Jack, there; I must think a little. Yes, I can't say I have never coveted. Pray look for poor mamma's Bible on the subject." Here was found a reference to Matthew 5, by which Michael was led to see that he had broken the whole law, AT HEART. So he was convinced of sin, and died, a believing penitent. There are people who are orthodox in the HEAD, but heterodox in the HEART. Right in belief, wrong in life.

"The High Command"

When the telephone was first invented it was found to be exceedingly difficult to shut out all the noises which rose from the ground and mingled with the human voice. In Radio we call it "static." A great triumph of science will be achieved when someone contrives a mechanical device which will save us from the nerve-wracking, screeching noise which accompanies and terribly annoys "listening in." Such a triumph has been achieved long ago in the matter of the telephone. Similarly, the triumph of religion is so to silence all other noises of the earth as to hear, clear and distinct, the voice of God. Four thousand years ago a man named Abraham achieved that triumph, and a clear, distinct message from God came to his life. That voice commanded Abraham to leave his country, his relatives, his home, and go into a strange land far away. He did not know where the country was to which he was commanded to go, but he OBEYED God, and doubted nothing. The old patriarch never for a moment doubted the reality of that message. He felt as certain of that as he did of his own existence. We, too, will have achieved a triumph when we have learned how to shut out the world's noises and listen to the "still small voice of God." There are many disturbing elements that hinder such a communion with God but they are not inevitable, we may conquer if we will.

The College Glee Club

The entertainment given by the Ashland College Glee Club was enthusiastically received. The "boys" made a great "hit." The writer has heard nothing but praise for them. They acquitted themselves nobly and did honor to the college they represent. We were proud of them. The remark could be heard from many sources, "What a wholesome, clean, fine looking group of boys they are." The attendance was good and the plaudits generous. Every number on the program was received with a hearty response. The Ashland College Glee Club's tour through Pennsylvania was a worth while advertisement. In this expression of approval the manager, Prof. Haun, and the lady director must not be overlooked.

NATIONAL HOME MISSIONS CONFERENCE

In December, 1930, a national interdenominational home missions congress is to be held in Washington, D. C. The Home Missions Council, with the cooperation of the Federal Council of Churches and the Council of Women for Home Missions are promoting the project.

"The purpose of this congress is to make a critical and constructive study of the home missionary need, the responsibilities and methods of approach to the task in this new day into which we have come, and to work out more up-to-date and statesmanlike policies, programs, and plans of organizations for the winning of America to Jesus Christ."

EDUCATION IN THE CABINET

There is a movement on, promoting a demand for the creation of a Department of Education in the national Government. This proposal is not new. It has been under consideration for some time. It is the thought of our outstanding educational leaders that of all the interests that have to do with promoting the intelligence of the nation, education should be considered first. And yet consideration has not been given as it has to others. There is a department for agriculture, and for the interior, and for the navy and other activities of the nation's life, but none for education. Now why is this true? Behind this question are to be found many considerations and many corruptions. It is a debated question. It has caused a great controversy. Men are divided. They know not which is the proper thing to do, to go on as we are now or to make the change.

Why should not education be represented in the Cabinet of the Administration? Again we say, There are various answers. Perhaps experts are authority here, and not the laymen. The average man will say, Yes, why not have a Department of Education? Why not have all our education institutions amenable to the Government? Why not have the different systems of education prevailing in the country periodically surveyed? Why not work for a standardization of education in the interests of American democracy? Yes, why not? Herein lies the difficulty. Men cannot agree. Nevertheless, it is our conviction that there should be an educational portfolio in our Government.—The Western Christian Advocate.

WAR IS ON

It's a Merry War Lads, that is now on between The National Candy Association and the American Tobacco Company, manufacturers of a certain cigarette. The tobacco concern is appealing to the vanity of American flapperdom to keep slim and trim by avoiding sweets and smoking its particular brand.

"Reach for a Lucky instead of a sweet—the trim figure is always fashionable," reads the "ad." Naturally, this has aroused the ire, not only of the candy manufacturers, but of the bake-shops and a lot of other powerful "sweet" concerns. And the merry war is on! The "sweet" folks propose to nail these lying "ads," by revealing the facts about the "little white coffin nails,"—and therein is one of our prayers answered. It was rather amusing to see the "Old Gold" cigarette concern take to the tall timber this past week, by coming out in their "ad" with a bold-faced note: "Eat a chocolate, light an 'Old Gold' ... and enjoy both!" We predict that it is going to be a mighty unlucky fight for "The Luckies." Like the old time saloon,—give "Lady Nicotine" enough rope, and she is going to hang herself. God speed the day!—Long Beach (California) Church Calendar.

AN ASSET OR—

Let it be remembered that the character of the pastor is one of the greatest assets of his church. If his life is lived above the plane of apology and question he elevates his church in the affection and confidence of the people, and strengthens it as a spiritual force in the community. But when his conduct raises questions as to his real sincerity in the minds of people in the community, even though these questions do not take verbal form, his church suffers from the drag of those unspoken questions. If his life is such that the questions are put in the form of words he may be a millstone about the church's neck. The pastor must be a good man, a man whose life has no suggestion of insincerity, if he would lead his people forward and turn the community toward his church and lead it to a higher moral attitude. The way of the church is never easy, but it is made doubly difficult when its spiritual leader fails to sound out a clear note in his own way of living.—Religious Telescope.

BIGNESS NOT EVERYTHING

The results of preaching and teaching are not correctly measured in the figures that report accessions; it can easily happen that a score of members added are the equal of a hundred. In fact, there is frequently as great effort, as great consecration and as great future influence for the cause of Christ in merely holding the ground as in making a great advance. A decrease may be discouraging but not disgraceful to the faithful when a community is in the midst of a great battle wherein the enemies of the cross of Christ are numerous, bitter and organized, and for the time being in possession of strategic advantages. They may and do seduce folk away from the congregation. In such cases, survival with losses is a victory. In some instances, a single, richly endowed individual is a great accession; numerical quantity is one element; quality is another. Neither dare be disregarded. Fidelity and patient industry in the place in which we labor create equality among laborers.

But where laziness, stubbornness and strife among the membership cripple the soul-winning power of a church, there is need of self-examination and the prayer to God for enlightenment and correction. Pentecost, the day given for recognizing the outpouring of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, is near at hand. Every congregation in the United Lutheran Church is under obligation to meditate soberly and humbly at its services on May 19th. How shall our faults be corrected? How shall our weaknesses be transformed? How shall our unity in fellowship be improved? How shall our nearness to our Lord be increased? How shall our thankfulness be deepened in sincere devotion? These are questions that may properly arise, when the believers celebrate the advent of the Holy Spirit.—The Lutheran.

VANDERBILT RURAL CHURCH SCHOOL A SUCCESS

During the two weeks of the sessions of the Rural School of Religion held at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, the first two weeks of April, 360 ministers were in attendance, representing 22 states and 26 denominations. The Methodist Church, South, led the attendance with 138 present. The curriculum included economic courses, as well as religious and social. Dr. O. E. Brown has been dean of the school since 1919.—Christian Century.

a slipper behind the kitchen door. Today its solution lies at the end of a long trail that leads by oyster-beds and cotton-mills, through factories and into deep mines.

Yes, always and pre-eminently, the home is woman's sphere, but not the home as it was—the home as it is; not the simple, shaded path of yesterday, but a toiler's rugged road that leads from the door-stoop into every department of human endeavor, through every phase of social unrest, and that girdles the globe. Today the four posts of the home are the four corners of the earth.

Some one has said that man, with instincts more largely selfish, has over-emphasized his symbol of power, the dollar, while woman, intuitive, keener of conscience and larger of human sympathy, seeks always to shift the emphasis upon humanity. Nature's balance is struck only when men and women work together.

But again I hear the words of Cana in Galilee, "The mother of Jesus was there;" and in every circumstance of difficulty, in every occasion of question confronting the home, and in this time as in every other, I find "the mothers of men" present in power, present in power to serve and to love and to inspire.

Ah, lad with questioning eyes of deepest brown,

Uplifted to your mother's wondrous face;

With chubby arms that draw the dear head down

And from that smile that lights this blessed place,

What is the question in your tousled head?

You rest a moment from your sturdy play,

And nestle quiet in the comfort of her breast.

Your parted ruby lips—what would they say

If they could tell the wonder of your boy's heart's quest

If you could lift the latch where only thoughts may tread?

Ah, lad, a moment cradled in your mothers' arms,

Unmindful of your busy world, and bent

Upon the search for that which stays your child alarms,—

This is the richest boon that Heaven sent;

This is Gods' bravest gift, his choicest good.

I, too, have watched your mother's wondrous face,

Transfigured by the love that gave you birth;

Her hand in mine, she journeyed back through space;

Then in her eyes I saw a glory not of earth;

My son, this mystery is motherhood!

MONDAY

Chastening—Ezek. 22:17; also Heb. 12:1-15. People often become impatient under "mis-fortune." Many such misfortunes are purely the result of wrong living—physical or spiritual. On the other hand, some of them are undoubtedly the chastening of God—no wilfully, because he is exasperated with us, and must relieve his feelings; but for our good, that he may cleanse us from the dross he sees. Such sufferings seem even to have had a place in the life of our Lord.

TUESDAY

Responsibility—Ezek. 22:29-31; Gen. 18:23-33. The Lord is not willing that any should perish. Though the people of this city richly deserved the judgment pronounced upon them, God was willing to give them another chance if he could find a man like Jonah who was willing to go and sound the warning. It reminds one of Abraham pleading for Sodom. Just as the preaching of one man saved the city of Nineveh, so our testimony may save some other apparently hopeless situation. Increase our courage, O Lord!

WEDNESDAY

In Season, out of Season—Ezek. 24:15-18; 2 Tim. 4:1-8. At one stroke the Lord took from Ezekiel his beloved wife, the "desire of his eyes." Surely he could not be expected to go on with his work under such circumstances! But the next morning Ezekiel continued his testimony, as he had been commanded. If Ezekiel, by God's grace, could continue in the face of such a great personal calamity, dare we allow petty annoyances to interfere with our service? "In season, out of season," was Paul's advice to Timothy, and it is good advice for us all.

THURSDAY

The Wonders of Prophecy—Ezek. 26:1-6; Matt. 24:35. In his book, the "Wonders of Prophecy," Urquhart points out the exact literalness with which every detail of this prophecy against Tyre was fulfilled. He also portrays the exact fulfillment of many other such prophecies. Surely, as we compare them with subsequent history, we must believe that, though heaven and earth pass away, his word shall not pass away. His promises are yea and amen!

FRIDAY

A Watchman—Ezek. 33:1-10a. Again God reminds Ezekiel that he is even as a watchman who sees the approaching danger, and that he dare not fail to give the alarm. Every jury in the land would condemn such a watchman; "yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal" (v. 20). Surely we, in these days, who see and know the dangers that are threatening the eternal safety of those about us, can offer no excuse to ourselves or to our God, if we fail to sound the alarm. Make us faithful watchmen, O our Father!

SATURDAY

Why?—Ezek. 33:30-33; Luke 6:46. God here describes the hypocrites who, merely for the sake of being entertained, came regularly to hear the word from the Lord; we suspect that all such are not dead yet! They failed to act upon the message, though they would later be held responsible for it. It was of such people that Jesus later demanded: "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" May we, our Father, be doers of the word, and not hearers only!

SUNDAY

False Shepherds and the Good Shepherd—Ezek. 34:1-6; John 10:1-18. The priests, or shepherds of Israel, were very much like the priestly class of Jesus' day: professionals, little concerned with the safety of the sheep and not attempting to lead them in right paths. Little wonder that a merciful and loving God should send his Son to be the Good Shepherd of the sheep! May we ever follow where he leads, hearing his voice and finding rest, and peace, and food for our souls!—T. C. L.

Faith

By George Muller

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."—Hebrews 11:1, 3.

The subject of our meditation this evening is, What is faith—how it may be increased, and the growth of faith, which I will endeavor to illustrate by some of the experiences which, by the grace of God, I have realized in the exercise of belief in his promises as revealed in his Word.

First: WHAT IS FAITH? In the simplest manner in which I am able to express it I answer, Faith is the assurance that the thing which God has said in his Word is true, and that God will act according to what he has said in his Word. This assurance, this reliance on God's Word, this confidence, is faith.

No impressions are to be taken in connection with faith. Impressions have neither one thing nor the other to do with faith. Faith has to do with the Word of God. It is not impression, strong or weak, which will make any difference. We have to do with the written Word. We have to rely on the written Word, and not on ourselves or our impressions.

Probabilities are not to be taken into account. Many people are willing to believe regarding those things that seem to them probable. The province of faith begins where probabilities cease and sight and sense fail. A great many of God's children are cast down, and lament their want of faith. They write to me, and say they have no impressions, no feeling; they see no probability that the thing they wish will come to pass. (Luke 18:27). Appearances are not to be taken into account. Impressions and feelings and probabilities are not to be taken into account. The question is—if God has spoken it in his word.

Now, preliminary to what I have to say to you, dear Christian friends, lay to heart that it is because there is so much dependence on these things that we have so little blessedness among us. All these things must be left alone. The naked Word of God is what we are to depend upon. This is enough for us.

And now, beloved Christian friends, you are in great need to ask yourselves whether you are in the habit of thus confiding in your inmost soul in what God has said, and whether you are in earnest in seeking to find whether the thing you want is in accordance with what he has said in his Word. If it is, that the thing you ask for will come to pass is as sure as that you were able to confide in him.

Second: HOW FAITH MAY BE INCREASED! God delights to increase the faith of his children. He is thus glorified before an ungodly world and the powers of darkness. The confidence of his children in times of trial, discouragement, pain and sorrow, gives great encouragement to other Christians. God delights that he may do good to others through them and that they themselves, through the exercise of faith, may obtain an increase of it. For difficulties, costs, crusts, hindrances, bereavements and losses, though we shrink from them, and shrink exceedingly, are the very things God uses to develop us more and more, as the young infant has its weak limbs developed, till by and by they grow to the power of a man's. For I am not one of those who believe that we can attain to strong faith at once, any more than a weak infant can spring into manhood at once. Our faith, which is weak and feeble at first, is developed and strengthened more and more by use.

What we have to do instead of wanting no trials before victory, no exercise for patience, is to be willing to take them from God's hands as a means, I say, and say it deliberately—trials, difficulties, obstacles, bereavements, necessities, are the very food of faith. I get letters from so many of God's dear children who say, "Dear Mr. Muller: I'm writing this because I'm so weak and feeble in faith." Just so surely as we ask to have our faith strengthened we must be willing to take from God's hands the means for strengthening it. We must allow him to educate us through trials and bereavements and troubles. For it is through trial that faith is exercised and developed more and more. God affectionately permits difficulties that he may develop increasingly that which he is willing to do for us; and to this end we should not shrink, but if he gives us sorrows and hindrances, and losses, and afflictions, we should take them out of his hands as evidences of his love, and his care for us in developing more and more in us that faith which he is seeking to strengthen in us.

Again, it is necessary that we seek to acquaint ourselves with God as he has revealed himself in the Scriptures. We must not content ourselves with the notions that people have about God, but we must diligently seek to know what he has disclosed regarding himself. And we must not take the notions which the church and many professing Christians have to God; for I say deliberately that the notions which the Church of Christ has about God are not the truth, and we do not want to gather our views from what the Church says about God, or what Christian men say about him; but we want to come to the very fountain, the revelation the Lord has made of himself in his written Word, and step by step, as we read, to learn not only of the power, infinite wisdom, justice, and holiness of our God, but also of his gentleness, pity, beautyfulness and bountifulness. When we read and see what God has revealed of himself in his Word we shall find out more and more from it that God is the Lovable One, God is the Lovable One, GOD IS THE LOVABLE ONE; and before I go any further, I stop and ask you what is the response of your inmost soul? Is God, to you, the Lovable One? If not, you are not acquainted with him. You have yet to find out that he is the most Lovable One. Oh, seek to say in your inmost heart that he is the Lovable One! The result will be that you will confide in him unreservedly, at all times, in all circumstances. Though he slay you yet will you trust in him. Turn and read the Ninth Psalm. With your very own eyes read the ninth and tenth verses: "The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble." And, "They that know thy name will put their trust in thee: For thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee." We who yearn to see God as he has revealed himself in his Word, are so satisfied with God, and in his dealings with us, we see how everything is for our good. On this account it is so deeply important for our usefulness and for our growth in faith that we get correct ideas of God from the fountain of truth contained in his Word. In the exercise of our faith, and in studying God in his Word, our faith grows. I say this deliberately, advisedly, and tens of thousands of God's tried children will say the same thing.

The Church of Christ is not aroused to see God as the beautiful and lovable one he is, and hence the small measure of blessedness. Oh, beloved brothers and sisters in Christ, seek to learn for yourselves, for I cannot tell you the blessedness! In the darkest moments I am able to confide in him, for I know what a beautiful and kind and faithful and lovable Being he is, and if it be the will of God to put us in the furnace, let him do it, so that we may acquaint ourselves with him as he will reveal himself, and as we know him better, we come to the conclusion that God is the most lovable Being, and we are satisfied with him, and say, "It is my Father—let him do as he pleases."

When I first began allowing God to deal with me, relying on him, taking him at his Word, and set out fifty-one years ago simply relying on him for myself, family, taxes, traveling expenses and every other need, I rested on the simple promises. I found in the 6th chapter of Matthew a passage, "I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Therefore, if God so clothed the grass of the field, which to-day is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" No man could by care and forethought array a lily. Put a flower under a microscope and you will say it has been attired by no other than the living God. "Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek): for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

I believed the Word. I rested on it and practised it. I "took God at his Word." A stranger, a foreigner in England, I knew seven languages and might have used them perhaps as a means of remunerative employment, but I had consecrated myself to labor for the Lord. I put my reliance in the God who has promised, and he has acted according to his Word. I've lacked nothing—nothing. I have had my trials, my difficulties, and my empty purse, but my receipts have aggregated tens of thousands of dollars, while the work has gone on these fifty-one years. Then with regard to my pastoral work for the past fifty-one years, I have had great difficulties, great trials and perplexities. There will be always difficulties, always trials. But God has sustained me under them and delivered me out of them, and the work has gone on.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for May 19)

Jeremiah Calls to Obedience

Scripture Lesson—Jer. 7:1-26.

Printed Text—Jer. 7:1-11, 21-23.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 96:7-13.

Golden Text—Hearken unto my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people.—Jer. 7:23.

Introductory Note

Our lesson passage stands at the beginning of a notable address delivered by Jeremiah at the gate of the temple. It occupies four chapters,—7 to 10 inclusive. Because of its similarity to chapter 26, which we studied last Sunday, some scholars consider that chapter to be merely a summary of this address; but Jeremiah often repeated himself, and the position of these chapters, so close to prophecies admittedly belonging to the reign of Josiah, would lead us to hold that his address was spoken under Josiah, but near the end of the reign of that king, when his reformation had mainly spent its force, and idolatry was creeping back into the open.—Illustrated Quarterly.

God Requires Thorough Consecration

"A proud Indian chief became deeply convicted of sin, and trembling under the sense of guilt, sought the missionary and proffered his belt of wampum to be freed from his anguish of fear. 'No,' said the missionary, 'Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice.' The Indian departed but soon returned offering his rifle and the skins he had taken in hunting. 'No,' was the reply. 'Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice.' Again the Indian went away, but with a troubled conscience once more returned, and offered his wigwam, wife, child, everything, for peace and pardon. 'No,' was still the reply. 'Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice.' The chief seemed oppressed with surprise for a moment; then, lifting up tearful eyes to heaven, he feelingly cried out, 'Here, Lord, take poor Indian too!'

Jeremiah's Message

"Here is Jeremiah's message condensed into a sentence: 'Your sins have witholden good from you.' All history is but a commentary on this verse. A nation is not permanently prosperous because of the vast extent of her fertile acres, because of her genial climate or inexhaustible resources. If this were so, sturdy, mountainous Switzerland, ice-clad Norway, fog-enveloped England, rock-bound, sterile Massachusetts, would have but a small place in the family of states. There is another element that enters in to make a nation strong or weak, powerful or puny. We may say it is the only element, because it is God. There is a God of nations, and upon every page of history since time began is stamped this legend, 'Your sins have witholden good from you.' Jeremiah's prophecy is one of the greatest of treatises on good citizenship, because in every line it recognizes this tremendous truth. Read it through with this for the key-thought, and its treasures are unlocked. O youthful citizen, it is no less true today than in the days of the prophet of Anathoth. There is but one ultimate source of national disaster, and that is national sin. When combating the evils engendered by national greed and pride and debauchery and oppression, you are fighting for your nation's life."—Francis E. Clark.

God in a Nation's Life

"The prophets were great; but the prophets were men of God. Put God into a man's life, and he becomes a Samuel, a Micah, a Jeremiah. Put God into a man's life, and he becomes a Paul, a Stephen, a Luther, a Calvin, a Knox. What men in history can compare with these men of God, or with their kindred in the different ages? God is knocking at the doors of your nation by his gospel and by his Spirit. Have you opened the doors of your nation to God? How much of your thinking does he control? What place has he in your plans? What proportion of your time does he control? What enthronement has his law in your heart? What proportion of your substance do you give him? If we are not as the prophets, it is not God's fault. It is our fault, because we are keeping God out of our lives."

Prune thou thy words, the thoughts control

That o'er thee swell and throng;

They will condense within thy soul,

And change to purpose strong.

But he, who lets his feelings run

In soft luxurious flow,

Shrinks when hard service must be done,

And faints at every woe.

Faith's meanest deed more favor bears,

Where hearts and wills are weighed,

Than brightest transports, choicest prayers,

Which bloom their hour and fade.

—John Henry Newman.

"To Worship the Lord"

It may seem a very little thing to be a good hearer in a large audience, or even in a small one; yet every public speaker feels his indebtedness to those persons in his audience who are evidently interested in what he says, to such an extent as to cause them to show a real interest in himself as the speaker of the hour. And the number of such hearers is comparatively small in any audience. In many a case one good hearer is the main inspiration and cheer of the speaker. For the help thus given to him, a speaker is sure to have a sense of personal gratitude; even though the very name of his helpful hearer be unknown to him. There are good hearers who are of unfailing service to the cause of truth. They do more through the added power they give to the speaker whom they stimulate and encourage, than they could do if they were the speaker, or than he could do if they were not his hearers. If, therefore, one longs to be a means of good to others through influencing and impressing a Bible-class, a prayer meeting gathering, a lecture-audience, or a great congregation, let him realize that a sphere of power in that direction is fairly open to him, which he can enter and fill by being a first-class hearer.—Hastings. A lady said to her pastor one Monday morning, "I heard you well yesterday." Is not hearing well as much an art as preaching well? If you would always listen humbly, charitably and prayerfully, all preaching would seem better to you.—In a popular symposium taken by a number of preachers some years ago in New York, Dr. John Hall thus described "The Kind of Hearer" he wants:

1. One who has prayed for the preacher, and the Holy Spirit's influence on all the congregation, in the closet, and, if head of the household, at the family altar.

2. One who is punctually in his fixed place in the church so as to be recognized by me from the pulpit, and with his family beside him.

3. One who has a good Bible in his pew, and who devoutly follows the reading of the

A Word from the President

Dear Endeavorers:

We have been pleased with our Endeavor work from the many sections of the country. However if many societies would have made a separate Christian Endeavor report, instead of a mere reference to it in some other report, it would be far better for you and your leaders.

Krypton pledges should be paid soon. Our Endeavorers who were there a short time with the Gospel Team from Ashland College have a very enthusiastic report concerning our field at Krypton.

Prayer by every Endeavorer is needed, that a leader of the finest type shall be found to take the place of our Brother Kinzie who so recently left us.

32nd International Convention of Christian Endeavor convenes at Kansas City, July 3-8. A fine group of our folks should be there. There is much to be gained by attending a great gathering such as this will be, where Youth is given her rightful place and due honor, where the finest leadership of our day is called, that this rising generation may be molded and inspired for clean, holy and righteous living.

A Card to your President, stating that you are registered and expect to attend this convention, will be a great aid. Do this now. My address at the top of this C. E. column.

Yours for Christ and the church.

E. M. RIDDLE.

NEW JUNIOR SOCIETY AT WASHINGTON

Perhaps you will be glad to know there is now a Junior Christian Endeavor Society at Washington, D. C. It is only a month old, but is progressing favorably. The need for this organization has been evident for some time, and we are thankful that it has been met at last. The work is in charge of Richard Saunders and Miss Zelda MacLennan. These two have their hands full as it is, but we find it is always the busiest person who can take more responsibility. Remember them on your prayer list!

MISSIONS

From Bellevue to Bangui

Dear Evangelist Readers:

On the morning of February 21st Mr. Sheldon and I, after spending nearly six and four years respectively in Africa, began our long journey homeward, for our first furlough. It was hard to leave those whom we had helped to look to the Light. Also after so long a time in Africa one feels that his home is with the black people, but alas furloughs must be taken, for the tropical climate, continued use of quinine, and the strain of the work, all help to tear down these bodies and shatter our nerves. We were so glad that Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy were at Bellevue to carry forward the work and we pray for strength to be given them as their duties shall be increased.

Mr. Kennedy brought us to Yaloke in the truck, returning immediately as Mrs. Kennedy was left alone, on the station, with the children.

We spent a happy week of fellowship with the dear missionaries at Yaloke. It had been two and one-half years since I had seen some of them. They have had trials during the past few months, at times even their lives have not been safe, but he has kept them through it all and they rejoice in him.

From Yaloke to Bangui Mr. Sheldon traveled by bicycle and Kenneth and I by push. The first night we stayed at the chapel at Zaiera. From there we went to the old government post at Bossambele. This post was vacated until the recent uprising among the natives necessitated work on it being resumed.

The next place of importance was the falls near Boali. These falls are one of the beauty spots of our country. A good sized river plunges over the rocks to a depth of 150 or more feet. The mist keeps the vegetation around green and beautiful even in the dry season. From the door of the rest house one can view these falls and the traveler is loathe to leave this beauty spot. But distance must be covered and soon we were on our way.

After about seven days we arrived at Bangui. We found it to be quite a thriving little town with a few hundred white people. The town had grown so much that we didn't know where to find the different stores. We had to wait a week to get a boat down the river. These waits are tiresome but must be expected in Africa.

Next week I shall continue our trip.

In his Name,
HATTIE C. SHELDON.

THE KENTUCKY MISSION

By R. I. HUMBERD.

In a recent Evangelist you had an editorial entitled, "Workers Must Be Qualified." I think that title is very truthful and in church activities it is well for people to know if a man, whom they are supporting on a mission station, is truly qualified for the work. If he is not, they may be wasting their money.

When a large manufacturing concern has a vacancy, they hunt for a man who will qualify, a man who will fit.

God depends upon men to preach the Gospel of Grace. He looks for MEN. But how often it is true—"He saw that there was no man and wondered that there was no intercessor" (Isa. 59:16).

Why is it so difficult to find a MAN? Are there not hundreds of millions on the earth? Yes, but how sad that so few are qualified for the positions that God has open for a true MAN. True, there are hundreds of millions, but many, like Demas, love this present world, (2 Tim. 4:10) and thus are not fit and do not qualify.

The Gospel must be preached to the Gentiles. God wanted a MAN,—a man who could learn, in whatsoever state he was therewith to be content (Phil. 4:11), a man who would not be ashamed of the Gospel, being truly convinced that it is the power of God unto salvation (Rom. 1:16), a man who would stand when others forsake him. Only one, Saul of Tarsus, qualified for the position. He could say, "I have no man like-minded who will naturally care for your state" (Phil. 2:20). He could stand alone even when all they which were in Asia turned away from him (2 Tim. 1:15). He could pray God that it might not be laid to their charge when no man stood with him but all men forsook him (2 Tim. 4:16).

Over twenty years ago, God wanted a mission station located in the mountains of Kentucky. Hundreds of people in the Brethren church would gladly support this work with their prayers and money. But God needed a MAN,—a man who would qualify, a man who would bury his life in the mountains, a man who could take the fire and stand, a man who would be "blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach, not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient, not a brawler, (quarrelsome)."

A man and his wife qualified and stepped into the vacancy. Years have passed and how well they were fitted we can now see, for it is by their fruits that we know them.

Probably the last two qualifications are the hardest and most important in mission work,—"patient and not quarrelsome." Only a person well acquainted with mission work knows the difficulty that exists because of the lack of the former and presence of the latter.

For many years I have been in close touch with the work at this place. I have many letters from others who have labored there and a few excerpts from these letters will prove how the Drushals have measured up at this point. A person may be able to be patient for a few days or even weeks, but when it runs into years, there is no doubt as to the true state of the heart.

One person, who taught there several years, writes: "I have always felt free, when difficulties arise, to go to Mr. Drushal, and I have always found him ready to suggest or to cooperate. There has been no friction in my relations with the Drushals."

Excerpts from another: "Both Mr. and Mrs. Drushal spend much time in prayer and wait on the Lord in all things. ... As for myself, I have learned many spiritual lessons from the lives of the Drushals." ...

Another: "I have taught for ten years and have never had a superintendent or principal more thoughtful of his workers than Mr. Drushal. Mrs. Drushal especially has been a source of inspiration to me in facing the difficulties that are inevitable in a work of this kind."

Another: "My year at Riverside was the happiest of my seven years of teaching; I found the Drushals easy to work with."

Another writes: "I sometimes wondered how Mr. Drushal could bear with us inexperienced workers. From his many years of intimate contact with mountain people, Mr. Drushal has gained a knowledge of them which makes his services of inestimable value to Riverside Institute."

Excerpts from another: "Mr. and Mrs. Drushal are the most deserving Christians I have ever met. Satan wants to rob every school of Christian men and women."

Still another writes: "During the time I was there at Riverside, Kentucky, I could not ask anyone to treat me better than they both treated me."

I could quote from others, some with the strongest possible language, showing the tremendous difficulties the Drushals have had to face. And yet, through it all they stand today battle scarred but victorious, not weakened but strengthened through the mighty battles with the powers of darkness.

May the people of the Brethren church thank God for the founders of this mission station and stand behind them to the uttermost. "Until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have his praise from God" (1 Cor. 4:5 R. V.)

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

On April 15th our church had been dedicated and the Sunday school organized just one year. We have had many discouragements but feel that it was a testing time for us. During the remainder of 1928 the Sunday school gave special numbers for Mothers' Day and quite a program on Children's Day and Rally Day after Sunday school session. Had prices for farm products been as good as they had been in 1925 and 1926 the financial problem wouldn't have hindered us any, but as crops were sold at a loss we will be without a pastor for almost a year by the time we get one on the field.

When Brother Beal was called to hold evangelistic meetings for the Bible Study League we had hoped to catch our balance so he could come back to us the first of this year, but as conditions grew worse and he had calls from two or three churches we felt it unfair to him to hinder him from accepting another pastorate when things were so uncertain here. So after much prayer we felt it the Lord's will to give him a release.

Of course when we were left without a shepherd we were at a loss to know what to do. The Sunday school dropped down in attendance. We planned to have services every two weeks by Brother E. W. Reed of Sunnyside when the Congregational church there called him for every Sunday. Then Brother Moyer, who lived in Wapato, filled the pulpit until the Union Tabernacle meetings which began November 18, and lasted until December 16.

Since the roads and weather are good Brother Grisso comes up every Wednesday and conducts the midweek service. The attendance is good. The Sunday school attendance began to increase this spring and has run from 91 to 98 since Easter; last Sunday it was 110. The attendance for the Easter program was 126, and others came in later for the program. Our enrollment is 114.

There have been 11 baptized, 7 of which united with the church here, and 4 with the Sunnyside church.

We are anxiously counting the weeks when we will have a pastor with us, who will, as you know, be Rev. F. V. Kinzie.

Interest in the Junior and Senior Christian Enreavor societies is good.

MRS. E. B. GOULD,
Corresponding Secretary.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

"The Gateway to the South" is still here, even if you have not heard from us for several months. Gradual progress marks the work of the church.

Loyalty Crusade

An Easter Campaign extended over seven weeks with each Sunday a special day, beginning with February 17 as "Roll Call Sunday." "Loyalty" was the key word of the campaign, the object being to increase the number of loyal members and also to add new members. We rejoiced together when eighteen new members were received and several more are expected soon. Rev. W. C. Benshoff, our neighbor just across the Mason and Dixon line, preached an able sermon for us on one of our loyalty nights.

Sunday School Annex

Another day of rejoicing came on March 10 when the Sunday School Annex was dedicated. Two parts of the triple house adjoining the church on Antietam street were converted into Sunday school rooms. Partitions were removed, frosted glass placed in windows, walls papered and floors finished. The first floor is occupied by the Cradle Roll, Beginners and Primary department while the Juniors use the second floor. Splendid class tables and chairs were purchased and now with modern equipment more efficient work can be done and more children accommodated. The conversion of the houses into an Annex with equipment cost about $2,000, a very worthwhile investment. Rev. E. L. Miller of Maurertown, Virginia, served most acceptably as the dedication speaker. He preached three able sermons. It was very kind of the Maurertown church to loan their pastor to us for the day.

Four Separate Departments

The Adult department has "fitted" as Marylanders say, and now occupies the church auditorium, leaving the main Sunday school room of the church for the Young People's department. Each of the four departments has its own opening and closing program. For several weeks the total attendance has been running over the 300 mark, reaching 351 on Easter and 333 on the Sunday after Easter. Last Sunday it rained and rained but 50 men were present in the Men's Bible class. Can you beat that? The orchestra plays for the young people's department in their opening and for the adult department in their closing. The Ladies' Aid paid for most of the new equipment installed in the annex. The Ladies' Aid is a real aid. A steady growth has characterized our Sunday school for a number of years, and still higher goals have been set.

College Glee Club

The Men's Glee Club from Ashland recently made their first visit to this church and presented a fine program and made a very favorable impression for themselves and for our College at Ashland. Come again. It was our privilege to attend the annual meeting of the college trustees April 16, and there are many reasons to be encouraged. The college never had as bright an outlook as now. With the continued support of the whole church the future holds great things in store. The college and seminary will be in a better position than ever to serve the church.

An Attractive Pageant

Thirty of the girls of our Sisterhood of Mary and Martha presented an Easter Pageant, "All Hail," three times to large audiences, twice in this church and once in our church at Waynesboro. The pageant is the best presentation of the Easter message that we have ever seen, making a profound and lasting impression upon the hearers. The decorations in white with red roses and palms was of exceptional beauty. Much credit is due Mrs. W. H. Beachley, Sisterhood Patroness, for the success of the pageant.

Call for the Ninth Year

The church recently extended to the present pastor a call for the ninth year of service. The Lord has been most gracious in blessing the co-operative labors of this congregation during these eight years. Remarkable changes have been witnessed, marking a steady increase, both in numbers and in efficiency. To our Lord be the glory.

Dr. J. M. Tombaugh

The many friends of Brother Tombaugh will be glad to know that he is able to walk and ride out and that he has been able a few times in the past months to be present at the church. We feel sure that many of our readers will be glad to join us in praying for his full recovery. He has been a loyal co-laborer and we greatly miss him in the active work of the church.

Loss By Death

During the past few months we have lost several members by death. Joseph Zeigler, aged 65, a friend to many, was called home January 21. Mrs. Marietta Fahrney, aged 63, a good Christian mother, was called to her reward on February 26. Mrs. Helen Myers, a devoted wife and mother, departed February 22 at the early age of 27. Nine weeks later her little son, Omer, aged 6 months, went to be with his mother. Eldridge Keadle, aged 70, was laid to rest April 1. Death is passed upon all men. "Be ye therefore ready also for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." The sympathy of the church is extended to all the bereaved.

Brethren Tourists Stop

Many members of the Brethren church from various parts of our country pass through Hagerstown and we invite you to stop and ring the parsonage doorbell and see our church and the new annex.

Yours for victory,
G. C. CARPENTER.

FROM FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

We have not sent to the Evangelist a report from this place for a long time. One good reason is that we did not have anything of much interest to report. Still if we had tried real hard we might have succeeded in writing something after all.

However in a mission point in a large city it is one continual grind and that makes time pass very quickly. That I realize is more or less true everywhere, but nowhere any more so than in a large city, if as much.

We are making progress slowly but surely.

Our Sunday school has gone forth not with leaps and bounds but yet we have made some progress. Our church services have also somewhat increased in attendance.

We began an evangelistic meeting the second Sunday in January. Brother Harley Zumbaugh was with us to lead the song service. The weather however was very cold and so many of our people were sick that at the end of the first week we concluded to wait for a more convenient season. One lady came by letter at this time.

Two weeks before Easter we began another meeting which ended on Easter Sunday. In this meeting we tried a new experiment. The pastor preached on Sunday morning and evening, each Sunday. During the week we had the pastor of the missionary church preach on Monday night, W. I. Duker from Goshen and pastor of the Elkhart church on Tuesday night, Rev. Bantz of the Church of the Brethren on Wednesday night, Prof. Schutz of North Manchester on Thursday night, and Rev. Robison of the Baptist church on Friday night.

The second week we had Brother Lewis, the pastor of our church at Huntington, Brother Stuckman the pastor of the Goshen church, and Brother Albert Ronk of North Manchester preach. Brother Johnson of Roann who was booked for an evening failed to arrive and so the pastor had to fill in, and also on Friday night.

Now do not tell us that we people at Fort Wayne don't know what good preaching is. We had a conclusive demonstration of that fact in these two weeks of revival services. We want to thank all the good brethren for helping us out.

As a result we had four people to come by letter and one by baptism, and counting the one that came by letter at the meeting in January and another that came by baptism before the first meeting, we have seven additions to report.

On the evening of April 21st we also had a blessed communion service. Brother Johnson of Berne preached for us in the morning and in the evening we had twice as many people at the table as ever we had before.

We are trying very hard now to pay off the last of the contractors' debts by July first and if we succeed there will be great joy in the city. Pray for us that we may accomplish our purpose.

J. L. KIMMEL, D.D.

LOREE AND BURLINGTON Loree

We moved to the Loree congregation the first week in October and have been giving half time to the church here and half time to Burlington. We have been busy since coming here. In November we had a Fathers' and Sons' Banquet. There were 96 men and boys who ate together the sumptuous dinner prepared by the women of the W. M. S. Rev. Fred C. Vanator of Peru was the speaker of the evening.

At Christmas time the Sunday school gave a most wonderful pageant which was followed the next night by the opening of our revival meeting. The meeting continued three weeks with the pastor preaching and home talent leading the song service and giving special numbers. We had a good meeting in spite of the raging "flu" in the community. There was one confession during the services. A man of seventy years gave his life to God. We have been going along steadily doing our part in the work God has for us to do. The basement of the church has been remodeled and we are working for a larger Sunday school. We have found a loyal band of people at Loree always ready to follow their leader.

Burlington

We began our work with the Burlington church in October. Here we found a church willing to work and grow. We had our meeting here in December, there were no confessions, but the attendance at church and Sunday school was increased considerably. So we feel there was much good done. Since the meeting an orchestra of ten pieces has been organized, all young people of the church. A fine Easter program was given by the Sunday school and orchestra, consisting of a pageant and several musical numbers.

All special days were observed with offerings. We feel encouraged with outlook for the church at Burlington and ask the prayers of the Brethren.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

Fellow Brethren:

Several months have passed since the Lanark work has been reported. Perhaps some have looked for a brief word from this church, as we do from others.

An extra long and icy winter with the usual spring mud, has handicapped our church efforts and attendance. When one does not see the earth for ten weeks he may expect disappointments in many departments of the work. The city congregations know nothing of this. However, the most isolated are now returning, and perhaps plans and hopes may yet be realized.

Among the recent plans of the Sunday School Cabinet are, special preparations for: Mothers' Day, a Rally Day to be held May 19, and Children's Day. Our pastor at each monthly cabinet meeting presents a synopsis of the coming month's lessons, stressing the best teaching points.

The parsonage has finally been fitted with a bathroom; and we hope to rededicate the church before we entertain the District Conference. The W. M. S. has worked, with much success, toward developing a greater missionary spirit and personal prayer habit. Brother Fry says we are "missionary in spirit, and Scriptural in methods." The congregation has invited Brother Fry to serve us another year. He has not as yet accepted.

We greet and pray for the rest of the Brethren Family, and ask your prayers for us.

ALICE GARBBER,
Correspondent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

We are glad to learn of the progress in many places where faithful servants of the church have preached God's Word and the effort has been rewarded with souls born into the Kingdom. The work here has been handicapped by the "flu" and other illness that entered into many of the families, the pastor's family not being excepted. After his first attack of "flu" he had a relapse, which was worse than the first. After this trial he had a serious accident which prevented his being at the services for several weeks. God provided a leader each Sunday. We are thankful Brother Gotschall is able again to give us soul stirring sermons that strengthen us spiritually. We look to God for strength and grace to bear the difficulties and opposition that come to us. Our communion was celebrated the 21st of April, and it was a blessed service, with a fair attendance. The departments of the church are being kept up. We hope to make greater progress. We plead for the prayers of all who are interested in the Lord's cause. We pray that more laborers may be sent, for the harvest is great and the laborers are few. May the Lord of the harvest remember us in this city for greater accomplishments in the future. May God bless his cause everywhere, in the foreign fields and in the homeland, is our prayer.

MRS. E. J. HORNE.

Scripture, as hearing God speaking to him.

4. One who has a hymn book, and joins in the singing as earnestly as does the leader of the music.

5. One who follows and in heart joins in the thanksgiving, confession of sin, and in prayer and intercession.

6. One who bears himself with reverence of manner, suggesting devoutness to those around about him.

7. One who looks for the divine impress in the sermon, and not for rhetoric, elocution, or startling statements.

8. One who keeps his eye on the preacher, except when called upon to look up a text quoted and being explained.

9. One who takes the impress to himself, and in his heart looks for God's blessing with it.

10. One who has a look and a word of Christian courtesy for those near him in the church, after the solemn close of the service. The pastor asks his hearers to observe these points, especially the first. Wherever observed, they banish all criticism from the pew.—Sel.

DR. GRENFELL'S MOTHER

Wilfred T. Grenfell, M. D., whose work among the Labrador fishermen is one of the greatest of modern adventures in Christianity, is writing for The British Weekly, London, his spiritual autobiography under the title "What Christianity Means to Me." Here is a bit from his boyhood, with a glimpse of his mother:

"We never doubted anything that our mother told us. Her faith, all through her long life was a positive, calm assurance grounded firmly on the inner authority of her own spiritual experiences. What was infinitely more important to our faith was that we boys never once knew her deeds to belie her words; we never knew her to act in anger or unjustly. There is no denying the fact that a boy or man accepts unquestioningly from a person whom he loves that which, if he doubts the teacher in any way, his mind will challenge instantly. To the mind of every boy the mother he loves possesses naturally sources of wisdom which are not open to him. He does not query or analyze this fact. With our mother we somehow knew that she had a knowledge of truth which we did not have, and unquestionably she had. It was the inner light that Christ says comes from following in his footsteps. Even later in life, when our imperious personalities demanded a why and wherefore from everyone else, when our conceit of intellect was betraying us into supposing that if we could not with our protoplasmic brain cells comprehend or find an answer to every difficulty, we must, in order to be honorable, refuse to believe it, we still found in her assurance something which satisfied us. Our mother was no talker or controversialist. A thousand times I have thought of that when I read of the Christ, Who 'shall not strive or cry,' or in a different sense, of those 'who shall not be heard for their much speaking.'

"Among my treasures lies a book of my mother's, which I value more than her Bible. It is her account book summary ledger. The cares of a large school, and a family of four boys, and endless other difficulties, which owing to the high-strung temperament of our family complicated the problems of a quiet routine, were sufficient to break the calm of almost any mind. Nothing of this was ever known to me. Only in looking over her books after she had left us did I discover this wonderful record of her faithful stewardship through the passing years, during which we had taken everything for granted and unthinkingly accepted all that we wanted. Here was the record of year after year, year after year, of endless patient work, uninteresting and monotonous, and all done for us. As I look at the rows of figures, page after page, so neat, so carefully entered, and so wonderfully analyzed and balanced, in the handwriting which I loved so dearly, a new light seems to open up to me, showing a great deal more of what Christ had meant to me in my normal boyhood than I had ever been conscious of. He meant a mother who brought him right into our family life just by doing daily what he would do in her place, and unquestionably into our personal lives, too, even if we were not able to recognize and proclaim the fact vocally in those days even to ourselves.

"In looking back on my youth after many years I have come to feel that this attitude was as it should be. Religion to deserve the title should bear the stamp of normality; and for a boy to have been too introspective about its possession during the days of childhood might have been as undesirable as a similarly attentive attitude to the welfare of his physical digestion, of which it is wisely said he should be quite unconscious."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

INTERNATIONAL SCHOOLS FOR LEADERSHIP TRAINING

While there are many training schools in all parts of the country, the three International Council schools present some very unique features which should appeal to workers in religious education. One of these is the opportunity for fellowship with workers from all denominations. Those who have attended these schools attest to the great value of this interdenominational fellowship.

A second feature of these International schools is their appeal to persons engaged in cooperative work in religious education. In the school at Lake Geneva and the one at Geneva Glen, there will be held in 1929 a seminar for workers engaged in cooperative religious education enterprises. Several members of the International Council Staff, as well as city and state secretaries, are listed as leaders for these seminars.

The opportunity to take work on an advanced level has attracted many students. While the International schools continue to offer a major part of their work on the basis of the Standard Leadership Training Curriculum, in each of the schools there are one or more advanced units for professional or semi-professional workers. Some of the recognized leaders in religious education have been secured to teach these advanced courses.

A unique feature about the school at Lake Geneva is the Laboratory School for elementary workers. Through this school workers in the Primary and Junior Departments of the church school are enabled to learn how better to do their work by actually working with children under the direction of a competent leader and through observing other competent persons at work.

The faculties for the 1929 International schools include such well known names as Miss Florence E. Norton, Miss Jeannette Perkins, Professor John W. Prince, Mr. Erwin L. Shaver, and Professor Norman E. Richardson. The International Council rightly insists that attending one of these Leadership Schools means more than taking two or three courses. It is an experience in leadership which begins when the student arrives and lasts continuously through the ten days that he is on the campus. The entire program is so arranged as to lead to spiritual enrichment, wholesome fellowship, and increase in knowledge and skill. The dates for the 1929 schools are as follows:

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 22-August 3; Geneva Glen, Colorado, August 5-17; Lake Winnepesaukee, New Hampshire, August 5-17.

Those who are interested in receiving further information about these schools may write to

THE INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, 5 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

OUT OF THE NIGHT

One night I was leaning over the gunwale of the ship in the very middle of the ocean between New York and Liverpool. The deck was brilliantly lit, and I was alone upon it. It was a quiet night, though there had been a day or two of high winds and rough sea. I heard a slight flutter of wings, and at the same instant a small bird about the size of a starling rested on the gunwale beside me. Beside me, observe! If it had been mere material security it was seeking, it could have landed on any part of those hundreds of feet of gunwale. But it chose to nestle beside me, the only human being in sight. I could have put my hand upon it, and I seemed to know that if I had put out my hand to lift it it would not have flown away. I remember also that somehow I was not surprised to see it there. I remember rather how touched and gratified I was that I should have been chosen as the little creature's confidante.

Without moving my body, I spoke to the little bird, and it seemed to be listening. Just then an officer came up the deck, and as he approached I put out my hand behind me to signal him to stop. Without raising my voice I asked him to come alongside to my left. The bird was on my right.

"A bird is sitting here beside me," I said in an even voice. "It literally blew in two minutes ago." He peered round to have a look. "It's a land bird," said he, "and the Newfoundland coast is the land nearest to our position at the moment." He told me that sometimes a bird borne out to sea and beaten by the winds takes refuge on a ship.

With this the quartermaster came along.

OUR LITTLE READERS

SACRIFICING FOR MOTHER

"You shouldn't have taken it out of your hanky, you silly." The little girl said it with a motherly mixture of fright, anger, and joy to her big brother of twelve who under the smile of fortune forgot his seniority of two years.

As I waited several minutes for the street car I watched their little tragedy staged on the sidewalk. They had crossed the street hand in hand, hurrying against the cold wind into the light from the druggist's window. Then it must have happened, for they had stopped suddenly and began to search the shadows of the gutter. There were jerky little sobs from the girl as they both stooped and peered and groped. From a humble home in one of the side streets they had doubtless come. Though hardly proof against the raw cold of a gusty winter's night, they were not ill clad, and their sturdy cobbled shoes and home-knitted stockings certainly took them out of the neglected class.

"Here it is!" cried the smaller, lifting a bright half dollar piece into the light. "Now I'll hold it myself. Come on!"

And they planted themselves before the window, aglow with electric lights that gleamed through huge bottles of green and amber and lurked in transparent shells.

"Can't you see it?" whispered the girl. "It's got to have 50 cents marked on it and yellow paper, same as Mrs. Leary has on hers. She said they call it 'linxup.' You can read, Billy, can't you?"

"Sure I can, Gwen; leave me be a minute." And Billy's eyes wandered over every kind of toilet preparation and patent medicine till he lit on the desired wrapper and spelled out: "L-i-n-x-u-p." "That's something like linxup," he said; "but if I can't say it right, the man might chase us."

"I ain't afraid of the man," piped Gwen, and, looking up with a doubt in her eyes, "Billy, you don't mean you want to go to the picture show after all?"

"No, I don't," he answered. "You know I was the first who thought of it."

"Of course, Billy, I know," and a glance of trust again united the tiny plotters. They were such a queer little pair and so earnest about something that I stepped over and dropping a hand on the boy's shoulder, asked: "What do you want to get, little chap?"

Gwen gave the answer: "We're going to buy some linxup for mother same as Mrs. Leary had. Mother's got a dreadful cough, and it keeps her awake at night, and Aunt Biddy gave us half a dollar to go to the picture show and to buy peanuts; but we've decided to give mother a surprise and buy her linxup, so's it'll make her all right again."

After this speech—in one breath—I proposed that I should go in with them and see that they got the right thing; but their eager faces told me that would spoil the adventure, and making sure that Billy had the correct name, I watched them enter the pharmacy and level their noses with the glass case of sponges, brushes, and combs.

The clean-shaven young man in a white jacket wrapped up the parcel, tipped the corners with wax at a little gas jet before their admiring eyes, and handed it over. The register with a sharp ring bobbed up the amount of their purchase and signaled them out again from the perfumed atmosphere into the night. But the excitement had flustered Billy's presence of mind, and in dismay he moaned: "O I forgot to ask the man how much she was to take! Do you know, sir?"

I didn't, but with some craning I managed to read the directions on a bottle in the window, "A dessert-spoonful every three hours, or when the cough is troublesome," and with this committed to heart the small couple were ready to prescribe.

I told them I was glad they had got things right and could now run home out of the cold, but I had not gauged the dramatic possibilities.

"That won't do," said Gwen, the little stage manager. "We can't go home till the picture show is out or mother would be sorry 'cos we had missed our fun. We're going to stand near the door and look at the posters, ain't we, Billy?" And Billy said that was the idea.

How I despised the loose silver in my pocket that I dared not use. It would have been too cheap and easy. But they told me they lived at No. 16 in the first street down the hill; then they trotted off with the parcel that was to bring healing to mother before morning. I ventured a call with young Dr. Ted the next day. The doctor called on many other days, for their mother's trouble was little beyond the honest and useful "linxup" the children had given away a dazzling night of joy to provide.

Things are doing nicely now at No. 16, for that sister of mine has also taken a hand in the game.—Percy B. Prior, in The Christian Advocate.

IN THE SHADOW

WILKINS—Stanford George Wilkins was born in Kansas City, Mo., May 19, 1912 and departed this life at the Fort Scott hospital, Sunday morning of March 24, 1929, at the age of 16 years, 10 months and 5 days.

He was a son of John and Blanche Wilkins, both of whom preceded him in death. For several years he had made his home with an aunt, Miss Nannie Wilkins, on the old home place, near Richards, Mo. He is survived by one brother, Russell Wilkins, and by seven uncles and eight aunts.

He was suddenly stricken with appendicitis, and rushed to the hospital where all that human skill could do could not avail. He was unusually healthy before this attack, and was highly respected by his many friends.

The funeral was conducted from the Cheney Parlors, by the writer. Many paid their respects with beautiful floral offerings. Burial was made in the family lot in the Evergreen Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

ROGERS—Ralph Rogers, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Rogers of Springfield, Missouri, was born in Fort Scott, Kansas, 17 years ago. The Roger family lived in Fort Scott for several years after Ralph was born, then moved to

The funeral was conducted at the Presbyterian church of Fort Scott, Kansas, April 14th, by the writer, in the absence of the pastor.

There were many beautiful floral offerings and a large concourse attended the service. Burial was made in the family lot in the Evergreen Cemetery.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XII. THE CHALLENGE OF THE HOUR

By Charles H. Ashman

The Church of Jesus Christ is being challenged today! She is face to face with conditions, problems, questions, and situations which constitute a mighty challenge. There is no evasion of the issues! She must speak and act! Indifference is laziness and cowardice. Compromise is hypocrisy. Ignorance is a curse. The challenge must be met!

The apostasy of this hour is a challenge. It is a challenge from the devil. It is that "root of sin," unbelief, issuing the war cry to "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." It is the question mark of skepticism challenging the exclamation mark of "thus saith the Lord" of revelation. It is the "falling away" struggle for the mastery of the church in opposition to the faithfulness of those who remain "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." The battleground of this challenge is the supernatural character and the inspiration of the Scriptures.

The lukewarmness, worldliness and hypocrisy within the church is also a challenge. Will the temple of the Lord be purified? Will the "accursed stuff" buried beneath the tent of Achan be brought forth? Will Ananias and Sapphira lie with impunity to the Holy Ghost? Will the beam-pickers and camel-swallowers continue? Or will the Brethren Church return to the distinctiveness of Christian living that marked the "separateness" of the apostolic days?

The unfinished task of the church is another challenge. The supreme mission of the church is world evangelization. The Body and Bride of Christ is not yet completed. The Great Commission has not been carried out. The challenge is to Life, Intercession, and Money. Who will go? Who will pray? Who will pay?

The church can meet this challenge. Divine resources are at her command. She is richly endowed with natural energies and "increased in goods." But does she possess the faith and surrender and consecration? Johnstown, Pa.

RUSSELLISM is still alive

The religious cult founded by the late "Pastor" Russell used to be discussed quite frequently in orthodox pulpits as a menace to the cause of true Christianity. Lately the matter seems to have been almost entirely dropped, doubtless because many pastors felt that their members had been instructed as to its unscriptural nature, and also because they believed the cult was dying.

As a matter of fact, it is far from dead. Apparently with unlimited funds, it is making a strenuous campaign, mainly over the radio, to secure converts from Protestant churches. In July of 1928 Judge Rutherford, present leader of the movement, spoke over a chain of ninety-six stations. The time taken, for his address was one hour and a half. The cost of this radio service must have been staggering. A well known automobile company paid $42,000 for an hour to advertise its product over only forty-seven stations. Where the money comes from to finance Judge Rutherford's radio campaign is not certain, but the cult seems to have plenty of cash.

Pastors should meet this gigantic propaganda over the radio by exposing from their pulpits the errors of Russellism. Many pastors have done this in past years, but we ought not forget that our churches have many new members who may never have heard a sermon on this subject.

There is no religious cult in America which contains more error than Russellism. It denies the Deity of Jesus Christ, declares that he was annihilated on the Cross, rejects the doctrine of his bodily resurrection, and teaches that the second Coming of Christ has already taken place. Many sincere Christians, not knowing its true nature, have been misled by its hypercritical pretensions.

Let us not sleep. The enemy never sleeps.

THE "dangers" of Smoking for Women.

Bryn Mawr, famous college for women, was the first institution of its kind to countenance smoking for students. Recently some specific regulations were adopted there for the guidance of those who indulge in the habit. The sole object of these regulations, according to reports, is to keep the students from burning down the buildings. Nothing whatever is said about the possible effects upon the young women.

In some respects at least, we seem to be living in a "new" world. Values are changing. There was a time when institutions like Bryn Mawr regarded human life as the highest possible value. Material equipment was important, but secondary. At the risk of being called "reactionary," some of us will continue to believe that the "temple" of the human spirit is worth more than college dormitories.

"If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. Let no man deceive himself." (1 Cor. 3:17-18).

MAN'S First Appearance upon Earth

The anthropologists and the archaeologists have been working industriously for years, seeking to solve the problem of the history of the human race. Two main questions have been before the minds of these scientists: First, did man gradually evolve from the animal world? Second, how long has man been upon the earth?

As to the latter question, the scientists are still very much in disagreement, but the tendency, especially among the archaeologists, is to shorten the period of human history. This is interesting and gratifying to Bible students. But more important still is the first question. Professor Breasted, who has been digging for many years among the oldest haunts of men, declares that he is convinced that man appeared suddenly upon the earth.

Christian students of the Bible have never had any serious doubts upon this point. The first chapter of Genesis brings man into existence suddenly as a new creation unique and distinct from all that had come before. "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1:27).

Christian faith does not rest upon scientific research, but it is gratifying to know that the earth is yielding up evidence in support of the Bible account.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by

J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

30. Ought a young person to rely wholly upon his feelings in deciding upon the Ministry as a life-work, or should he wait for his church to take some cognizance of his qualifications?

This question merits a longer answer than I can give in this column. But briefly it may be said that the feelings are most uncertain as a foundation upon which any decisive matter should be determined. Feelings constantly change. Many so-called conversions have no deeper root than these changeable feelings and when the feeling wears off or dies away the man falls again into sin. The reason is clear,—the foundations upon which the pseudo-spiritual experience rested gave way and the experience went with it. So in the matter of any choice whatsoever when it rests upon no surer and more lasting grounds it will prove disastrous. The feelings have their place and they have their influence in the making of a life and the doing of a life-work. As for the second method proposed in the above question it should be said that the church certainly should have a voice in this matter, if it is no more than to give her sanction to the choice a young man may make. Personally I believe that the church can speak with a greater authority and with a greater clarity than any other voice to which a young man might listen in the matter of the ministry as a life work. What appeals to me with force is the example given us in Acts 13:1-5. Here the church at Antioch became aware of the call of two men to a special work. The church acting through the leadership of the Holy Spirit sent these men forth unto their work. Another illustration of the church at work bearing upon this point is Acts 6:1-7. Here a special need arose in the church administration itself and the church again acted in a worthy manner to meet that need. An intelligent and prayerful recognition of the need of the world for the Gospel, a surrender of life to the will of God whatever that will may disclose as the course to be taken, and the consciousness of the ability by the grace of God—(I mean here, the natural ability and the development of the same,)—to meet that need and thereby fulfil God's will, constitutes in my mind all the call a young man needs to the work of the Gospel ministry. A wise and far-seeing church will note such young men and send them forth into the fields ready for the reapers.

31. We as a church are experiencing a growing caution about the ordination of ministers and an increased tendency to guard the integrity of the ministry. Ought not there be some means of securing and maintaining a higher standard in the deaconship?

Questions about the deacons and their work keep coming up. I conclude that this must be a rather live problem in some form or other in all our churches. This is probably just because, as this questioner suggests, we have given too little attention to the deacon and the deaconess, their qualifications, the nature of their duties, their term of service, manner of election and their ordination. I have another question which I will here insert and then reply to both in a few lines. I will certainly then have covered the field on deacons.

32. When a man is elected deacon, is it always our practice to elect his wife a deacon at the same time? If so, why? Is there Biblical ground for it?—"An Evangelist Subscriber."

Subscriber of course means to ask whether the wife should be elected a deaconess. To which I should say without hesitancy, No, not just because the husband is elected a deacon. But if the wife has the Scriptural qualifications as laid down by Paul in 1 Timothy, chapter 3 and the church so determines, there is no reason why the wife may not be elected and serve the church with her husband. In Ohio by action of our State Conference THE MANUAL OF PROCEDURE has been adopted. Chapter One, Sections II, III, and IV set forth the officers, their respective duties and the manner of their call and ordination. Thus the church has provided safeguards as well as a method of procedure relating to deacons.

The Proper Emphasis in the Minister's Work

One of the great dangers to which the minister is subject is that of mis-placing the emphasis in his work. There are so many things that demand his time and energy,—many things that are more or less worth while but not of really great importance—that if he is not constantly on guard, he may be led to spend himself on things that really do not count, or on things that some one else could do just as well or better than he. He is constantly being tempted to give himself to every sort of activity that has little or nothing to do with the main task to which he is set apart. Or if it is not a temptation to waste time on things that have scarcely any relation to his work, it very often is a temptation to overlook the principal things or to give them inadequate attention, while the secondary phases of his work consume his time. This he has no right to do. Faithfulness demands that he shall keep the emphasis properly placed, that he shall not allow the side-shows to consume the main tent, nor the incidentals of his office to blind his eyes to the things of major importance.

Churches not infrequently encourage this tendency by stressing the things of secondary importance in regard to the preacher's task. Some congregations would make their minister primarily a money-raiser, and a deviser of financial methods. Others would have him to be first of all a good mixer and to give attention chiefly to making himself attractive and agreeable in a social way. Others would make of him a sort of a chore boy. Others would have him be a civic leader, or a reformer. And others have other ideas as to how the minister should spend his time. It is necessary, therefore, that he shall keep his vision clear with regard to the things of first importance and not allow himself to be sidetracked and his ministry cheapened.

There are not many things that are worthy to stand out as important in the work of the minister. There may be a great many things entering into his life in a small way, or as side issues, or as supplementary factors to his ministry, if carefully guarded, but there are only a few that the man of God is justified in putting in the very center of his interest and effort. Some one has suggested that there are only four. The Christian Monitor has taken this view and has set forth the "four fields of service" of the minister in a clear-cut manner worthy of our notice. From this esteemed contemporary, a Mennonite publication, we quote the following:

The minister's first place of service is in the place of STUDY. Without study the minister has no message; he may have a message, but not the message of God. This place of study should be one of the best places in the house. The minister should enter this sanctuary at least once every day. To study, to meditate, to read, to pray, to sermonize. Here to find the "finest of the wheat," and the luscious "grapes of Eschol."

The minister's second place of service is the PULPIT. This is his real place of business. A man who has no message has no place in the pulpit. Many an otherwise good man has had his career spoiled by entering the ministry, or by some one else putting him in the ministry, when the good man belonged somewhere else. All the talk, "well he is a good man," will never feed the church, and it will never preach the Gospel to men who are lost and dying. His good example could well be used outside of the pulpit. The Word of God makes one qualification so plain, that he who runs may read, "apt to teach." The minister's message in the pulpit should be plain, evangelical, and with no trimming.

The minister's third place of service is the CHURCH. In this sphere he gives good precepts, he should be a good example, he should maintain a scriptural and wholesome discipline, he should be faithful in all the ordinances, he should visit the flock of God, he should keep his eye upon all the flock, noticing especially the weak, the erring, the discouraged, the indifferent, and the back-slidden. Much good work can be done by faithful commendation both publicly and privately. Commendation is like giving oats to the horse that pulls, it keeps him in good condition. A little oil often goes a long way with a rusty lock, and human nature even in the church needs some attention frequently, so that the Word of God may enter the heart freely.

The minister's last sphere of service is in the WORLD. The salvation of men and women in the world is the big task of the church, especially the ministry. The poor, the lost, the straying, the sinning, the ungodly, in the world, all need the Gospel. Let us not pull our "Holy Robes" around us, like the Priest and the Levite on the Jericho Road, and pass them by on the other side, while we attend some House of God, or a Conference where we go to discuss "how to reach the masses." When Matthew the Publican was saved, his first message was carried to his lost friends out in the world. He made a "Great Feast" to the publicans and sinners. The more men that we save from the world, the more will we be kept from the destructive powers of that world. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." What is the extent of our love for that same world might indeed be a question for all of us? Will God and the world receive our unprofitable lives, or shall we keep them ourselves and lose them eternally?

Here are four fields of service that are absolutely vital; four essential and inescapable responsibilities of the Christian ministry. They are so all-important that they can not be neglected or slighted, not one of them, for the sake of giving time to any of the side-issues or incidentals of the ministry. We can well afford to watch ourselves, we who are called to speak the Word of God to the people, in this day of constantly increasing demands upon our time, that we do not allow ourselves to lose sight of the high purposes of our calling. We need a rededication of the ministry to the singleness of purpose that characterized the apostolic preachers, who directed that the church should choose others to "serve tables" while they gave themselves "continually to prayer and the ministry of the word."

The Care of Church Property

While riding through the country recently we were treated to a marked contrast with regard to the appearance of church properties. First we came upon a modest, but neatly painted church building planted in the midst of a spacious, well-kept lawn. Every part of the building seemed to be in good repair. From foundation to steeple everything was in perfect condition. Shrubbery was planted in well-arranged fashion about the premises and in the midst of the lawn on both sides of the church was a flower bed filled with blooming geraniums. The very atmosphere about the place indicated care and reverence for the church building, as if those in charge considered it in very truth a sanctuary, and we experienced a desire to stop our journey and go into the church and worship there.

Passing on a few miles we came to another country church, which presented us with the most decided contrast that it is possible to imagine in the care of churches. The building had doubtless been well constructed, and it was not unusually old, but it had fallen into careless hands and had become terribly dilapidated. The paint had been worn off by the weather, the siding had curled up and in many places the boards were split. The stained glass windows had several glasses broken out that had been replaced with card-board. The tower in which the bell hung reminded one of an old, faded high-top hat that needed cleaning and reblocking. One of the double doors had a panel split, and the cement steps and approach were deteriorating and crumbling. The yard was full of weeds and uncut grass, and never a flower or shrub had been planted. The whole appearance was the acme of neglect and carelessness. It was a shameful sight, and we were ill at ease until we had gotten beyond view of it. What a contrast we had faced in the care of church properties! What a tell-tale of the type of people who worshipped there!

It is not often that we meet with such radical contrasts, but all too often we see evidences of neglect with regard to the care of church property. This ought not to be. Such neglect has an unwholesome influence upon the worshippers, especially on the children and young people, and it makes a bad impression on strangers and passersby. After having witnessed such a contrast, we can understand better the feeling that moved Robert Cashman, business manager of Chicago Theological Seminary, to say in "Church Management" last February:

I have often wondered why ministers and their assistants and associates do not take more interest in the care and appearance of church property.

In the first place, there is always a feeling to me, that it is the "property of the Lord" as well as of the people. It has been dedicated to him. Therefore it is holy and my attitude toward it is reverent. Psalms 84:10 has a very real meaning to me when it says, "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

A well kept church is an asset to the community.

It is difficult for me to maintain a spirit of worship in a church which is not well kept. Recently, I attended one of our larger churches in Chicago, and, without intending to be critical, I soon found myself noting the following: three lamps in the center cluster were dead; several lamps were missing entirely from the fixtures at the sides of the room. One pipe of the pipe-organ was leaning out of place. The numbers of the hymns on the bulletin board were dirty from long use. Several pieces of string and paper from the Christmas decorations of the previous season were hanging from the light and other fixtures of the building.

I have a great sympathy for David's desire to build a beautiful house for the Lord. If the buildings of the church are not kept painted and decorated, if the roof leaks when it rains, and the walls become discolored, if the windows are not kept clean and in good repair, if the racks are falling loose from the back of the pews, and holes are wearing in the carpets, such as we would never tolerate in our homes or offices, how can we maintain a spirit of reverence and devotion to the house of God?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

God's promises are faithful and true everywhere and always—to him who fulfils the conditions.

If you find that you must stand alone for a principle that is good and right, stand, and thank God for the opportunity. You cannot prove your mettle half so well when the crowd is with you.

Sister Sheldon tells us of the experiences of the Sheldons on the Oubangui River, as they were making their way out of Africa for their furlough home. This is the second installment of their trip experiences.

From the Pittsburgh church we have an attractive and well-arranged program for the observance of Mother's Day. By special features and other means they are endeavoring to maintain interest in their work while they are temporarily without a pastor.

As we were going to press we received request for communion announcement, service to be held at Carleton, Nebraska, Thursday evening, May 23, at 8 o'clock. The invitation is not only to members, but to others of like faith. Brother W. R. Deeter is pastor.

We are in receipt of a neatly printed church directory booklet of the Brethren church at Washington, D. C., where Brother Homer A. Kent is the efficient pastor. The booklet contains, among other things, the membership roll and officary of the church and various organizations, also the constitution of the church.

Our office was favored this week with a visit from Dr. Ernest G. Hoff, editor of the Sunday school publications of the Brethren Publishing House at Elgin, Illinois. Brother Hoff was on his way to New York to attend an editorial conference on Sunday school story papers. We appreciated the call and the fine fraternal spirit of our fellow-editor.

The program for the Southeastern district conference arrived just in time to be included in this paper. A splendid program it is and with a good attendance, we are sure our Brethren of that district will have a successful conference. Oak Hill church is anxious for a large delegation. The pastor, Brother Freeman Ankrum, gives instructions about reaching the place.

Christian Endeavorers are beginning to report the work of their societies at the request of their general secretary, Miss Gladys Spie, who presents again the goals as outlined at last National Conference. The society at Oakville, Indiana, reports splendid success in their effort to reach these goals. Other reports will appear from week to week. If you have not written, do so now.

From a personal communication from Brother E. L. Miller, of Mauretown, Virginia, we learn that he is carrying on in his characteristic energetic manner, carrying an unusually heavy load, but happy in it all. He recently closed a two weeks' meeting at Harrisonburg. We have not had his one-time customary quarterly report for some time. Brother Miller always has good things to report, and we are promised a letter in the near future.

From the First church of Philadelphia comes a report of spiritual progress that is encouraging. A very successful communion was observed. A number of accessions are reported and some have dedicated themselves to service in the mission field. The Easter offering for Foreign Missions was $2,300, which is an indication of the very intense missionary spirit that has been developed there. Brother R. Paul Miller is the able pastor of this church.

Brother G. E. Drushal writes of the work at Riverside Institute and of the appeals for a continuance of our undertakings in behalf of the educational needs of the young people of that district. They have taken into the school one boy for whom no provision is made for support, and the opportunity is presented to some society or organization to meet this need. Miss Carrie Stoffer has volunteered to teach in the school at Lost Creek. Brother E. M. Davidson has been ordained to the ministry and is helping out with the work at Krypton.

Dr. C. F. Yoder's letter this week indicates that the work in Argentina is still going forward, though in the face of many difficulties and always with much hard work. Three baptisms are reported from Alejandro, at Cabrera many of the wayward have returned, and at Laboulaye and at Realco there are requests for and instruction preparatory to baptism. There are calls for these privileges elsewhere. Other indications of progress are also to be noted. Sister Nielsen's return to the field was an occasion of rejoicing.

President E. E. Jacobs, in his college news this week, calls our attention to Education Day and its goal. He tells us that $5,000 is necessary this year if the college is to meet the financial requirements for standardization. He says he has urged the importance of this so often, he imagines it begins to sound like the "Wolf! Wolf!" cry. If any one has been impressed that way, we hope they will be reminded of the attitude that many complacent dwellers in the famous Conemaugh valley took toward the warning sounded of the approaching flood that wrought such destruction in Johnstown in 1889. The people had been repeatedly warned but they gave it little attention and on the day when the flood actually came, many people ignored the warning altogether and perished. It is to be hoped that our church people are not closing their ears to these appeals and warnings of Dr. Jacobs. For the situation is just as grave as it has been represented, and more. The college absolutely must standardize or its future as a college is dark. But it will meet the test and the church constituency will make it possible. We believe the results of this coming Educational Day will be surprisingly encouraging. With the hearty support of all pastors and church leaders it will be so.

OUR PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray—especially Maryland and Virginia people—for the Southeastern district conference to be held at Oak Hill, West Virginia, June 11 to 13.

Brother Drushal asks us to continue to pray for the Lost Creek work, that the will of the Lord may be done.

Brother R. I. Humbert asks not a request, but an acknowledgment of answer to prayer: "We praise our Lord for answered prayer in behalf of the Foreign Mission Offering at this place. It totals over $700.00.

Pelley's "Seven Minutes in Eternity"

(A review of William Dudley Pelley's experience in the light of Holy Writ)

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

(NOTE—In "THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE" for March, 1929, appeared a very remarkable article, purporting to be an account of the actual experience of the well-known author, William Dudley Pelley. The article is entitled, "Seven Minutes in Eternity—The Amazing Experience that Made Me Over.")

The article attracted so much attention that we felt we should make a reply to it through our pulpit. The sermon preached was brought to the attention of the Editor of "THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE" by one who heard it, and, in compliance with a request, the substance of the sermon was written and submitted to the Editor. The Editor wrote, thanking us for the article, but, for reasons which we need not discuss here, he felt that it could not be published in "THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE." However, in compliance with a number of requests, we are submitting the matter to "THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST" for publication.

In order that there may be a better understanding of the whole matter, it will be necessary for us to give a brief statement here as to the experience through which Mr. Pelley passed, for the benefit of those who do not have access to the magazine in question.

Mr. Pelley tells us that in the month of April, 1928, he retired to a bungalow in the Sierra Madre Mountains, near Pasadena, California, for the purpose of doing some literary work. One night (between three and four o'clock in the early morning), he awoke with a consciousness that he was dying. He declares it was not a dream, and that he passed out of his body into the other world. In that other world, he passed through strange experiences. He awoke within that world with the consciousness that he was nude, but by means of a bath in a "clear-as-crystal Roman pool," he received clothing. He met and talked with many of the friends he had known on earth, and they revealed to him things which, after his return to this life, now convince him that the experience was a reality. Some time after his return from "Eternity," he passed through a second experience which made a completely new man of him. As to this "regeneration," the Editor of "THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE" gives testimony, not only in the magazine itself but in a personal letter to Mr. Walter Strong, who was responsible for our submitting the sermon to the Editor.

It is impossible for us to deny that William Dudley passed through this remarkable experience. We have no desire to deny it. Our desire is rather to look into the spiritual forces that were responsible for that experience. To that end, we preached the sermon that aroused considerable interest, and we herewith submit the substance of that sermon exactly as it was submitted to the Editor of "THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE."—Louis S. Bauman, Long Beach, California.)

The writer frankly confesses that he is a Christian minister of the Gospel, the son of a Dunker preacher. He was taught from boyhood that the Bible is an authentic revelation from the only true God. For thirty-five years, the Bible has been his chief study. He has no reason to doubt that in the sacred Scriptures, we have an absolutely authentic revelation from God. He subscribes to the idea that the Bible carries to men a clear and definite message, and should be taken at its face value. He believes that the Bible "means just what it says;" but, also, that it is frequently made to mean what it does not say.

For a number of years, he has been interested especially in the revelation the Bible gives as to the spirit world. It was while delivering a series of lectures on the subject, "Spirits and the Spirit Worlds," that THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE (March number) came to his study with the amazing record of an experience with and in the spirit world, by William Dudley Pelley.

Assuredly, the writer is not among those who "Pooh! Pooh!" and ask, "What did this talented writer have to eat and drink on a certain night, late in the month of April, 1928?" "Pooh! Pooh!" is a poor answer to stubborn facts. Nor are we of those who would place the blame on "Lady Nicotine," although it would seem that twenty years' consumption of from twelve to twenty cigars daily, with the old "corn-cob" blazing away in such "in-between-times" as may have existed, might have something to do with overwrought nerves and fantastic dreams. We shall accredit the story of Mr. Pelley as genuine, believing that he is giving an absolutely sincere statement of an experience through which he passed, no matter how faulty his interpretation of his experience may be or may not be.

Also, we believe, with Mr. Pelley, that we are fast approaching a day when the human race is going to weary of its gross materialism, and gain a closer contact with the realms beyond. History, sacred and profane, gives abundant proof that, time and time again, our race has established close relations with the spirit world. Those who laugh need to consider as to whether they are so engrossed in our present-day materialism that it is impossible for them to comprehend things spiritual. Material science dominates the world today so that, in the face of its intolerance, the supernatural has but little chance. However, it will not always be so. The spiritual nature of man forbids. We believe Mr. Pelley to be right when he says, "The day is coming in the evolution of the race when spirituality is going to be the whole essence of life, instead of the world's present materialism."

The Scriptures assuredly teach of the existence of a realm of spirits, much nearer to us than we sometimes believe—a realm in which there are spirits both good and bad. And, the spirits of that world unseen assuredly play upon us humans in this material world, "if," as Mr. Pelley says, "we so order our lives and thinking as to be susceptible to such revelations."

Indeed, according to sacred story, it was the close contact that the "daughters of men" had with "the sons of God" "in the days of Noah," that brought the flood upon the earth. While some controversy exists as to whom these "sons of God" may have been, very generally it is held by able Bible students that they were fallen inhabitants from a spirit world. Strange as it may seem, they managed to establish contact with "the daughters of men," resulting in a race of "giants" (Nephilim, i. e., "fallen ones") upon the earth, who became "mighty men which were of old, men of renown." Also, "In the days of Lot," Sacred Writ informs us that the awful sin of Sodom was an attempt on the part of the men of the city to establish contact with "two angels that came to Sodom at even,"—guests of Lot. If the thought of angels (spirits) having relations with mankind, is to be rejected as incredible, then must the Biblical accounts of angels eating and drinking and washing their feet, in such passages as Genesis 18:7, 8 and 19:1-3, be rejected as incredible. But, once granting the existence of spirit-beings who appear in spirit-bodies, why should their ability, if God shall permit, to affect seriously the bodies of men and women, be thought a thing incredible? Nor do the Scriptures teach anywhere that angels are sexless, even though they "neither marry nor are given in marriage." If the divine record is to be received, we are not compelled to regard as impossible, or even as improbable, Mr. Pelley's experience. "There was some one in that darkening room with me beside Laska, my dog," he says,—the "some one" being "living, vibrant personalities" from the spirit world, he believes. If the story of Lot is credible, why not the story of Pelley? Inasmuch as the Master himself declared that days are yet again to be as it was in "the days of Noah," and "as it was in the days of Lot," should we be surprised at a repetition of the close relations men then had with supernatural beings from another sphere?

in which men, when not unduly engrossed in materialism, established close contact with the spirit world. Indeed, intercommunion with the world of evil spirits was the outstanding sin of the inhabitants of Canaan, and for which they fell under the wrath of Jehovah and were driven forth. It was the sin against which Jehovah again and again warned his people, Israel, and into which they again and again fell. It was the sin for which Saul lost his crown, when, through the witch of Endor, he "brought up Samuel." They were the denizens of this underworld that persuaded Ahab to "go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead." It was a "mountain full of horses and chariots" from a spirit world that surrounded Elisha and his servant at Dothan, and which was seen when "the Lord opened the eyes of the young man." That spirit-beings could come into close quarters with men was surely attested by the defeated Syrians, who, in the days of Elisha, terrified by that very experience, "came no more into the land of Israel."

The New Testament record gives similar testimony. The Apostle Paul solemnly entreats us to "Put on the whole armour of God . . . for our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." The enemy here is nothing less than spirits from the underworld, unseen, yet tremendously real. Evil spirits were constantly commanded by the Master to come forth out of men, women and children, whom they were injuriously affecting. And good angels, the Book says, "are ministering spirits." It was an angel that talked with the woman at the tomb of Christ. It was an angel that "smote Peter on the side, and raised him up," and led him forth from the prison where Herod's "four quarter-nions of soldiers," with all their chains, could not keep him. If visitors from a spirit world could "smite Peter on his side" and deliver him from the chains of Herod, why must we reject the experience of "Bill" Pelley when a visitor from the spirit world entered his room and "knocked" his "corn-cob" from his "hands with a slap that tossed it upward in the air and deposited it bottom upward" at his "feet with the tobacco spilled out?"

To reject as "incredible" and "impossible" the experience of William Dudley Pelley would be to reject as incredible and impossible the Scriptures themselves, which some do. "Bill" Pelley is giving but another of many experiences men have had, strongly confirming the reality of a spirit world. Indeed, the entire experience of the Apostle John, on Patmos, is the record of the leaving of his body of flesh for a season, and entering into the great spirit world, receiving therein a revelation from God himself. In that revelation, we have the assurance that spirits from another world will, in the last days, so affect even kings, that "persuaded," as in the case of Ahab, they will be "gathered together in a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon,"—to "go up and fall" there.

It is not Mr. Pelley alone who is testifying in these days of the reality of entering into fellowship with the denizens of the unseen. Celebrities of no lesser order than Prof. Richard Hodgson, LL.D., Camille Flammarion, Sir William Crookes, Sir Oliver Lodge, Prof. Alfred R. Wallace, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and many others of note, have and are testifying to strange "experiences" and communions with the spirit world. Mr. Pelley but attests the statement of Sir Oliver Lodge that the veil between intelligences on this side and intelligences on the other side is "wearing thin in places."

Mr. Pelley's experience with his "corn-cob" is not unlike many experiences others have known. We have just been reading an experience through which J. Godfrey Raupert, the well-known writer on spiritistic phenomena and philosophy, once passed. He was recording a message from a spirit, when the pencil was gripped in his hand "with superhuman force" so that he could not unloose his hand. In this case, however, the spirit was decidedly evil, for, against his will, Mr. Raupert "wrote the most vile language and the most terrible curses. It was a thunderstorm of hatred and obscenity."

Cases wherein spirits from another world have exercised force upon the bodies of men are not so unusual as many believe. And many of these experiences, by every scientific test, have proven to be so genuine that it is left for the French astronomer, Camille Flammarion, to say, "Any scientific man who declares spiritualistic phenomena to be impossible is one who speaks without knowing what he is talking about."

Of interest at this point may be a testimony from Sir W. Barrett, former President of the Psychical Research Society of Great Britain: "For my part, it seems not impossible that the bulk, if not the whole of the physical manipulations witnessed in a spiritual seance, are the product of human-like, but not really human intelligence, good or bad daemonia they may be—which aggregate around the medium. Moreover, if there is any truth in the view suggested, of a possible source of the purely physical manipulation, it seems to me that the Apostle Paul in the Epistle to the Ephesians points to a race of spiritual creatures similar to that which I have described, but of a malignant type, when he speaks of beings not made of flesh and blood inhabiting the air around us and able injuriously to affect mankind. Good as well as mischievous agencies doubtless exist in the unseen. Granting the existence of a spiritual world, it is necessary to be on our guard against the invasion of our will by a lower code of intelligence and morality."

Yes, doubtless, "in the unseen" as in the seen world, "good as well as mischievous agencies exist." Apparently, the agencies with which Mr. Pelley was in touch were "good," for, they "transformed me," he says, "physically as well as mentally and spiritually." Indeed, he says, the "experience metamorphosed the cantankerous Vermont Yankee that was once Bill Pelley, and launched him into a wholly different universe that seems filled with naught but love, harmony, health, good humor, and prosperity." Then he asks: "What is the answer to that?"

We have no answer to "that" save to issue the warning that the revelations of God as contained in the Scriptures, as well as the experiences of those who, the world around and in all ages of time, declare that the world unseen has "agencies" both good and bad; and, that, it may be worth while, after an experience like "that" for us to make some investigation as to what sort of "agencies" were tampering with Mr. Pelley's soul that night.

The fact that the particular spirits with which Mr. Pelley spent his "Seven Minutes in Eternity" transformed him, and that that "universe seems" (black letter ours) "filled with naught but love, harmony, health," etc. is not conclusive as to their real nature, however much it may seem so.

Mr. Raupert affirms that the spirit with whom he established contact, and which then drove his hand into writing "a thunderstorm of hatred and obscenity," first, for a time, dictated high moral principles. That evil spirits, when the doors are opened to them, may enter our private sanctuaries as "angels of light," is a well-known affirmation of the Sacred Writ: "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel, for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works" (II Cor. 11:13-15). Assuredly, the spirits then, who belong to the great Prince of darkness, may appear on earth as "ministers of righteousness,"—"angels of light" who aim to deceive and ensnare the human race into their wiles, first, by an exhibition of great virtues; but, who, afterward, holding us in their power, may proceed to wreck us physically, mentally and spiritually. An eminent psychologist, Mr. Hereward Carrington, speaking of his experience with Mrs. Piper, the famous medium, said: "I gained the distinct impression throughout the sittings that instead of the spirits of the personality who claimed to be present, I was dealing with an exceeding cunning, tricky, and deceitful intelligence. If anything could make me believe in the doctrine of evil and lying spirits, it would be the sittings of Mrs. Piper."

Why Faithful Believers Obey Their Savior and Lord

By Samuel Kieh

Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God (1 John 4:15). The true believer makes that confession because God is dwelling in him. If God were not dwelling in him he would be classed among those who are strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world (Eph. 2:12).

Peter, on the day of Pentecost, addressing those who concerning Jesus had cried out, Away with him, crucify him (John 19:15); says, The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him (Acts 5:30-32). Take notice, the preceding "word" does not read, whom God will give, or does give to them that obey him; but it does read, whom God hath given to them that obey him. They obey because the Holy Ghost (the Spirit of God) received by faith in Christ Jesus is dwelling in them. If the Spirit of God were not dwelling in them they would be natural men or women: and the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned (I Cor. 2:14). The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God (Rom. 8:7, 8). There is none that understandeth (Rom. 3:11). Accordingly some one hath truthfully said, The unconverted man has a threefold incapacity. He can neither obey God, please God, nor understand God. The only remedy for the sin-sick soul is repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 20:21); and loving obedience unto both the Father and the Son.

The Lord enable us to so believe, live, and obey, that each one of us can say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ (who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption (1 Cor. 1:30), liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me" (Gal. 2:20). Wonderful love in our behalf, who have sinned, and come short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23). The whole world lieth in wickedness (1 John 5:19). Yet God so loved the world (which includes the writer and the reader), that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3:16). We (if true believers) have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace (Eph. 1:7). Consequently the riches of his grace are to you (faithful believers), and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us out of this present evil world, according to the will of our God and Father: to whom be the glory forever and ever. Amen (Gal. 1:3-5 R. V.)

Friendship

By C. F. Yoder

Who knows the way of friendship in the world?
Where was it born, and what shall be its end?
Whence came its magic power over men?
It comes from Heaven above, through Christ the Friend,
And in those hearts that love it is unfurled.

The morning sunbeam steals across the dew
And leaves a golden path, ablaze with jewels;
The sun doth kiss the valley, erstwhile bleak,
And lo it bursteth into glorious bloom;
So friendship transforms life for me and you.

The storm cloud passes and, behold the bow,
Halo of the throne, half risen from the earth.
But whence? and how? God knoweth, so it is.
Across the world hath shined the Bethlehem star,
And human faces catch its deathless glow.

Out from the desert of earth's hearts of stone
The Sun of Righteousness calls forth his jewels.
He saith, "Ye are my friends," and lo, they live,
And Love doth clasp them in one beauteous bow,
Half risen? Aye, but rising round the throne.

Its light doth change earth's tears to diamonds fair,
And all things work for good to them that love.
There is no heart that friendship doth not bless;
Earth hath no burdens that it doth not bear,
Nor Heaven pleasures that it doth not share.

Hath any man set limits to its power?
Hath any bounded it by time or space?
Behold yon savage, how uncouth he is;
Him, by tomorrow friendship may transform.
Yea, hearts may be converted in an hour.

Mark now life's joys and count them one by one;
Say if apart from friendship aught remains.
Go search the world and come again to tell
What fruit of blessing friendship doth not yield,
Or in what life it says, "My work is done."

When Heaven passes friendship too shall cease.
The child of love, and love the child of God,
In Jesus Christ made flesh and given voice,
That voice now calls the world to brotherhood,
Beneath the blood-sealed covenant of peace.

And when the beauteous bow shall all entwine;
Its iridescent hues shall fill the world.
The love of God shall be the law of life,
And friendship's bonds between all men and God,
Shall make the world a paradise divine.

Why Every Church Ought to Be Vitrally Interested in a Daily Vacation Bible School

By Leo Polman

It is time to plan for the Daily Vacation Bible School, or as some would rather like to call it, The Daily Vacation Church School. I prefer the former because the very purpose of the school should center in the Bible, as well as around it. The D. V. B. S. will not only plant the seed, The Word of God, in the lives of our youth, but will help the church as well to take the crooks out of the twig rather than waiting to take them out of the tree.

Some Philosophy of the D. V. B. S. Movement

"As the twig is bent so the tree is inclined." The spring season is the time for planting and sowing. Satan still finds mischief for idle hands to do. If good seed is not planted and cultivated, all soils, and especially the richest, will produce weeds, and never fruits, vegetables and flowers. The "Holy Scripture is able to make wise unto salvation through the faith which is in Christ Jesus." The thing which the church emphasizes and reverences, the young will emphasize and reverence. Whatever the church does or does not do, she must take care of her youth.

The Church Has Not Been So Doing. There Is No Doing

Without Knowing

If our children are to walk in the way of the Lord, they must know what his way is. To know what his way is, there must be definite, systematic study of the Word of God, just as we study any other subject, but reverently, and as the Word of God. We must study it just as we study geography, history, grammar or science. We must have recitations and tests. Our teachers must be persons experienced in the art of teaching, preferably, and whose whole heart is in the work.

The Sunday School Inadequate in Its Teaching

While we have only high appreciation of the Sunday school work and Sunday school effort, and especially of the devotion of the Sunday school teachers, it must be recognized by all that the value of such work is chiefly that of the influence of the teacher over the pupil, and that the teaching value is relatively very small. The very nature of the conditions makes the teaching value of the Sunday school small. Short lesson periods, only twenty minutes, or at the most, thirty. Lessons separated by intervals of a week; teachers for the most part not experienced. We must have a definite and sufficient time.

The D. V. B. S. Is an Absolute Necessity to a Church

The educational value of the Bible school is equal to that of the Public school. Who would seriously claim that our children would ever become qualified to hold a position, if they pursued their school studies as we study the Bible in the Sunday school? The job of living a Christian life is a much bigger and more important one than anything else in life. Worthwhile life here and life hereafter depend upon it. One leading denomination, so says one of its leaders, "loses more than 60,000 members per year simply because they turn out to be no good and must be dropped from the roll." Slipshod methods of Bible study and Bible teaching no doubt are principally the cause. The church is responsible. A vital question to be sure! WILL THE CHURCH WAKE UP TO THE CARE OF THE YOUNG BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE?

The D. V. B. S. as We May Have It Meets the Requirements

A Bible school term of five weeks, five days of the week, each morning from 8:30 to 11:30, or 9:00 to 12:00, excluding opening exercises (15 minutes) and recess (15 minutes), will give sixty two and one half hours for the term. Think of it, two and one half hours per day of real consecutive effort, and under favorable conditions, teaching the Word of God! Compare this with the hours spent in the Sunday school for one year in your own church! Also with the time spent in the Public school!

Essentials for a Successful D. V. B. S.

1. That from start to finish it be baptized with prayer.
  2. Belief in the Scriptures as the Word of God and that they "are able to make wise unto salvation through the faith which is in Christ Jesus."
  3. Consecrated Christian teachers, experienced in the art of teaching, (preferably), who love the work and their pupils.
  4. Strict discipline and real study.
  5. A pastor's decided efforts.
  6. Hearty support on the part of the church and parents.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

INTELLECTUAL QUALITIES OF MISSIONARIES

The Foreign Missions Conference reports that a recent study of 159 missionaries in North China, representing five denominations, has revealed the following interesting facts regarding the intellectual standards of the missionary body. The assertion has frequently been made that the missionaries are not well educated either in their own learning or in that of the country in which they work. However, the results of the investigation, as read by Mr. Dwight W. Edwards, of the Peking Y. M. C. A., before the Peking Missionary Association on December 18, reveal that 127 of the 174 missionaries are college graduates with B. A. degrees. Thirty-nine are members of honorary societies, such as Phi Beta Kappa, and fifty-seven have M. A. degrees. Furthermore, this group has spent 226 years in graduate study in home universities, or a total of 1.2 years for the whole group, and 1.8 years for the husbands and single men and women.

Only seventeen of the total 174 do not hold degrees of some sort, and of these, twelve are wives, two are business secretaries, one is a nurse, and one has a distinguished record as a student of, and a writer on, the Chinese Language.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ANOTHER MODEL PROVINCE

China has a new model province. For recent information is to the effect that Honan, rather than Shansi, merits the name. Dr. Frank Rawlinson, editor of the "Chinese Recorder," is authority for the following estimate: "Everywhere in the province, particularly in Kaifeng, temples are being taken over for community purposes. In Kaifeng, I understand, on good authority, that all the idols but two have been demolished and in this city libraries, lecture rooms, schools, playgrounds and even markets are now found in place of the old religious activities. Officials in this province, including, of course, Feng, all work on a low salary, $80 Mex. being apparently the highest. Some of the men thus working on a low salary are modern educated men. Recent visitors state that they have seen officials taking their share of work on the roads and that this also includes Gen. Feng. In addition prostitution, gambling, etc., are being suppressed and roadways are being improved."—The Gospel Messenger.

COLLEGE SUMMARIES

Reports from 216 colleges and universities show this academic year an increase of two per cent in enrollment. They also show that the largest divinity school (298 students) in the United States is in Chicago; Hunter College (Manhattan) is the largest women's college (4,918 students); the largest liberal arts college is the University of California (9,783 students); the largest law school is at New York University (1,785 students); Pennsylvania has the largest dental school (430 students). Of the 216 colleges and universities which form the approved list of the Association of American Universities, Randolph-Macon College (for men) at Ashland, Va., is the smallest (220 students).—Central Christian Advocate.

NEW YORK PROHIBITS WOOD ALCOHOL

Why should it be necessary to pass a law prohibiting the sale of wood alcohol as a beverage? We learn that Governor Roosevelt, of New York State, recently signed such a bill. Why did he sign it? In order to protect the public against the terrible effects of wood alcohol as a beverage. That is the reason why the nation passed the prohibition law against any kind of alcohol as a beverage. It is the same principle, and yet Governor Roosevelt was the man who backed another man for the presidency who would annul the Eighteenth Amendment. We wonder why he signed a prohibition bill making the sale of a certain kind of alcohol an offense punishable as a felony. What is the difference between wood alcohol and grain alcohol? There is a decided difference. However, at the last analysis they are both poisons. One acting quickly, the other taking time.—Western Christian Advocate.

WHAT HAPPENED IN WISCONSIN?

Not, certainly, what the distortionist press would lead us to believe. When the result of last Tuesday's referendum on a repeal of the Wisconsin State enforcement law appeared, Christian Herald telegraphed immediately to Warren G. Jones, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in that State. Mr. Jones, we believe, is in fully as good a position to interpret the Wisconsin vote as, let us say, Henry Curran, head of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, whose word is law to the wets and their newspapers. Mr. Jones's telegraphed reply is as follows:

"The complete returns of April second show how the vote was light, as is always true of a spring election in Wisconsin. The vote was less than half the vote of last November. This election was made up almost entirely of city voters on account of one of the severest blizzards coming on the Sunday before Tuesday of election, blocking all cross-roads in the State and most of our highways, making a very light farmer vote. The city of Milwaukee alone cast more than ninety thousand wet votes. The fact that this was for the repeal of the Prohibition law gave the wets the greatest inducement to get to the polls. But in spite of this their majority was reduced by seventy-five thousand when compared with their referendum vote of 1926. The returns to date show a decided trend away from the wet status."—Christian Herald.

EDISON SPEAKS OUT ON "PERSONAL LIBERTY"

"I wholly disagree," says the distinguished inventor, Mr. Thomas A. Edison, "with the argument of anti-prohibitionists that the Volstead Act is an encroachment on personal liberty. If personal liberty were to run wild, we would have no advancement. Civilization becomes better only as we curb personal liberty in the interest of general welfare."

"This is an age in which fathers are giving their children too much money, and too little personal attention; too many automobiles and not enough of their own companionship."—Babson.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

For the next few weeks our suggestions for the worship period will be based on the rich truths found in the letter to the Ephesians. This week the suggestions for each day are to be found in the first two verses of the opening chapter:

"Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus: Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

MONDAY

An Apostle.—Certain religious sects in this country believe that the apostolic office was to be perpetual and successive. The element of truth underlying this belief is that ALL are apostles: ones sent. "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world," are the words of the Lord himself. And we know the work he was sent into the world to do: may we ever be true to our calling, as ones sent of God! Read Luke 4:16-21.

TUESDAY

By the Will of God.—Undoubtedly, one of the secrets of Paul's great strength and success was the consciousness that he was called of God for the work which he was doing. Nothing else can so sanctify a task that otherwise might be the most wretched drudgery. Our task may be on the mission field, in the pulpit, or "hewing wood and drawing water;" but whatever it be, let us be sure it is by the will of God, and perform it as unto the Lord (Eph. 6:5-9). Read Col. 1:3-10.

WEDNESDAY

Saints.—A saint, instead of being the marvelous person the Roman Catholics would have us believe, is simply an ORDINARY person sanctified of God through Christ—and that is marvelous! "There is none good save God," said Jesus; so it is Christ in us, the hope of glory. Read Psalm 16.

THURSDAY

The Faithful.—In the Old Testament, the word, "faithful," appears a number of times, but the word, "faith," appears but once, referring to the Israelites as "children in whom is no faith." The point is that it is only in him that is Faithful and True that we may hope to be faithful. If we are faithful, we need not worry about success or failure; it is only the faithless servant that is unprofitable. Read Matt. 25:14-30.

FRIDAY

Grace.—Probably all are familiar with the definition of grace, as the "totally unmerited love and favor of God." It is only by the grace of God that we, who are less than the least of all saints (unless we are better Christians than Paul), are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. And being so, his grace is sufficient to KEEP us so. Psalm 84.

SATURDAY

And Peace.—Peace, the result of God's grace, does not depend on circumstances. During the Boxer uprising, some Boxers entered the home of a Chinese Christian, brutally murdered all but the father, and then began to taunt him, asking: "What proof have you now that God even exists?" "The proof," came the reply, "lies in the fact that though you have killed my wife, my children, and my aged father, I do not hate you, but love you and am praying for you." It passeth understanding! Phil. 4:1-9.

SUNDAY

Our Father.—Jesus taught us to pray, "Our Father, who art in heaven." In using this expression, I believe one of his great objects was to make God seem REAL to men. We can conceive of nothing that would make a greater change in the lives of men and nations than a belief in the real presence of God and his personal interest in the affairs of men. Through the many services held in thy honor this day, may thy presence become more real to men everywhere. Psalm 103.

Faith

Now, this is not, as some have said, because I am a man of great mental power or endowed with energy and perseverance—these are not the reasons. It is because I have confided in God; because I have sought God and he has cared for the institution which, under his direction, has one hundred and seventeen schools with masters and mistresses, and other departments of which I have told you before. The difficulties in such an undertaking have been gigantic, but I read that they that put their trust in the Lord shall not be ashamed. Nearly twenty years ago a beloved brother from America came down to see me, and he expected to find me an old man, helpless and decrepit, bowed down with burdens, and he wondered I did not look old. "How is this?" "that you keep so young under such a load as you are carrying?"

"My dear brother," I said, "I have always rolled the burden on the Lord. I do not carry one-hundredth part of it. The burden comes to me, and I roll it back on him." I do not carry the burden. And now, in my seventy-sixth year, I have physical strength and mental vigor for work as great as when I was a young man in the University, studying and preparing Latin orations. I am just as vigorous as at that time.

How comes this? Because in the last half century of labor I've been able, with the simplicity of a little child, to rely upon God. I have had my trials, but I have laid hold on God, and so it has come that I have been sustained. It is not only permission, but positive command that he gives us to cast the burden upon him. Oh let us do it, my beloved brothers and sisters in Christ. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee." Day by day I do it. This morning again sixty matters in connection with the church, of which I am a pastor, I brought before the Lord, and thus it is day by day, and year by year; ten years, twenty years, thirty years, forty years. And now, my beloved brothers and sisters, come with your burdens, the burdens of your business, your profession, your trials and difficulties, and you will find help.

Many persons suppose it is only about money that I trust the Lord in prayer. I do bring this money question before the Lord, but it is only one out of many things I speak to God about, and I find he helps. Often I have perplexity in finding persons of ability and fitness for the various posts that I have to have supplied. Sometimes weeks and months pass, and day by day, day by day. I bring the matter before the Lord, and invariably he helps. It is about the conversion of persons;—prayer, sooner or later, is turned into praise. After a while, God helps. It is so about the needs of our work in sending our tracts and books, and missionary efforts. After a while God helps. We're never left, we're never con-founded.

Do not, however, expect to attain full faith at once. All such things as jumping into full exercise of faith in such things I discountenance. I do not believe in it, I do NOT believe in it, and I wish you to plainly understand I do not believe in it. All such things go on in a natural way. The little I did obtain I did not obtain all at once. All this I say particularly, because letters come to me full of questions from those who seek to have their faith strengthened. Begin over again, staying your soul on the Word of God, and you will find an increase of your faith as you exercise it.

One thing more. Some say, "Oh, I shall never have the gift of faith Mr. Muller has got. He has the gift of faith." This is the greatest mistake—it is a great error—there is not a particle of truth in it. My faith is just the same kind of faith that all of God's children have had. It is the same kind that Simon Peter had, and all Christians may obtain the like faith. My faith is their faith, though there may be more of it because my faith has been a little more developed by exercise than theirs; but their faith is precisely the faith I exercise, only, with regard to the degree, mine may be more strongly exercised.

What little faith I have is the grace of faith, not the gift. But he who has the grace of faith always has it accompanied by love, rendered "charity." The gift of faith is able to command, and may even command devils. The grace of faith has to do with the written Word of the Lord.

Now, my beloved brothers and sisters, begin in a little way. At first I was able to trust the Lord for ten dollars, then for a hundred dollars, then for a thousand dollars, then for a hundred thousand dollars, and now, with the greatest ease, I could trust him for millions of dollars if there was occasion. But, first, I should quietly, carefully, deliberately examine and see whether what I was trusting for was something in accordance with his promises in his written Word. If I found it was, the amount of the difficulties would be no hindrance to my trust. Fifty-one years, and God has never failed me! Trust him for yourselves and find how true to his Word he is.

May God's richest, choicest blessings rest upon you now, and upon all who do now feel encouraged to put their whole trust in Christ hereafter. Then will peace, sunshine and happiness begin with the beginning of the exercise of the grace of faith, which is always found united with love.

A TRACT.

The India Sunday School Union

Coonoor has been the headquarters of the India Sunday School Union for a year, since the removal from Jubbulpore. One reason for the change was to unify the work, as the decidedly extensive Training School for Teachers is located at Coonoor. Many missionaries and others who come to the Nilgiris during the hot weather months eagerly go to the Library or Bookshop.

The Junior Course of lessons has been prepared by Mrs. E. A. Annett, wife of the General Secretary of the India Sunday School Union. It is in two volumes. This course, which is composed entirely of Bible stories, includes all the best Junior subjects from both Testaments, and thus in two years covers the whole of the Bible for that age. The course can be gone through twice within the four years (8 to 12) of that stage of the child's life, and it is designed to touch his life at all essential points. It is anticipated that it will be found useful in all Sunday schools except the most advanced. Arrangements are made for it to appear in quarterly form during the next two years in Roman and Persian Urdu, Hindi, Marathi, Kanarese and Telugu.

Three one-month schools at St. Andrew, Coonoor, have again been held, and with a full complement of students, every bed being occupied in each school. Twenty-nine out of sixty-one who attended this year were women—a higher proportion than hitherto. Twenty were college trained, five of them possessing a degree in education. The majority were in the teaching profession—workers in various types of schools, varying from colleges to village schools. Seven were pastors, some were missionaries, one a doctor, one a professor of chemistry in a university. Denominationally considered, they proved as usual a cross section of the Christian church. The Syrian churches headed the list with fifteen students, most of these coming during the August school when it is not so easy for teachers to get leave for a month. Anglicans, Methodists and Presbyterians sent eleven each. Lutherans were responsible for eight, Baptists for three, Congregationalists and Disciples for one each.

Every Picture Means a Scholar

Bible Lesson pictures, both large and small, are eagerly received at practically every mission station abroad. This applies especially to the large picture rolls which are used in almost every Sunday school in the home lands. Such pictures form the basis for Sunday school teaching and evangelical preaching and should be forwarded to some missionary at the end of each quarter. The cost for postage is only about 18 cents.

The Worlds' Sunday School Association has had since 1909 a Surplus Material Department, which learns the needs of the missionaries in the various denominations and gives a card of introduction to those who will send their pictures abroad for this special purpose. The plan provides that you write to Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D., Superintendent of this Surplus Material Department, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City, indicating your denomination in full and stating what you have to send. You will then receive the name and address of a missionary in your own church or of some interdenominational worker, also a leaflet giving full information including the postal rates. You will then forward your packages directly to the foreign field. Do not

Small Bible Lesson cards, picture post cards and any other suitable pictures will also be very serviceable. A picture is greatly valued by adults as well as children. Many Sunday schools are built up through the use of such pictures. If you paste a piece of white paper over the writing on a picture post card, the missionary will place a verse of scripture, in the local language, thereon.

There is special need for many pictures at just this time to honor requests which are arriving at the office of the World's Sunday School Association in acknowledging the Christmas Greetings which went to over 1,000 missionaries. Each envelope also contained two Daily Bible Reading Sunday School Calendars for 1929 and a number of Christmas and Easter musical services.

Each reader will be helping if he will hand this article to his local paper.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

God's Law in the Heart

(Lesson for May 26)

Scripture—Jer. 31:1-40; John 1:17; Heb. 8:7-13.

Printed Text—Jer. 31:29-34; John 1:17.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 119:9-16.

Golden Text—Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee. Psalm 119:11.

Introductory Note

This lesson follows in a perfectly natural sequence the lesson we studied last Sunday. In that Jeremiah gave a message from Jehovah to the people assembled in the temple at Jerusalem. The main import of that message was that true worship must come from the heart; that formal worship, the offering of sacrifices according to a stated ritual, was neither commanded nor desired by Jehovah, but a heart full of such love to himself that obedience to his commands would be the natural outcome.

The four chapters, Jer. 30-33, constitute a remarkable section of the Book, characterized by a sudden and brilliant change from gloom to cheer, from the darkness of despair to the sunshine of hope. This is especially surprising in view of the fact that chapters 32 and 33, at any rate, and probably the closely related chapters 30 and 31, were written in the tenth year of Zedekiah, the last king of Judah, and were composed during the siege that was to end with the capture and destruction of Jerusalem.

"The novel and difficult task which confronted Jeremiah was that of reaching down to the hearts of men in order to purify their motives. He must appeal from an obedience which performed to an obedience which aspired; from a Jehovah who commanded to a Jehovah who besought; from a covenant regarded as a contract to a covenant regarded as a bond of love."

With all the comfort which Jeremiah utters in these chapters he interweaves strong words of warning and exhortation. Jehovah would save them; they should be prosperous again in their own land; all should go well with them; but all this favor and help was still conditioned upon their repentance and amendment. No more than formerly would Jehovah give of his blessings to the disobedient.

"The prophet was in prison, famine and pestilence held possession of the city, and the prospects of the nation were such as to create despair in every mind. It was at such a time as this, when humanly speaking the people most needed the comfort of hope, and yet the prophet, had he been speaking his own words, was least likely to be able or willing to afford it them, that it was announced through Jeremiah that the people of God should not perish, that through them the Gentile nations should be led to a knowledge of the truth, and the Righteous BRANCH should yet arise from the house of David and Zion's name be The Lord our Righteousness."

The Bane of Humanity is Bad Heredity. We cannot get rid of it. The fathers have drunk the cup of sinful pleasures and the children have drunk the dregs. The wondrous thing of the Gospel is that it gives us a new heredity. A man grafting trees saws off a limb to put in a scion. If the limb is rotten he has to saw it off nearer the trunk. We were grafted in Adam, but it was discovered that the branch was rotten, and then God began at the very beginning and grafted us into Jesus Christ the Divine Son of God. Dr. Williams of Boston was asked, "How early do you think the training of a child ought to begin?" He replied instantly, "A hundred years before the birth of a child." When God would build up a child holy in all things, he goes back to the very beginning, and gives us our birth in God himself.—From A. J. Gordon. So, whatever the circumstances of a child's earthly environment, and of his nearest ancestors, there is a spark of the eternal God-head within him, and if he will he can nourish it into a burning fire which will consume all the evil from his nature.

"The prayer for a clean heart is the true sign of an aspiring soul. The life which issues from an impure heart can never satisfy a high-grade mind nor bless a needy world." "Guard thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. The world needs the life that comes from clean hearts. By such life only can the true interests of the world be saved. Selfishness, greed, malice, anger, hatred, and all the diseases of lust come from impure hearts." "We shall very much misunderstand God's purpose if we suppose it to be blessedness for us men anyhow, irrespective altogether of character. Some people seem to think that God loves us so much, as they would say—so little, so ignobly, as I would say—as that he only desires us to be happy. They seem to think that the divine love is tarnished unless it provides for men's felicity, whether they are God-loving and God-like or no. Thus the solemn and majestic love of the Father in heaven is to be brought down to a weak, good nature, which only desires that the child shall cease crying and be happy, and does not mind by what means that end is reached."—Alexander Maclaren.

"Are you enjoying the terms of this covenant in your daily experience? God is prepared to fulfil them to the letter. Count on him to do as he has promised. Reckon on his faithfulness. Claim that each pledge shall be realized in you to the fullest limits of his wealth, and your need. Do not try to invent conditions or terms not laid down by him; but gladly accept the position of doing nothing to earn or win, and of accepting all that God gives, without money and without price."—F. B. Meyer.

"Lift up your hearts." "We lift them up." Ah me!

I cannot, Lord, lift up my heart to thee; Stoop, lift it up, that where thou art I too may be.

"Give me thy heart." I would not say thee nay,

But have no power to keep or give away My heart; stoop, Lord, and take it to thyself today.

Stoop, Lord, as once before, now once anew;

Stoop, Lord, and hearken, hearken Lord and do,

And take my will, and take my heart, and take me, too.

—Christina Rossetti.

"We are apt to think that we are very willing to have forgiveness, but that God is unwilling to bestow it. And this is the very nature of unbelief. Reason's line is too short to fathom the depth of the Father's love."—Selections from Illustrated Quarterly.

The First to Respond

Just recently your Christian Endeavor Secretary requested some reports from various societies regarding work being done. Oakville, Indiana, has the honor of being the very first to respond, the following report having been mailed in. We wish to state that Oakville has been the first society to make their National pledge for the past two years, and so even if they are "older" young people, we surely do appreciate their promptness in cooperation. To refresh our memories I am quoting again the National Goals as presented at our last General Conference:

1. Pledge toward National work sent to Secretary not later than January first.

2. Payment of said pledge not later than June 30th.
3. Forty prayer meetings using International topics.
4. Four socials during year.
5. Quiet Hour group meeting ten minutes before the first meeting of each month. (Consecration meeting).
6. 25% of the membership taking the Christian Endeavor World.
7. A report of local work through the C. E. page of the Evangelist at least once a year.
8. Delegate to County or State Convention.
9. Increase in membership.

10. Statistical report mailed to secretary not later than June 30th.
GLADYS SPICE, General Secretary.

Report from Oakville, Indiana

My Dear Brother Baer:

Received a card from Miss Spice asking for a report, so here it is. Ours is an "old folks" Y. P. S. C. E. mostly, however, we have some young people and we are very proud of them. Regarding the goals,—Goal 1 has been taken care of. Goal 2, not yet paid, but will make an effort to pay by June 30th. Goal 3, all have been held so far. Goal 4, have had only one. Goal 5, have observed all but one so far. Goal 6, not met. Goal 7, this will fulfill this goal. Goal 8, can't say. Goal 9, haven't yet, but hope to before June 30th.

Our average attendance is small, about 12, but we enjoy meeting and discussing the various topics—together. Our younger folks are getting along nicely I think, under the direction of Mrs. Ethel Rutherford.

Yours for C. E.

MRS. EVA P. METZKER, President.

Society Disbanded

Janark, Illinois, 226 West Pearl St.,
May 8, 1929.

Dear Sir:

I neglected writing to tell you that our Christian Endeavor Society has disbanded for a time. During the winter months we had such very cold weather and the roads were so bad that we had a very small attendance. So we just dropped the work for a while. Now we feel that it is not worth while to start our Society again until Fall at least. Then we will try again.

Yours sincerely,

Argentina, South America

The month of March in Argentina is the month for rallying our forces after the demoralizing period of Carnival in February. Every year the number of worldly attractions grows greater and the organizations opposed to the Gospel increase. No mission can grow or even hold its own without constant and aggressive work.

March, however, is the beginning of the corn harvest, when many families go to the country to labor for four or five months. Corn is husked by hand and put into large sacks which are dragged along until full. The workmen do not want labor-saving devices for fear that they will not have work.

During March three converts were baptized in Alejandro, two of them having come from Canals and one from the country. In Cabrera several who for years had been wayward have returned to faithfulness. In Laboulaye a number have asked for baptism and in Realico also a large class is preparing.

In Rio Cuarto the church gave a hearty "bienvenida" or welcome to Sister Nielsen and we look forward to greater things with her help. Our church has been well filled during the week of special meetings preceding Easter and the quarterly love feast on Easter evening was a time of much blessing. Some took part for the first time. The Roman church had a great campaign for several weeks with the help of eight or ten priests from Cordoba. They had women also to do personal work and especially to try to get our girls away from us. They did not win any from us either here or elsewhere. I am told that they succeeded in getting a total of 3000 to go to confession, which is probably much more than double the number that go regularly. This is not many in a population of over forty thousand.

We are engalring the room used by the primary department, as we need a larger room not only for the children, but also for use on love feast occasions and also for seminary classes. The latter so far have been more of the character of normal classes for local workers, but we hope are long to have young men doing regular work in preparation for the ministry. We must support them while doing this, but they can also help in the mission work.

From Alejandro Brother Domingo Reina writes the following: "The women's meeting is very enthusiastic. The sisters have a day on which they go out to distribute tracts and do personal work. The wife of the cashier of the bank goes with the rest.

"Last Friday we had a meeting in Los Cisnes in the home of Brother Saldano and there were 35 present. It is a pity there are no trains by which we might have the meetings on Sunday. We have no auto to use now. As soon as possible I want to canvass Acequias with tracts also."

From Laboulaye Brother Iztueta writes:

"We have had a visit from the Baptist pastor in Mendoza. He preached several times, and his wife spoke to the women. The visit brought blessing to all. In Rosales there is a believer who asks for visits. In Merlo two young ladies have asked for baptism."

We hoped to have the building at Laboulaye under way before now. but when we went to the bank to arrange for the money which had been promised to us some months ago, we were told that there have been so many requests that they will not be able to grant the money for a year and a half or more. The will of the Lord be done. Perhaps he wants some good brother in the homeland to loan or give the $5,000 needed. We trust that the Easter offering will represent a real sacrifice on the part of the church. The people here are learning also to give as the Lord has taught.

C. F. YODER.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

The spring Normal Term, which we teach here on demand, is being taught this spring. This is not a part of our regular work, but is only given as there is a demand for it. The demand this spring was larger than for some time, so it was given.

We are most happy to announce that Miss Carrie Stoffer, of Homeworth, Ohio, who had labored here with us in the work for about five years, will be back next year to take the place made vacant by the resignation of Miss Austin. Miss Stoffer has proven herself to be a splendid worker, capable and tactful, and her return to the work means added strength for the next year.

On Wednesday night, April 4th, at Krypton, Brother Kinzie and the writer ordained to the Brethren ministry, Manuel Davidson. It was a most impressive service. A large crowd was out for the service. Brother Davidson got the most of his school work at Riverside, and joined the church here. We bespeak for Brother Davidson a real ministry of service for our Lord.

The outlook for attendance at the school for next year is now better than it has been for a long time at least. Among other things we have had more appeals from worthy boys and girls for help in their school work next year than we have ever had before. We were recently told of a young man who joined the church at Krypton, and did his first year of high school work there last year. This young man had a father who was careless and a drinker, and all that this boy knew was to drink and do as his father had done. He got in the school at Krypton, and then into the church there, has reformed and cleaned up, and now wants to do more of his high school work here. The work we had was all promised, but we did promise to take this boy in, trusting that some organization, or group of young folks somewhere, would be glad to take a scholarship for this young man. If so will you write us a part?

Then here is a part of a letter which we received a day or two ago. We have a number of others like it: "I am writing you in regard to entering school at Riverside this year. I have completed the eighth grade and have my diploma for high school. I am sixteen years of age, strong and healthy. I would like to work all my way, and unless you let me work all my way, I shall not be able to go to school. My father is dead and has been dead for several years. My mother is old and unable to work. If you don't let me work my way I don't think there will be any chance for me to go to school.

As things now are we are compelled to write this boy and say to him, "No work." My, but how our hearts go out to such boys, and yours, dear reader, would too if you knew the circumstances as they actually are. These are not boys begging their way, these are not slum boys, there are not boys just trying to beat anyone or anything, but just country boys, who have no way of even going on to high school unless the church gives them an opportunity. Of course no one would expect all these boys to make missionaries, or preachers, but they are mighty good material to work on, and they all at least join the Brethren church when in school here, and some of them will give their lives for Christian service, and most all will make good citizens, at least. All here in school have to do daily regular Bible work.

Of course the question at once arises in the mind, Is it worth while? Well, if it is worth while helping anyone, anywhere, why is it not worth while helping such boys? Only too many drop down and out, and do no worthwhile service for humanity because they are not sufficiently trained for that service. But boys like these who are coming to us here for an opportunity to go on training for better service in life are boys that have good stuff in them, and we feel are worthy of help. How we wish that such boys might be given the opportunity that they are so sincerely seeking. May we ask a continuance in your prayers that his will may be done with these boys and all whom this service here might reach?

G. E. DRUSHAL.

Travel Experiences Home

II. On the Oubangui River

March 14, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Yesterday we left the beautiful little town of Bangui. It was necessary to take a small boat, the "Bonga," for the first day's journey, because this is the dry season and the water is very low. The Bonga has no cabins, no conveniences of any kind, so we have to wear our helmets all day and carry our food for dinner.

Late in the afternoon we arrived at Zingah where we take canoes to go over the rapids to the bigger boat. After about an hour we arrived and embarked on the "Djah" which is to carry us to Brazzaville. There are thirty passengers on board but only four cabins with berths for eight people. They have kindly given us a cabin since there is only one other lady on board besides myself. Those who do not have cabins sleep on deck, and at night we envy them for they have a nice cool place while we almost roast. However, during the day, we are thankful that we have a place of refuge.

The boat is clean and the food is reasonably good. The scenery is monotonous; for the most part there is a dense jungle on either side with this monotony occasionally broken by a village where we stop for wood. Sometimes we see natives paddling along in canoes made of palm logs. Usually they are fishermen and have their nets ready to cast whenever opportunity arises.

Yesterday afternoon we crossed the equator. Of course it was Kenneth's first time to cross it, so the passengers threatened to initiate him, yesterday we ran into the mighty Congo, that great river that remained unexplored until about the last half century. The river is narrower here than the Oubangui, but much deeper and therefore the boat travels much faster. There are few sandbars along here, so last night our boat traveled all night and that of course made our cabins much cooler.

Our passenger list is composed mostly of French officials. There are two elephant hunters on board, one an Italian, and the other a Belgian. Our dry law seems to be the favorite topic of conversation. The wet propaganda most always reaches the foreign countries, and they see so many American tourists drinking freely that they think our Prohibition law is a huge joke.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA

This part of the body of Christ is still very much on the map, even though we haven't heard of it in the Evangelist's columns for some time.

We just had a most blessed communion service on Wednesday evening, May 1st. The attendance was above any previous record, and the spirit most beautiful.

There were perhaps some special reasons for this; there were a number at the table who had been raised from serious illness, in answer to the united prayers of the Church. And more precious still were the souls who for the first time celebrated thus the death and coming again of their Lord and Savior. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death, till he come."

It was impressive to hear heads of families saying rejoicingly, "My whole family is here tonight," or "Another of my family is at the table tonight." And, one of our faithful grandmothers rose to say, "Three of my grandchildren are at the Lord's table tonight for the first time." Is it any wonder that we've been saying ever since, "What a wonderful communion service!"

We would not overlook in this connection either, the fact of our souls being enriched each Sunday with the deep things of God, through our splendid preacher. Surely such messages as we are privileged to hear ought to bear fruit in the lives and experience of our people, and they do.

Among our accessions recently, are some fine young people who are already looking toward the mission field, and one whole family—father, mother and two children who are now united in Christ.

As usual, we had a "Joyous Easter." Good attendance, fine program, and a missionary offering, that runs in the neighborhood of $2,300, thus far. It's fine to see the money roll in so easily from all the departments of the Sunday school, from the little tots up. Indeed, we must tell you of one of our little girls eight years old. "Ruth," takes care of some smaller children on the road to school each day for which she received some money from their mothers. She gladly saved all this for Easter and so little Ruth gave $5.00 of her own earned money for missions. Say! How many of you older folks gave that much for sending the Gospel to the heathen, on Easter Sunday? And so our Sunday school children are taught to give their pennies to the "black boys and girls in Africa."

Our various organizations all do good work. We have three wide-awake C. E. Societies, all under fine leadership. Our Y. P. S. of C. E. hold forth each month at a rescue mission, where many souls have been saved throughout the years, directly

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Commencement week is June 2 to 6. It is the same date as Educational Week. The time seems appropriate. I want to say a word again about the Educational Day offering. IT MUST BE NEAR $5,000, IF WE ARE TO EVEN CONTEMPLATE MAKING APPLICATION TO THE NORTH CENTRAL ASSOCIATION. I have written this so often that I suppose it sounds like, "wolf, wolf," but the show down on our finances will be between this and March first. Let every friend of the school remember this. IT IS HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

Salutatorian, Geneva Lovering, Ashland; Valedictorian, Merle Flamm, Pennsylvania; Class President, Myron Kimmel, Gratis, Ohio; Secretary-Treasurer, Nina Jesson, Ashland; John Lichty scholars for last year, Miss Elizabeth Black, Shiloh, and Cas-sel Jacobs, Ashland; John C. Myers scholar, Merle Flamm; Ira C. Wilcox Award given to Delbert Flora.

We recently had the pleasure of hearing Arthur Lynn at the Chapel hour. He pleased us all with his singing, especially memorable was his rendition of The Holy City.

Professor Anspach and the writer were at the University of Akron last week on business relative to standardization. Our new catalogue has been wholly rewritten in response to their witness. Just last week we had another great service there—our fine choir sang the Gospel and our pastor preached it, and five souls publicly confessed Christ, beside a number of others who asked for prayer.

Our prayer meetings continue to be seasons of power and refreshing. As one outside of our membership remarked, "I never heard of such people, the way you pray for each other and the wonderful answers you get to prayer." Yes! many of our sick and troubled look toward the Wednesday evening prayer meeting for healing and comfort, and then return continually to say, "God answered our prayer."

So we feel that our church is in splendid spiritual condition—what need we say more—if the spirit is right—all else will be right too. We're not saying we're perfect, we'll never be that here, but we're thanking God for the innumerable good things which are ours, through his faithfulness.

And as we praise him for past and present blessings, we trust him still, to supply our present need and lead us on to even greater victory.

Church Correspondent.

All members of Southeastern District churches please note the Young Folks session on Thursday afternoon. There has been a demand for such a session and we have tried to meet it. Future conference programs will be affected by the manner in which folks respond to this feature. Also, all speakers for this conference have been notified and we hope they will be able to attend. Ministers are supposed to be at conference. And if it proves impossible for any assigned speakers to attend we do wish that they would get their addresses in manuscript form and send them to the secretary, Rev. John F. Locke, Woodstock, Virginia, by the week before conference so that there need be no open places so difficult to fill on the spur of the moment. Brother Ankrum will have directions for reaching Oak Hill printed in the Evangelist. Now let us make this a great conference with the good people of Oak Hill in their fine new church building.

E. L. MILLER, Moderator.

WHAT IS A "STEWARD?"

By Clara A. Alexander

Mary, who is in junior high school, has had a very bad cold and has been obliged to stay at home for two weeks. She has found a new "game," as she calls it—the study of the meaning of words, as they are given in her father's big dictionary. Last week, when preparing her Sabbath school lesson, Mary looked up the meaning of the word "steward," and I am sure you will be as interested as she was, in what she learned.

Long ago, when the people of England were the Anglo-Saxons, men employed on a farm to look after those cattle which were kept in pens, were called stewards, from a word stie which meant sty or pen, and a word weard which meant keeper, or warden. These stewards had to take care of their master's cattle, at first. By and by, the word came to be given to a man on an estate who took charge of any particular work for the master,—the man whom the master would hold responsible for the trust he had given him. In the course of years, the spelling of the word changed, but a "steward," like the old "stieweard" is a man who is entrusted with the management of his master's property or business.

These were really stewards, therefore, of whom Jesus spoke in a parable he told one day to the people who followed him, and listened to his teaching.

There was once a man, he said, who had to make a journey into a far distant country. He would be gone a long time. So he called to him his servants, and entrusted money to them with which they were to carry on the business till he returned. One man was given five talents (and a talent was a sum of money worth $1,000). Another was given two talents, and a third received one talent. He treated each servant alike in giving him something in trust, but he gave different sums, according to each man's ability.

And straightaway he started upon his journey.

Now the man who had five talents promptly took up the business in hand, and doubled the money given him by his wise management. The second man did the same and doubled his money.

But the third man dug a hole in the ground, and hid the money his master had entrusted to him.

After a long time, the master returned and called his stewards to bring their account books for him to see.

When the first man made his report, the master said, "Well done thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."

When the second man made his report, the master said: "Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."

Came forward the third servant, with fear in his heart and a whining excuse on his lips. "I knew you were a hard man," said he, "reaping where you did not sow, and gathering where you did not reap," (you see, he was trying to abuse his master, in order to excuse himself) "so I was afraid to try to use the talent you gave me. But I dug a hole and hid it, so no one would know I had it from you. I kept it safe, and here it is," and he held out the money he had received.

His master, looking at him said, "You have been a wicked and lazy servant. If you felt so, why did you not put my money in the hands of exchangers" (bankers we would call them today) "so I would have had at least my money with the interest on it?" Then he turned to others standing by, "Take the talent from him, and give to him with ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even what he has. And remove this servant from my presence. He has been an unprofitable man." The other two would go into their master's presence to give him more blessed service. This one was sent away from the joy and happiness of the master's home.

Mary has found another word in the dictionary. Whereas the word "talent" once meant money, this parable that Jesus told has given it another meaning. A person of talent is one who has ability along a certain line. We are in danger of thinking only those who have special and large ability are talented. But that was not what our Lord was teaching. He was teaching that he has given something to each of us to use for him, and when he returns to earth, each of us will be called to give him an account of how we have used it to advance his cause.

Each servant received something and it was the master's own concern that some were given more than others. So the Lord puts in one man's hand many things to use for him. You all know some one boy or girl who ranks very high in every class, while others excel in mathematics or language, or music, or some one study. Some have plenty of spending money, from which they can give to God's causes or to God's poor. Others who give do so—by actual denial of some desire—hardly ever of some actual need. The reason the master rebuked his servant and sent him from his presence, was because he was lazy, "slothful." He did not try to do anything.

He was like Janet. Janet has a beautiful voice, but she is pouting and sour because she could not go away from home this year to study music. "Nobody around here can sing," says Janet, and she refuses to help in the choir, or with the primary children, though she has been asked again and again, and though she could thus aid greatly in the worship of God's house. She prefers to "hide" away the talent God has given her.

Tom is earning money after school and on Saturdays. "Give any of it away?" says Tom in astonishment. "Why I need it all. I'm saving to go to college." He forgets that he is just a steward. His health and earning ability are all given him as a talent from the Lord. Yes, because Tom has a good object in view, he is failing to give even a share back to him who gave him all he has.

That is what a steward is. One who is entrusted with that for which he is to render account. That is why we have this lesson today, so we can recall to our own minds all the talents God has given; so we can consider whether we are faithful to the trust, or whether we are unfaithful, like the unprofitable servant; whether we are giving God his share of time, ability and money, or whether we are neglecting and wasting all, or spending it wholly on the thing we want for ourselves. When he returns what account shall we give?

Christian! That word sums up the best both on earth and in heaven.

A UNIQUE SERMON

In illustrating a recent sermon on the parable of the talents, Dr. George S. Sutton, of the Marlborough Heights church, Kansas City, Missouri, gave a number of young people twenty-five cents each and asked them to increase and return it to apply on the benevolent budget of the church. In three weeks an impressive service was built around the reports of these young people. One girl returned $12.25, another girl $5.00 and a boy $5.00.

When your brief life is over, my friend, what then? Are you too silly to live and too great to die? Then you belong neither to time, nor eternity.

The child that vexes us now, may some day be a prop to hold us to our feet, when the traveling grows hard on the highways of life.

The only hope for the leadership of the tomorrow, is that it may find its direction from the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The changeless God rules all times.

ON TO OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA, FOR THE CONFERENCE OF THE SOUTHEASTERN DISTRICT, JUNE 11 TO 13

Inasmuch as inquiries have commenced to come in regarding the coming District Conference to be held at Oak Hill, West Virginia, June 11-13, it may help some who are contemplating the trip to give the following information. Oak Hill is a modern city of three thousand people located in Fayette County and is a city on top of the mountains, with an elevation of 2000 feet. It is located upon United States Highway North and South, Number 21. Also Highway Number 19. United States East and West Highway Number 60, otherwise known as the Midland Trail, is 20 miles north of us. Numbers 21 and 19 leave the Midland Trail a few miles east of Gauley Bridge and a few miles west of Ansted. The guide post located at the junction of these roads does not have the name of Oak Hill upon it but the name of Fayetteville, the county seat, which is only seven miles north of us. These roads are all hard surfaced. There are a few miles of nine foot road but in the main the roads are of the width specified by Federal Aid. Oak Hill is approximately 150 miles west of Lexington, Virginia. Those coming from Virginia with the exception of those from the southern and southwestern part of the state should take Route number 60 from Lexington. This is a splendid road opened up last fall. People from Oak Hill drive to Washington, D. C. in 12 hours over these roads. Oak Hill is also located upon the Virginian Railway. The C. & O. passes near and taxis meet all trains at Thurmond. There is also a Bus line through here that connects with the large network of bus lines throughout the Eastern United States.

The people of Oak Hill are making plans to entertain the Conference in their best possible manner. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free. Other meals will be served in the dining room of the church, at a cost of thirty-five cents each. Every effort will be made to provide a pleasant as well as a profitable time for the delegates and visitors. The church is located in the very heart of the city and about one hundred feet from the main North and South Highway.

It is the desire that this Conference be one of the best from the standpoint of attendance and accomplishments that this District has ever had. Oak Hill invites and welcomes you.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

OUR LITTLE READERS

WAS HE A COWARD?

A group of boys had stopped upon the sidewalk. To the left of them were large grounds, laid out in walks and thickly dotted with shrubbery. Around the grounds was an iron fence, and the boys stood just beside the wide gateway.

Three of them were warmly clad, but the fourth boy was poorly dressed, and stood apart from the others, his face flushed, his hands thrust into his pockets. He was a sturdy fellow, with mild blue eyes and a resolute mouth. There had been a quarrel, and the three boys had taken sides against him.

"Ben Greenleaf, you are a coward!" one of them said.

"Well now—maybe not," he replied, his blue eyes sparkling.

"Why don't you prove that you are not?" was the retort. "Dick called you by some ugly names."

"He will be sorry for it some time," replied Ben.

"Is that a threat?" asked Dick Carson haughtily.

He was tall, slightly-built boy, with a bright red scarf around his neck. He was not a match for Ben in any way, though he thought he was.

"Knock his hat off," said one of Dick's companions. "See if he'll stand it."

"Why don't you fight?" asked the third boy glaring at Ben. "You shall have a fair play. We are Dick's friends, but we will not interfere."

"Oh, I wouldn't want you to," replied Dick Carson. "I'm quite able to handle him. Will you fight?"

A faint pallor came into the sturdy boy's face. He tightened his lips, then said, "No."

"You are afraid."

"You would get the worst of it, Dick."

"Oh, my!" exclaimed Dick. "You don't want to hurt me—eh? Well, now that's kind of you! I'll see what sort of stuff you're made of."

As he spoke he stepped forward and struck Ben a blow on the cheek with his open hand. It was not a stinging blow, but it was a very tantalizing one.

Ben Greenleaf's face flushed, and his eyes snapped. He had a fierce struggle with himself; but it was not long, for he knew where to look for strength.

"You have concluded to pocket the insult, eh?" Dick asked with a sneer.

"You're made of putty!" said the second boy.

"You're a coward!" declared the third.

"I am brave enough to walk away," Ben said, with a slow, hurt tone. "The Bible says that he who ruleth his spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

"Just listen!" said Dick Carson.

"Let's call him the little parson," said one of the boys. At this all the others laughed.

A lady came from behind some lilac bushes and walked close to the iron fence. She had seen and heard all.

When Dick Carson saw her the blood rushed to his face. He knew her and was ashamed of how mean he had acted.

"Greenleaf, come here," she said. "Wait boys."

She spoke quietly, but there was something very firm in her voice.

The poorly-clad boy walked nearer, with a humble, shy air.

"Dick," Mrs. Webb asked, "was not your little sister Nelly nearly drowned last summer?"

"Yes Ma'am."

"She was bathing, wasn't she?"

"With Mamma. The undertow carried her off."

"Who saved her? Do you remember?"

"Some boy, Mrs. Webb."

"You never learned his name?"

"No, Ma'am."

"Was he a coward?"

"A coward! I should think not, Mrs. Webb! It nearly cost him his life!"

"Master Greenleaf, have you the medal with you?" asked Mrs. Webb.

"Yes, Ma'am," stammered Ben.

"Show it."

"Oh, never mind it, Ma'am," he said, his face reddening.

"Show it," she said again.

He showed the medal very shyly.

"Mrs. Webb," asked Dick Carson, with wide-open eyes and flushing cheeks, "is this the boy who saved our little Nelly from drowning?"

"Yes, Dick. Is he a coward?"

"Mrs. Webb, I have been taught a lesson," Dick Carson said humbly, "I now have a better idea of what real bravery is."

True bravery is courage to do the right at all times, and Ben has proved himself a boy of courage before his enemies.—God's Revivalist.

THE "Malady of Self-Delusion"

"It is difficult for men in high office to avoid the malady of self-delusion. They are always surrounded by worshippers. They are constantly, and for the most part sincerely, assured of their greatness. They live in an artificial atmosphere of adulation and exaltation which sooner or later impairs their judgment. They are in grave danger of becoming careless and arrogant."

I have forgotten who is the author of the above sentences, but they are an accurate analysis of one of the deadliest snares into which any successful leader of men can fall. The admirers of a "great preacher" can sometimes actually destroy him with compliments and constant agreement. The people who think he is a "great man" will always tell him about his greatness. But the sincere friends who see his faults seldom have the courage to tell him. And so after a while, living in an "artificial atmosphere of adulation," he becomes convinced that he has no faults, that he is always right in his judgments, and that to disagree with him is the unpardonable sin. Finally, thoughtful men decide to let him alone, and after that he ceases to grow, being gradually smothered in the sickly air of "admiration."

PRESIDENT HOOVER and the Bible

The president, in a message to the National Federation of Men's Bible Classes, paid a very high tribute to the Book of books. He said:

"There is no other book so various as the Bible, nor one so full of concentrated wisdom. Whether it be of the law, business, morals, or that vision which leads the imagination in the creation of constructive enterprises for the happiness of mankind, he who seeks for guidance for any of these things may look inside its covers and find illumination. The study of this Book in your Bible classes is a post-graduate course in the richest library of human experience. As a nation we are indebted to the Book of Books for our national ideals and representative institutions. Their preservation rests in adhering to its principles."

Christian people everywhere will applaud this wise utterance from a great man. And yet some will feel that the President passed over the most important thing of all. The Bible does instruct men in the matters of "law, business and morals;" but the greatest purpose of the Bible is to reveal Jesus Christ the Son of God. And unless we find him in the Book, all the rest will in the end go for nothing.

The proof of this is to be found in the words of Christ himself: "Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me." (John 5:39 A. R. V.) Those learned Jews to whom Christ spoke these words believed thoroughly in the value of the Scriptures, especially in the realm of law and morals. But in their "searching" of the Book they failed to find Jesus Christ, and in missing him they missed everything. Don't forget it—there is no "life" in the Bible apart from the Son of God.

NUMBER 42060

This number is interesting because it denotes the number of the richest man ever sentenced to a Federal prison. Mr. Sinclair, oil operator worth one hundred millions, having exhausted all the resources of legal machinery to escape his ninety-day sentence, has at last gone to jail.

One of his business associates says that if the authorities will only turn the jail over to Sinclair and let him run it for the ninety days, he will "take it out of the red ink" and put it "on a paying basis."

This helpful suggestion is just a bit late. No one questions Mr. Sinclair's ability to save money for the United States government. The trouble is that he has never before shown any inclination in this direction. That's the reason he is in jail now. The government can only judge from past experiences with Mr. Sinclair, and these have not been happy. High ability does not necessarily make a man trustworthy.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

32. What is the significance of the term "Gloria in Excelsis?"

The full form of this expression is "Gloria in Excelsis Deo," meaning "Glory to God in the highest." It took the form of a chant long ago, beginning with the words, "Glory be to God on high." We call it a doxology, meaning thereby any formal ascription of praise or glory to God. It is an exclamation or prayer in honor of the majesty of God. St. Paul uses what we call a doxology in closing some of his epistles, or even elsewhere. See for example, Romans 9:5. The Hymn of the Angels in Luke 2:14 is also called a doxology and is the original basis of the Gloria under discussion. The so-called great doxology is an expansion of the Angelic Hymn and is used in the Roman church at the celebration of the Mass. What we call the lesser doxology is the more familiar form, and wholly extra-biblical, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end. Amen."

33. What does it mean when it says in First Corinthians that prophecies, tongues and knowledge shall fail or pass away?

The questioner doubtless has in mind 1 Cor. 13:8 which reads as follows: "Love never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall be done away; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall be done away." The careful Bible student will note that the passage stands in the wonderful 13th chapter of First Corinthians. But he will also note that this chapter is in the very heart of the section in which St. Paul discusses the Spiritual Gifts of the Apostolic Church. It forms a part of that discussion and a most important one. A reading of this section will disclose the fact that some of these gifts which the Blessed Trinity dispenses are permanent and some are transitory. Some of them passed with the men who were the special and immediate recipients of them. There is therefore no reason whatever for having any argument over the statement that "prophecies," "tongues" and "knowledge" shall cease. Each of these has a technical meaning in the chapters 12, 13, and 14 of 1 Cor. They simply ceased to be exercised when in God's providence the purpose for which originally conferred was accomplished. Take the most readily traced one of the three, namely, tongues. This is one of the charismata, spiritual gifts, which Paul has under consideration. 12:28. Read also 14:2ff. Then note, that "Love" according to the whole 13th chapter surpasses not only tongues but also certain other of these gifts.

34. What do you think of short pastorates? Are they conducive to the best interests of the local church? I know a minister in _____ church that has now entered upon his thirtieth year as pastor of a church. His church is in a fine condition and growing, but I also know a deacon that holds that three years is a sufficient length of service for any pastor, no matter what his standing may be and what his services are.

I desire to put my opinion in capitals so that I may not be misunderstood by any one who may read this. I BELIEVE IN THE LONG PASTORATE. I have been an observant student of church life for forty years and my observation justifies my convictions on this matter. Even those denominations which formerly held to fixed and rather short terms for their pastorates have so modified their church law so as to make it possible for men to remain just as long as the minister and the people he serves wish to continue the pastoral relation. IT MAKES FOR STRENGTH, STABILITY AND CONFIDENCE. Our Brethren people are certainly waking up to the many advantages of retaining a faithful and efficient man for longer periods than formerly. A man can plan his work and work his plans. He is not under stress of the "moving strain" always staring him in the face. May long pastorates multiply.

The Church's Obligation to Ashland College

The brotherhood is face to face with a most urgent and significant appeal as Educational Day approaches. It is urgent because the need must be promptly and fully met or the church stands to lose much by its failure. It is a matter that cannot be longer delayed. It is a significant appeal because it is vitally related to the future of Ashland College and, as well, to the future leadership and character of the church. It brings to us an obligation that is unavoidable, one that cannot be side-stepped, and one that drives us with compelling force to immediate and adequate undertaking.

Our obligation to meet the financial needs of Ashland College is evident in the first place from the very simple fact so often stated from these columns that we cannot have an efficient and recognized educational institution without it. And unless we have a standard college, we can have no real college at all. It has been determined from experience in college administration and by organized agencies set for the control of educational standards that schools of certain size must have a certain amount of regular and dependable income in order to function properly. For example, a school of two hundred pupils needs a minimum endowment of $300,000, drawing interest at five per cent. And for each additional hundred of students there must be an additional endowment of $50,000. Ashland College numbers about three hundred students, and so her required endowment according to the experience of colleges and the demands of controlling agencies, is a minimum of $350,000. This she must have before she can be recognized by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. And from now on the college that is not able to meet the standards established by this controlling agency will not have the right to function as a college. Colleges have had to close their doors this very year because they were unable to meet the demands. Ashland cannot ask for, nor expect any special consideration. There is nothing she can say or do about it but meet the requirements. If we want a standardized school, we have simply got to measure up to the demands, which are after all only reasonable, and justified by the experience of college administrators the country over.

Our obligation also rests upon the very vital relation that the college sustains to the church and its future. No church can effectively or long do the work committed to it in this day without a trained leadership. And if it is to have a trained leadership that has faith in the church's distinctive mission and message, that leadership must be trained in its own educational institutions. This fact is so obvious that it needs no argument. And it is true not only of the ministry and missionary leadership of the denomination, but of the lay leadership as well. The worthy young people in every congregation will be of far greater value to the church's future and will be more thoroughly established in the faith for which the church stands if they be permitted to do their college work in our own denominational school. This is a vital consideration to those who believe strongly in the importance of the contribution that our church is ordained to give to the world and the growing Kingdom. And that ought to include us all, for if we have not a strong confidence in the worth of our church's mission, we are greatly to be pitied, and are ourselves proof of the need of an education with a denominational slant.

Moreover our obligation to give financial support to Ashland College rests upon the fact that it provides the type of education that the young life of our day is needing badly. It is a frankly and avowedly Christian school and has set as its high purpose the giving of a decidedly Christian education—Christian in the instruction it imparts and Christian in the conduct and life habits it encourages. That is the outstanding distinctive mission of the denominational college, and that is the one excuse for its existence. Manifestly the church controlled college cannot compete with the great state universities in purely educational matters, but the church is not satisfied to have higher education offered to its sons and daughters entirely without restrictions. It is concerned about faith being preserved and strengthened, and conduct and life being motivated by spiritual ideals and standards. This is what gives Educational Day its religious appeal. This is what justifies the claim of our college on a part of the Lord's money entrusted to our people. These restrictions constitute its advantage, along with other distinctly Christian colleges, over the state schools. As long as the college maintains this advantage it has a right to call upon us for support, and the fact that it is seeking to preserve this distinction in a unique way places us under obligation to support it liberally with our gifts.

The fact that it seeks to maintain restrictions on the thought content and habit-forming activities of the student body will necessarily deprive it of the gifts and young people of certain types of parents. Those who believe that the student should not be restricted in his conduct and indulgences, that he or she should be permitted to dance, to play cards, to smoke cigarettes, to fritter away time in pool rooms and to burn up energy and waste time in other questionable, if not harmful ways, will not give their support to a definitely Christian school. But the high minded Christian, the man or the woman who believes that the teachings and spirit of Jesus and his apostles should be adhered to in the education and training of the young as well as in church creeds and conduct, has a privilege as well as an obligation to stand by a school that is reared upon such theory. And by thus standing by such a school, giving young life to be trained and money in sufficient sums to enable it to function unhampered, the church behind it has a right to insist that it shall not depart from that Christian faith and those restrictive and disciplinary principles of life and conduct that have given the church its place in the world. Let students and money that cannot conform to such ideals go elsewhere.

Ashland College is the church's school, established to serve the church, built around the church's ideals and tenets, and its future is in the church's hands. Furthermore, it is the church's only institution of higher education; that makes it strategic to the church's future and life. The church cannot do without it, nor can it afford to be negligent about its support. The college in a sense has the making of the church in its keeping. The efficiency with which it

THE OUTLOOK ENCOURAGING

Excerpts from a letter from Professor E. Glenn Mason, now on leave at Ohio State University:—

"After talking over the possibilities of the denominational college with several men here, I am convinced that there is a strong feeling that there is a bright future for such colleges, whose program is forward looking and worthy, and whose financial condition is healthy. From your reports supported, conscientiously and enthusiastically both by Anspach and Shively, and the confidence that the Examiner of the State University seems to place in the earnest effort that you are making to gain the necessary recognition for Ashland College, I am frank to say, that I am more encouraged than at any time during the past two or three years * * * If we are once in the North Central Association I believe that our future standing will be secure and this will show in student numbers, larger support, and otherwise."

discharges the high responsibility is determined in no small way by the equipment that the church supplies. Let us give, therefore, on Education Day as to the future of the church.

A Memorial of Sacrifice

Memorial Day is a day set apart for the remembrance of service and sacrifice. That is why we decorate the graves of the nation's dead and hold services in honor of their memory—because they served their country at such a cost, they sealed their patriotic devotion with their life's blood. We honor them not because they died, but because they served and died unselfishly, because they sacrificed for a great cause. It is in memory of men who lost their lives in sacrificial service that we pause in the midst of the mad rush of our modern life to offer a prayer and to place a wreath and a flag. They who lost their lives are now finding them—they are living again in the memory and affection of their fellow-countrymen.

How strangely and almost unwittingly we are cooperating to generally suppose, but unselfishness and service. It is no longer the survival of the fittest that scientists tell us is the proper and dominant principle in the improvement and progress of the human race and of animals, but mutual helpfulness and cooperation. The selfish, inconsiderate individual, who has no thought but for his own ends, and desires nothing but his own glory and power, will ultimately find that he is trying to make his way against the very laws of God and of life.

And it is just as true of nations as of individuals. The principle

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There will be a paper next week, but none the week following, that is, none for the date of June 8th. Those having special notices or announcements that cannot wait for the issue of June 15th, should have them in the editor's hands not later than Monday morning, May 27th.

For the benefit of Ohio Endeavorers, we would like to call attention to the State Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in Dayton, June 25 to 28. Further notice will appear next week.

Our Allentown, Pennsylvania, Brethren had a big day on May the 12th, observing Mother's Day in the Sunday school with a special program, a special preparatory sermon by the pastor, Brother Christiansen, at the morning service, and a well attended communion service in the evening.

The Brethren at Canton, Ohio, held their second annual celebration of the dedication of their new church, on Sunday, May 5th. As the result of special effort they had a banner attendance at the Sunday school, the number being 415, and the offering being $165 plus. The preaching services were also largely attended and impressive messages delivered by the pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal. The Christian Endeavorers concluded the day with a vesper service.

bring about a fulfillment of that paradoxical statement of Jesus about losing life and finding it! It is good that we have such a day, for it is seldom enough that we give serious thought to the great ideal of sacrifice. It is difficult for the human mind to understand such truth; we cling to our lives; we desire first place; we seek selfish ends. That was the trouble with the disciples of old. They were selfish, desiring each their own advancement and coveting the places of preferment. The teaching of Jesus that greatness was to come through service and life through death, that the servants were to be the masters and that only those can find their lives who are willing to lose them, was hard to receive. And human nature remains the same,—it is just as hard today; it is still so contradictory to all the principles of human thinking and action that it seems unreasonable. That was one of the outstanding characteristics of the teachings of Jesus,—they were diametrically opposed to our unregenerate human nature and our perverted inclinations.

But unreasonable though it seems, the truth of it is demonstrated when we consider those whom the world most sincerely delights of honor. As Dr. W. Scott Stranahan says: "History has been increasingly expounding this teaching of Jesus. Ambition and selfishness destroy men and nations. The predatory powers, like the predatory animals, invite and in the end secure their own undoings. Increasingly the world becomes democratic and insists that it will not have masters, but only leaders who are servants." There are reversions occurring in the affairs of men and nations ever and anon, but though intermittent in its progress, the long trail of God's truth is nevertheless onward and upward. The truest and most fundamental law of life is not selfishness, as men

Send your Educational Day offering promptly to Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio. Next week's issue will continue the promotion of our Educational interests. In the meantime let us prepare the greatest Educational Day programs that have ever been scheduled for our local church constituency, and seek to lay before our people in a clear and convincing manner the unequaled importance and urgency of this offering. It ought to be the biggest offering in our history for this purpose.

A successful revival was recently held in the church at West Kittanning, Pennsylvania, with Brother J. L. Gingrich as the evangelist. The pastor is Brother Samuel J. Adams, who has been faithfully shepherding these people during the brief time he has been in charge. The visible results are thirty-eight confessions and three reconsecrations. This church seems to be coming forward in splendid style, and doubtless, if it but lays hold on it, it has a great future, as Brother Gingrich suggests. And under its faithful leadership we may believe it will endeavor to do so.

Our Christian Endeavor readers are treated with a splendid report of the activities of the Endeavorers at Washington, D. C. The way they have taken hold of objectives of Christian Endeavor and have sought to make their society more efficient indicates a wide-awake leadership, as well as a splendid group of ready and willing co-workers. We have other good reports from various societies and will publish them as rapidly as space permits. This is the first time in our memory when Endeavorers reported more rapidly than we could publish their reports. But keep coming; we will take care of them promptly.

Some Advantages in Attending a Small Denominational College

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

An analysis of the advantages of attending a small denominational college seems to reveal the following facts. In listing these advantages, there is no intention of discrediting either the state universities or the larger colleges of whatever variety they may be. I want only to call attention to some of the salient and potent factors which rightly contribute to making life at a small Christian school worth while. In some cases, doubtless, the larger schools have the advantage, but when summed up it would appear that the following points should be carefully weighed when making comparisons between the various types of undergraduate schools.

1. Costs. For the most part, I believe that the costs at such a school as Ashland are somewhat less than at larger schools. The tuitions are less as are also the various fees. For parents who are limited financially, this is an important item.

2. There are less counter attractions at a small school. When Woodrow Wilson was president of Princeton University, he made a remark that became famous. He said that there "was danger of the sideshows consuming the main tent." By which he meant, that with all the outside activities and attractions, the student's mind was diverted to these at the sacrifice of scholarship. And it might be well to note in passing that the first duty of a college is to see that circumstances are such that the young person may learn. Where there is no learning, there is no college. Nothing can take the place of scholarship. If colleges are not places for search after truth, then they are not colleges. Around the Harvard yard, the walls bear over and over again the intriguing word, "veritas." It meets you at every turn. Nothing could be more important than this. So if there are less counter attractions at a small college, this point is greatly to their credit.

3. Discipline may be, and ought to be, personal at a small Christian college. It is vastly easier to say, when some dereliction is committed, that "we have a rule" and then sit back and smile. That is relatively easy and takes but small mental effort, but to attempt to weigh and consider personality and motives, takes infinite patience and insight. Only the immortals know how hard small schools have tried to forgive, forget, and try again, and hold out hope. If there is to be any crown laid up for colleges for a genuine service to humanity, then that ought to be the basis of the prize. It is the constant claim of such schools that they "save" men, give them a second chance, and strangely enough, it sometimes succeeds and young people who have only committed some minor folly, turn out well. I regard this as one of the most important functions of the school with a limited enrollment.

4. There is, also, greater chance to make a place in some student organization of the school. We have here the gospel teams, various musical organizations, athletics, the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., etc. There is opportunity here for every student with talent and inclination, to join at least one student organization. And we find that the student who has interested himself in at least one worthwhile organization is better contented, more loyal and interested, than those who never join anything. It is the aim of our Dean of Men to have every student join at least one student organization. In athletics, we receive some and make the others. This is sound athletic policy.

5. Such schools also pay much attention to character. Perhaps all schools are beginning to see that education apart from character, is not complete and, in a measure, at least, impossible. The small Christian colleges have boasted for years that they stress this very essential feature of education and they do lay emphasis on this point. And if they do, they are certainly serving well their day and generation for nothing could possibly be more important.

Lastly, the small college boasts that well-known element, the so-called personal touch. What this is worth can not be easily measured but the worth is doubtless great. Just what it does mean for young people to know personally, and sustain a sort of a comradeship with, men of culture, can only be estimated. It ought to be well known that, after all, the teacher is the sine qui non of all education. Other things are important but the teacher is all important. His breadth of vision, his culture, his character, his personal bearing, his morals,—these are the things of priceless worth in any teacher.

In the small denominational college men are born again. Under the scholarship and cultural leadership of the various teachers, souls find themselves. I can name now many a young person in graduate universities who date their awakening intellectually, not to the high school, but to the inspiration of this college. Of course, this might happen in a large school and often does, but still I am thinking of the personal touch of great-minded men and women who compose the faculty of a Christian college of some 500 students. And if the college such as I have in mind, can perform this highly desirable end, it would seem as if it were serving a very important end in the general field of learning. Character and culture, learning and emotional reactions,—these two factors in edu-

DANGEROUS EDUCATION

Godless Education is the world's most dangerous force. Germany tried it previous to the Great War and the world suffered horribly from it. There were no private Christian colleges in Germany. Had there been there would have been a great and influential body of cultured and capable men and women who would not have been subjected to military domination as were the large group of intelligentsia who, early in the war, issued a manifesto to the world justifying Germany's position. Let Christian colleges die and worse wars than the one just closed will harass mankind.—President M. B. Adams, in Western Recorder.

Keeping At It

By Dean C. L. Anspach, Ph.D.

A large advertising agency in Philadelphia carries on its business seal the motto "Keeping Everlastingly at it Brings Success." This motto could be applied to Ashland College, for its present status, economically, has been the result of hard and diligent work on the part of those who were and are responsible for its administration. The success of our college has been due to the undying interest on the part of the ministry and laity.

There was a time when movements and organizations could be established without great financial expenditures. The old colleges and universities could be administrated as was suggested in the statement that, "a university consisted of Mark Hopkins on one end of the log and a student on the other," without difficulty. The last ten years has seen a remarkable change in methods of college administration. It is still true of course, that good instruction is essential and it might be true that Mark Hopkins with a student and a log, might constitute a university, but modern accrediting agencies are insisting on more equipment than a log. Right or wrong a college like ours cannot argue the case, but as has been pointed out before, must meet the demands of these agencies.

Because of the belief in Christian Education and the desire to maintain a Brethren College our church has kept everlastingly at it, until we have attained our present position. We come again with a plea for a large Educational offering, for unless we continue to "keep at it" we will lose all that we have gained. If we had a large permanent endowment the size of the Educational Day offering would not be so important, for our position would be stabilized by a permanent income and our temporary gifts might fluctuate. In order to meet the North Central Association standards next year, it will be necessary for us to have an Educational offering of at least five thousand dollars ($5000.00), any sum less than this will endanger the standing of your college, not only from the standpoint of the association, but also in making it impossible to conduct the college because of a decrease in its financial income.

I am quite sure that each member of the Brethren church is willing to invest an average of twenty-five to fifty cents ($.25-$.50) a year to guarantee a church investment of approximately one million dollars. We have at Ashland in real estate, equipment and endowment, approximately that amount. The investment is worth little unless it is operated for the benefit of the church. It cannot be operated without income; hence the necessity of a large Educational Day offering. A sum of twenty-five to fifty cents ($.25-$.50) per member has been suggested, which of course means that it will be necessary for some members to give more than this amount to maintain the average.

It might be said here, that the Brethren church has so far responded to our endowment plea in an admirable manner. There may be some question as to the manner in which the money contributed by the churches is being spent. Not one cent of the endowment funds is being expended for current expenses; every dollar contributed by the churches has been properly invested in good securities and remains here under the control of the church. The income from our investments plus the tuition paid by the students is not large enough to take care of the expenditures, hence the necessity of appealing for an offering of approximately five thousand dollars ($5000.00) in order to guarantee the continued operation of our college. If the Brethren church will continue to "keep everlastingly at it," the future of Ashland College will be assured.

Strike While the Iron is Hot

By Charles H. Ashman, Ashland College Trustee

We remember this line, "Strike while the iron is hot," from a song the Glee Club at Ashland used to sing some twenty years ago. Right now, the iron is hot in Ashland's history of Recognition. Dr. Jacobs and others have been stirring the fire for a long time to bring it to the point of white heat. Now is the time to strike! What we do we must "do quickly." Ashland must enter the proper Association of Colleges and Universities within the next year or her future is most uncertain. Some even go farther and say that her future is doomed. Her recognition is not a matter of choice or convenience or prestige, but of necessity. The things we need in order to enter are things we ought to have anyhow. We should have had them years ago, but this necessity has awakened us to a realization of our need.

Now, Pennsylvania churches, we have been selected as your representative on the Board of Trustees. We urge you to have "Educational Day." It is most imperative that every church in the District observe this day. The supreme thing in "Educational Day" is the offering: Yes, money!!! Now is the time to secure the gifts. A dollar right now means more than at any other time in the history of Ashland. Ashland College graduates are not recognized in Pennsylvania right now just because we are not in the Association. We are not in the Association for only one reason, LACK OF ENDOWMENT. Now is the time to supply this. We need LIVING ENDOWMENT. The offering on Educational Day will be counted as such. Now, Pennsylvania churches and others, "let us perform the doing of it."

"We'er Going Forward" Exodus 14:15

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter, Ashland College Trustee

There is nothing more encouraging than the fact that we are going forward, and there is nothing quite so discouraging as the consciousness of going backward. The whole Brethren church has much cause for rejoicing in the fact that Ashland College is going forward, but to continue the forward march the churches from coast to coast will have to continue their loyal support. Every church will have to come to the front with one hundred per cent support of Educational Week, June 2 to 9.

All Brethren parents ought to appreciate the importance of keeping Ashland College in the list of first class colleges. The Brethren church cannot be loyal to her youth who will go to college unless they will make it possible for Ashland College to be a member of the North Central Association of Colleges.

We are right at the doorstep of that Association and will surely enter if the whole Brethren church joins in providing a real Educational Day offering, "as God hath prospered," and if the whole church will continue to stand by our only educational institution.

The pressing objective is an Educational Day offering from every church in the brotherhood during Educational Week.

The College trustees from this district, now called the Southeastern District, are T. Glen Locke, Dr. D. L. Shaver, and the writer. It is their earnest desire that every church in this district shall take this special offering and thus help to maintain Ashland College in a way of which we shall feel justly proud. Every dollar given will count for twenty dollars in the endowment chest. Let the Southeastern District make Educational Day "Dollar Day" or more. What a victory that would be if the whole brotherhood would average at least one dollar per member!

Hagerstown, Maryland.

Pelley's "Seven Minutes in Eternity"

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

Not only do the Scriptures reveal an unseen world in which are to be found evil spirits as well as good, but, likewise, they testify that in that unseen world there is an abode for evil spirits,—a place called Hades; and, an abode for good spirits,—a place called Paradise. Into this latter place the Apostle Paul testifies that he himself went a brief period, "whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell," said he; "God knoweth."

Fortunately, the Scriptures expressly set forth the method whereby all the spirits with whom contact is established are to be tested,—tested to know of what sort they are. It is written: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."

The Scriptural test then of righteous spirits is in their attitude toward Jesus Christ. Some years ago, the writer attended a World Conference for Spiritualists here in California, and was surprised to find that they had fifteen or twenty songs printed on a large cardboard, for use in the Conference, selected from perfectly orthodox hymn books. There we read the titles, such as: "Blessed Assurance," "Rejoice and Be Glad," "I Love to Tell the Story," and "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me." But, to our amazement, we found that, while the old tunes were used, the wording had been changed; but, only insofar as was necessary to delete the name of Jesus Christ from every one of them. For instance, instead of the familiar words:

"Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine!
O, what a foretaste of glory divine!
Heir of salvation, purchase of God,
Born of his Spirit, wash'd in his blood.

"This is my story, this is my song,
Praising my Savior all the day long;

This is my story, this is my song,
Praising my Savior all the day long."

we read:

"Blessed assurance, Heaven is mine,
Angels are guiding through forces divine!
Truth, leading error, stronghold of love,
Blesing our earth life where'er we rove.

"This is my story, this is my song,
Angels are guiding, all the day long;
This is my story, this is my song,
Angels are guiding, all the day long."

Instead of:

"Rejoice and be glad! The Redeemer has come!

OUR GOAL

An Educational Day Offering from Every Church

Go look for his cradle, his cross and his tomb."
we read:

"Rejoice and be glad for the spirits have come,
From the darkness of death, they have lighted our home."

Instead of:

"Jesus, Savior, pilot me,
Over life's tempestuous sea;
Unknown waves before me roll,
Hiding rock and treacherous shoal;
Chart and compass came from thee;
Jesus, Savior, pilot me!"

we read:

"Angels, angels pilot me,
Over life's tempestuous sea;
Unknown waves before me roll,
Hiding rock and treacherous shoal;
Chart and compass came from thee;
Angels, angels, pilot me!"

Could any one who believes the Scriptures to be an authentic revelation from God, believe anything less than that here we have "that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come?"

Applying this test to Mr. Pelley's experience, what do we find? Though he entered, from seven to ten minutes, into the realm of apparently very happy spirits, and though he believed that he walked among and talked with the friends he knew on earth, there is absolutely no mention of having seen Jesus Christ. The entire description of his visit into eternity and its world of "happy" spirits is written with but one slight indirect mention of "the Lamb Who is the light thereof." Now, the sacred Scriptures assure us that "to depart" from this world is to "be with Christ," and that "to be absent from the body" is to "be present with the Lord." Is it possible, the divine record being true, that if William Dudley Pelley spent from seven to ten minutes in Paradise, he would return to tell us more about the headgear of the women over there than of the glorified Lord of that world? "I can see with perfect clarity in my mind's eye," he says, "the outline of the millinery worn by a dignified elderly lady at whose death-bed I had been present in Sioux City, Iowa in 1923." However, as to the Supreme Ruler of that happy world, he says, "I had no mad obsession to go off at once in search of Deity." More interested in women's "millinery," and in the "white duck" that a big broad-shouldered, blue-eyed fellow" wore than in the Lord of that glory-world! In fact, the only reference to Christ made in the entire record of his wonderful experience of "seven minutes in eternity" is to state rather apologetically, "I never had anything but remorseful tenderness in my heart for the memory of the Man of Sorrows and what he epitomized in the human scheme of things." It is indeed hard for a believer of Holy Writ to believe that any one could spend even "seven minutes" in the Paradise of the righteous, and return to earth to record such an experience, and make so slight a reference with such seeming indifference to him who is the Center of it all! We are forced at least to the conclusion that Mr. Pelley spent his "Seven Minutes in Eternity" in some spirit world where the inhabitants have little or no concern for the Son of God.

Again, the central doctrine of the Bible is the doctrine of the atonement. That doctrine teaches that "there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." It is written, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." The cleansing of the Christian, according to the revelation of God, is a thing also that must occur before we leave this world. Mr. Pelley's cleansing came in the world beyond, and in a bloodless fountain. He informs us that when he arrived in the spirit-realm, he found himself to be "nude." He was commanded to "bathe" for his cleansing in "a clear-as-crystal Roman pool" of "delightful water." He obeyed; and, "I immediately came up garbed," he says. "The bath did something to me in the way of clothing me." Of course, this is the "bath" that provided the "elderly lady" with her "millinery," and the "big, broad-shouldered, blue-eyed fellow" with his "white duck." To those of the evangelical Christian faith, at least, all this seems like an awful travesty on the most precious article of their faith; even as it is written, "These are they which . . . have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." It is a travesty that we should expect to be enacted only in a world of demons, where the doctrine of cleansing through the shed blood of the Cross is obnoxious indeed.

Not for one moment would we infer that the friends and loved ones of William Dudley Pelley who have departed from this earth, are in the world of demons; but, we would affirm, what every well-informed psychic researcher knows full well, that the spirits of the under-world are constantly impersonating our beloved dead.

We are not at all surprised therefore to hear Mr. Pelley say, "It never occurred to me that I was in heaven!" He wasn't! In relating the experience of his journey into eternity, his candid statement is,—"Whereas I had been on a bed in the moonless dark of a California bungalow when the phenomena started, the next moment I was plunging down a mystic depth of cool, blue space." Now, "down" is not the direction of Paradise, according to divine record. Nor is "up, up, up, feet first," a Biblical description of any return from that happy world. Nor is Paradise (into which the Apostle Paul says he was "caught up") ever described in the Scriptures as a "mystic depth,"—though another particular place is so described. The description of "cool, blue space" remains somewhat puzzling to us!

Nor is the language, used by Mr. Pelley's attendants who came to his assistance as he went "whirling madly" down that "mystic depth," very assuring; for, it would be impossible for a devout believer in the sacred Word to think of reading in the Bible that, as Lazarus "was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom," his attendants re-assured him by saying, "Take it easy, old man! Don't be alarmed! You're all right. We're here to help you!" This sounds very much more like the familiar brogue of spirits that "peep and mutter" these days out from another world than Paradise.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A CABINET OF MUSSOLINI

Premier Mussolini has recently received another portfolio, that of Public Works, at the hands of King Victor Emanuel. He now holds eight of the thirteen cabinet positions. Only those of Justice, Finance, Public Instruction, Communications and National Economy are in other hands. If things go on at this rate it will greatly simplify the matter of cabinet meetings. All that will be necessary will be for the Premier to go into his office and have a conference with himself. It appears to the average American observer as if only a double-super-man or a spineless nation could make such a situation desirable or possible.—The Presbyterian Advance.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF IT?

Discussing the charge against two Congressmen, that they smuggled liquor into the United States, a clip sheet issued by the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, says:

"Representative Michaelson of Chicago and Representative Morgan of Ohio are charged with bringing liquors into the United States. Mr. Morgan says that he brought no liquors into the country, that he never tasted a drop of liquor in his life. Mr. Michaelson also says he is not guilty.

What do we think of it? Nothing. How do we know whether these gentlemen are guilty or not? We have a very shrewd suspicion that one of them, at least, is certainly not guilty.

"They should have their hearings and if guilty they should be punished according to law. The law knows no difference between Congressmen and hucksters, but until it is established that they are guilty, these incidents certainly do not serve as texts to show the alleged general hypocrisy of Congressmen."

Just this morning we read that a New York grand jury could not find evidence that Congressman Morgan had any liquor but that he had spoken in a threatening manner to a custom house officer! (Did you ever have your baggage examined by one of these officials? Well, you understand then). But the grand jury, according to a wet paper, wrote out a long homily on the evils of hypocrisy. It was very amusing, but it showed a vicious state of mind on the part of the grand jury.—The Christian-Evangelist.

FEAR CANNOT BRING PEACE, SAYS COOLIDGE

In the May issue of the "Ladies' Home Journal" former president Calvin Coolidge, discussing the promotion of peace through the limitation of armaments, says, "Men will not long recognize the sword as the major source of authority."

"So long as there is evil in the world," Mr. Coolidge says, "armies and navies will be required for domestic and international police service, but peace never will be made permanent by fear alone. It must have a main foundation of justice and good will strong enough to satisfy the reason and conscience of humanity."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

MOVIES TO EDUCATE FOR PROHIBITION

The moving picture is being utilized as an educational means for the promotion of prohibition. A three-year campaign of international scope is to be launched soon by a group of Americans. They propose a series of motion pictures. Already a new film is before the general public, "Deliverance." A film costing $75,000 is now available and in use not only in America, but in foreign countries. We are informed that this is a dramatization of the books of Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University. Another film is to be ready for the market this fall which deals with the Canadian system of liquor control. Mr. Robert A. Coradini, secretary of the World League Against Alcohol, and producer of the film, "Deliverance," has issued a statement in which he declares that $100,000 will be spent annually for the next three or four years in preparing a program of education through the moving picture medium.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN GIFTS FOR MISSIONS

Southern Presbyterians are again disappointed by decreased receipts for their missionary work and increased deficits. The receipts for the regular work of foreign missions were $1,093,517 and the deficit of the committee is now increased to nearly $175,000 instead of $132,000 a year ago. Budget receipts for home missions amounted to $492,444, a decrease of over $14,000 as compared with the preceding year, and the indebtedness has increased from $41,000 to $49,000. Both of these agencies carry some special accounts and additional sums of prohibition and the different systems of local control operated by other governments contrasted with America given for these special purposes, the preceding figures referring only to the work to which undesignated gifts are applied. As in our own work, Southern Presbyterians are perplexed by the increasing cost of old work because of the cost of living on mission fields, and distortion pictures dealing with the moral and social aspects stressed because unable to respond to pressing calls for expanded work to meet the need.—The Presbyterian Advance.

DR. JEFFERSON RESIGNS

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson presented his resignation to his church, the Broadway Tabernacle, Congregational, at a recent Sunday morning service. The resignation will take effect August 29 next year when Dr. Jefferson will be seventy years old. He is carrying out a plan which he has long had in mind and is resigning "with health unimpaired and mental vigor unabated." He has served the Broadway Tabernacle for nearly a quarter of a century and in that time has done great things in the extension of the Kingdom of love. Dr. Jefferson is the author of some twenty-nine books on religion. He will go on working after his resignation and, in an interview recently, he said he hoped to be able to accept more speaking engagements than he has been able to accept. He has made an effort through the years to be in his pulpit on Sundays no matter where he went in the week. The relations of pastor and people through this long ministry have been happy and an example for other churches and pastors.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

I ask myself often, both as parent and teacher, and you comrades of God's greatest blessing—you other parents—let me ask you: Are we doing our part to show our children the glory of God in lives fitted for his service? Are we?—Dr. E. D. Warfield, President of Wilson College.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

He is Faithful—Ezek. 36:25-32; Heb. 10:23. In these verses God reaffirms the covenant which he had made with the fathers of Israel. God had been compelled to postpone the promised blessings because of the rebellion of the children of Israel; nevertheless, the promise stands. Not for their own sakes, but because he is faithful that promised, and he cannot deny himself. How we all should rejoice in a Savior who will perform every good thing that he hath promised. May we ever be faithful to him!

TUESDAY

From Death unto Life—Ezek. 37:1-14; John 5:24. The interpretation of this vision is given in v. 11; however, in a very real sense the vision also typifies the work of the Spirit in the world. Without him, there is no life; the bones may even be clothed with flesh and sinews, having every semblance of life, but until the Spirit enters life does not exist. "Fill me with thy hallowed presence, Come, O come, and fill me now."

WEDNESDAY

Unity—Ezek. 37:15-28; John 17:21-23. In the coming days, Judah and Israel shall forget their controversies, and become one nation, with God as their leader. Our Lord's prayer for his people was that we might all be one, and in that prayer he makes known the secret of that unity; himself! That his prayer shall be answered is evident from such passages as Rev. 5, where John beholds a great multitude gathered together from all nations and kindred throughout the earth. May we, our Father, all be one in thee.

THURSDAY

The House and its Law—Ezek. 43:1-12. We praise God that it is not necessary for us to go through with countless forms, penance and ablations before we may enter into his presence. On the other hand, he has established certain conditions which must be fulfilled if we would worship him. Even so, those who love him need not worry about them, for Paul says (Rom. 13:9, 10), that they are all summed up in the one word, Love. "More love to thee, O Christ, More love to thee! Tear thou the prayer I make, On bended knee."

FRIDAY

Reverence—Ezek. 44:1, 2; Heb. 4:16. No man was to use the east gate, because the Lord had entered in thereat; his very presence had sanctified it. How lightly men often esteem holy things, often trampling them under foot. However, we rejoice that since Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us we may come boldly into his very presence through the living door.

SATURDAY

Worship: its Influence—Ezek. 46:9. When the people came to worship at their solemn feasts, they were not to leave the temple by the same door through which they had entered. We know of some churches in which the baptistry is so arranged that those who receive the rite go down into the waters from one side, leaving the pool by steps on the other side. The symbolism is beautiful: it implies that one cannot go through with these sacred ordinances and remain the same. Either his plight is made worse because of truth rejected, or he has been strengthened and ennobled by the truth received. May we be so strengthened and enriched each time we hear thy word, O Lord!

SUNDAY

The Presence of the Lord—Ezek. 47:1-9; Acts 3:19. The message of this chapter is almost identical with that of the last chapter of the Revelation. From the house of God a mighty stream of blessing, carrying healing and life, flows forth to bless all places with which it may come in contact. May we do our utmost to extend the blessings of thy presence even unto the uttermost parts of the earth.—T. C. L.

Giving Children the Whole Gospel

By Edward D. Goller

God commanded the family of Abraham concerning the precepts of the Book of the Law, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." This method of instruction produced a nation that was "a peculiar people" who have passed through nearly four thousand years of persecution, hardship, and disintegrating powers, without a parallel in human history.

The years just preceding the birth of Jesus were the darkest period of the world's history, for no prophet's voice was heard for four hundred years. As a result of the failure of the Hebrews to teach the commandments of God diligently to their children the standard of morals and the spiritual life had sunk to the lowest levels, and the angel informed Zacharias that his son John would "go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children." And when the Messiah came he called unto him a dear little boy "and set him in the midst" of his disciples.

The Gospel of Christ is abundantly able to make genuine, devout Christians of the children. A pitifully small proportion of the children are receiving the Gospel at all, and of those who are given the privilege of hearing it, the most are receiving but a few crumbs of the Bread of Life.

Sixty percent of the youth of America are receiving no religious instruction. The average attendance of the present Sunday school enrollment is sixty percent, receiving perhaps thirty half-hours of instruction in the average year. With fifteen hours at her disposal no public school teacher would hope to do justice through a year, to any subject, yet we expect that our boys and girls can learn enough in fifteen hours a year to enable them to face "all the fiery darts of the wicked one."

A good authority declares that there are eighteen million boys and girls of public school age in the United States who are receiving no religious instruction of any kind. Who can estimate the national calamity that must result from this colossal neglect.

After teaching the Gospel to more than thirty thousand boys and girls of from seven to sixteen years of age I am persuaded that results are best when the teacher is absolutely honest with them in revealing the whole truth, so far as the young mind can understand it. During the years in which I have told groups of children the story God has given me in his Book I have seen demonstrated what God's Word can do, for nearly every child who hears this story is ready to confess Christ as his personal Savior. I have never been guilty of the unscriptural, dishonest sin of telling the "dear children" that they do not need the sacrifice Christ made on the cross for sin. We must show that Jesus came "to seek and to save that which was lost," and a clear explanation of the Scripture "In Adam all die" prepares the mind to be hungrily ready to hear the good news, "In Christ shall all be made alive."

Another very touching test has been that all children who have been carefully instructed in Gospel truth believe very earnestly in "the surrendered life." I have had the privilege of speaking on the theme, "Jesus the Light of the World" to more than five hundred groups of from twenty to four hundred children each. In the close of the half hour, no part of which is planned to appeal to the emotions, there is offered the challenging conviction that the children will not assent to the idea of a half-hearted life. After presenting Christ as the only way in which a life can be made clean, and a fit place for him to dwell, the question is presented, "Can we have just a little corner fenced off by itself for just a little bad fellow to live?" Every one of the groups, without a single exception, has replied with enthusiasm, "No! We must give the whole heart to Jesus!" Further testing them always demonstrated that with the children the idea of "the surrendered life" was the only condition they would accept. Those who hesitate on the point of a full surrender seem to be adults.

Furthermore, upon my return to many of the communities where this full Gospel of a surrendered life had been presented, to my delight and surprise an exceedingly large number of the children were still living out what they had learned, proving that even in the lives of the children the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

During a period of three years it was my privilege to organize more than fifty clubs of a strictly Christian nature, the Knights of St. Paul, with an average of ten boys each, where the New Testament appeal through Paul and Christ was presented as boldly as possible. In testing these five hundred boys the only criticism ever made was, "We ought to make our meetings more spiritual." For the older boys, fourteen to sixteen years of age, a second appeal was made in which the boys were to experience, with as much solemnity and sacredness as possible, the conversion that Paul experienced. The expression of one fine fellow of fourteen years shows the impressions made, when he said: "I am glad that I had that experience. Never before could I know what this all meant to the great apostle." Big boys are hungry for the whole Gospel when it is presented boldly.

Out of many experiences in evangelism among boys and girls a few from widely contrasted conditions illustrate that boys and girls can understand and do grasp the real meaning of the Gospel of Christ.

David spent the first ten years of his life in a community where there were no opportunities for religious instruction. Two years in Sunday school caused his inner life to respond like a bud bursting in the summer sun. He enjoyed everything connected with the church life. The clear presentation of the Gospel brought forth a whole-hearted response, resulting at the age of thirteen in his confession of Christ and taking membership in the church. A year later I asked him: "David, when you heard the story of the suffering of Christ for you for the first time, what impression did it make upon you?" He replied, "I felt that I ought to give my whole life to him in devoted service." His life since has been a living example of his sincerity.

Bertha was brought up in an earnest atmosphere of a sincere Christian home. She was very quiet, exceedingly earnest, even serious in all her ways, yet at the age of twelve seemed to be very far from confessing Christ as her Savior. No one knows what a quiet heart contains, for when asked what the cross of Christ meant to her she replied: "When the minister preached on 'Christ crucified' one night, he invited people to come forward and confess Christ. There seemed to be a great power that just took hold of me and pulled me toward the pulpit. I could not even hold to my seat. I had no strength to hold back." No minister called to service has been a more devoted student of the Bible than has Bertha since her public confession. When she told me of her transformation by the power of the cross she was in her second year of high school, where she is now making fine progress in preparation for a life of service for Christ.

The power of the cross in a little life can scarcely find a more convincing testimony than in the transformation of poor little burden-bearing Betty. She was ten years of age when I first saw her strangely pinched face, but many years before our first meeting she had felt keenly the disgrace of being an illegitimate child. The soul-wringing remorse, the biting bitterness, the cringing bashfulness of her girl-mother toward all people had made its mark unrelentingly upon the inmost soul as well as the tender face of tiny, timid Betty. Thoroughly afraid of men, rigidly retiring in disposition, exceedingly quiet and passive in manner, her inner personality was like a hidden gem. Her heart-life had been so strongly stamped with the dire dread of men that all natural childish glow was smothered into a cloudy gloom of fear. Thus it was only after many months of the tenderest lovingkindness that she would return even a faint smile, through features pinched and embittered by a sadness.

It was only after carefully and prayerfully bestowing upon her shrunken soul a fatherly care from a heart bleeding with sympathy for her silent suffering that she gave even a slight response to my efforts to help her. Then came the opportunity to pour into her little dark soul the glory-beams of the cross of Christ. Soon after I had baptized her, and welcomed her into the membership of the church, circumstances took me from the town, to leave her, with a dozen other young Christians, in the midst of the most irreligious community filled with the vilest wickedness that I have ever witnessed.

Six years passed without a word from badly-born, but now newly-born, Betty's mother. "Betty," she said, "is the joy of our home. Her foster father thinks the sun rises and sets in her. If she is away from home a few days it seems as though the sun had ceased to shine in our home. Her half-brother thinks the world of her."

Later I said to Betty: "When the story of the death of Christ was told to you, what did it mean to you?"

With a beaming face she answered: "Jesus is my joy, my life, my all. Through all these years my Bible and my prayer life have been my life, my help, and my comfort. No one on earth will ever know the suffering through which I have passed. I have been afraid of all men, and even my own mother did not understand me. Christ has been the only one to whom I could go. I live in him and he in me all the day through."

Is it worth while, the transformation of Betty from hopelessness into the glory of Christ and the sweet sunshine of a farmer's home? Surely this shining example of a victorious life says, "Give the Lord Jesus all the glory and praise. I owe it all to him!"

Bellevue, Kentucky.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for June 2)

Later Experiences of Jeremiah

Scripture Lesson—Jer. 20:1-6; 37:1 to 38:28; 43:1-7.

Printed Text—Jer. 38:4-13.

Devotional Reading—Matt. 5:3-11.

Golden Text—Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Matt. 5:11.

Explanatory Notes

Chapters 36 to 39 of the prophecy of Jeremiah include many very dramatic elements. They picture a country trembling on the brink of final disaster, a terrified and vacillating king, a people who are torn between their fears and their patriotic pride, and in the midst of the turmoil a stern prophet of Jehovah who refuses to alter his prediction that Jehovah will allow the Babylonians to destroy Judah for its sins.

The dramatic story of the burning of Jeremiah's prophetic manuscript by King Jehoiakim, is told in Chapter 36. In spite of the bravado of the king and his princes, doom is coming nearer. They hope for deliverance through a revolt against Babylon by Pharaoh Hophra, but he is defeated and the Babylonian forces are now at the gates of Jerusalem. Those who believe that Jehovah will let no harm come to his people, no matter what they do, are opposed to Jeremiah, who insists that Jehovah is a God of justice and that the armies of Babylon shall take the city and destroy it. For this seemingly unpatriotic utterance Jeremiah is imprisoned, but is later released by the terrified king, who is not sure which prophet to believe.

Not only to the king but to all the people, Jeremiah openly predicted that those who remained in the city when the Babylonians entered should die. The only escape was by going over voluntarily to the Babylonians. The printed part of our lesson text begins with the charge of the princes that Jeremiah was guilty of treason and that he weakeneth the hands of the men of war.

The reference to the men of war that remain, together with that in verse 19, indicates that a considerable number of Jews had gone over to the Babylonians.

Compare the weakness of the king when faced by the angry enemies of Jeremiah with the behavior of Pilate in Luke 23.

The word dungeon is otherwise rendered "pit." It was a cistern-like place of confinement, with mud in the bottom, into which the prophet was lowered with cords.

The fact that Jeremiah was imprisoned rather than executed may have been due to a superstitious fear of taking a prophet's life. The king, in Jer. 37:17, seems to think that Jeremiah may have miraculous powers.

Ebed-Melech was an Ethiopian, probably an officer of some standing in the court. He was at least able to interview the king and intercede for Jeremiah.

After Jeremiah was restored to the court of the guard, where he had been held prisoner before being taken to the subterranean dungeon, the king again sought his advice. But the stern old prophet would not retract, even to gain his freedom, the message God had entrusted to him. Do not fail to read all the lesson material as indicated above; not merely the printed passage.—E. Leigh Mudge.

Standing Alone for God

"The prophet was put in prison, not on account of any wrong that he had done, but because he had stood for the right. This he did in spite of the fact that he knew that his enemies had the power to do him much damage. But he felt that his was to do and say that which was true, whatever might come to him in consequence. He was unwilling to be a time-server and speak peace, where there was no peace. But it must have taken much courage and faith in God for him thus to stand alone for the right. Yet we, in these later years, recognize that this was one of Jeremiah's finest traits of character. It is easy to stand for the right when all things are going well with us. But to stand for the right when we are alone, and when we know that this stand will cost us much, is not so easy. It takes genuine courage of the highest kind to act in this way. There are many men, who in company with others would go to the cannon's mouth, who would not dare to stand alone in the face of all men and do the right. But, most fortunately for the world, there are always a few such brave souls who dare and do in spite of all opposition."

Illustration from Pilgrim's Progress

"Then the Shepherds had the Pilgrims to another place called Mount Innocent, and there they saw a man clothed all in white, and two men, Prejudice and Ill-will, continually casting dirt upon him. Now, behold, the dirt, whatsoever they cast at him, would in a little time fall off again, and his garment would look as clear as if no dirt had been cast thereat. Then said the Pilgrims, 'What means this?' The Shepherds answered, 'This man is named Godly-man, and this garment is to show the innocence of his life. Now, those that throw dirt at him are such as hate his well-doing; but, as you see, the dirt will not stick upon his clothes, so it shall be with him that liveth truly innocently in the world. Whoever they be that would make such men dirty, they labor all in vain; for God, by that a little time is spent, will cause that their innocence shall break forth as the light, and their righteousness as the noonday.'"—John Bunyan.

False Repentance

From Jeremiah 34 we learn that in the terror inspired by the approach of the Chaldeans the panic-stricken populace of the capital bethought them of a law of their God which they had long set at naught; and the king and his princes and the entire people bound themselves by a solemn covenant in the temple to release according to the law all slaves of Israelitish birth who had served six years and upwards, whom they had continued to keep in unlawful and oppressive servitude. But this was a mere formal penitence and not real contrition for their sin. And as soon as Nebuchadnezzar's armies withdrew from Jerusalem to meet the advancing Egyptian army they broke their covenant and compelled those they had made free to return to their unlawful service again.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Conclusion of Jeremiah's Life

"After the fall of Jerusalem, the wretched remnant who had been left in Palestine carried Jeremiah by force to Egypt. Although they rejected his counsels, he was to them evidently an object of feticistic dread. Amid his new surroundings the prophet continued to proclaim the divine mission of Nebuchadnezzar, and his future subjugation of the very country where they had hoped to find an asylum from the Chaldeans.

"Jeremiah's was a sad and pathetic ministry. It was in reality a prolonged martyrdom. Alone in Judah he had to withstand ## Report of Activities from May 1, 1928 to May 1, 1929 of the Christian Endeavor at Washington D. C.

Taken as a whole our Christian Endeavor society has cause to be thankful for the past twelve months. First of all, through a membership drive conducted by the vice-president, Miss Vada Weiner, new members were added, and there were very few dropped—perhaps two or three.

A number of special features were had during the year, all of which increased interest in the present members and were the means of visitors of all ages in the church. "C. E. Month" during November-

December, led by Preston Campbell, received commendation from every one. During this month special speakers were provided for the meetings, a social was enjoyed and the society advertised extensively.

The great Crusade with Christ was taken over enthusiastically and every phase of it participated in. Beginning this, was the C. E. convention of the societies of the district, the sessions of which were well attended by our members. Among the many things enjoyed was an address by Dr. Poling at this convention. All felt that the C. E. Union of the district, heretofore almost unheard of, was truly a great benefit to our society. All during the year they sent speakers who added materially to the meetings.

This is also our first year with the Brethren Union. We feel this is going to be a big help too, even though we joined only following the conference.

We have done as much benevolent work as our treasury permitted. All monies, however, are raised by voluntary giving and pledges, for at no time have we ever resorted to any money making plans. The whole society is interested and concerned with the taking over of the Kentucky work, and while our first pledge is not so large we are expecting to meet it and increase it next year.

There are minor things we could perhaps mention, but the above is an annual report of the most important activities. Primarily, we want to keep in mind the motto of the Crusade "For Christ and the Church."

Christianity's Future in China

By Stanley High

(Note—This article is part of a report made by Mr. High, a member of the staff of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions, following a recent visit to China).

Whatever the past has been the future of Christianity in China is now almost wholly in the hands of our Chinese brethren. Their opinion has a status which it has never had. Their loyalty to the Christian faith has become the decisive factor of fundamental significance relative to the immediate development of the church of Christ in China. By far the majority of the missionaries now on the field recognize that fact and for the most part welcome it.

First, the Kuomintang represents the organized expression of the Nationalist aspirations of practically all of those Chinese who are intelligent or self-conscious. In the north, where the Nationalists have not yet won military control, the enthusiasm for the aims of the Nationalists is just as widespread, although in secret, as in Nationalist territory.

In this enthusiasm, our Christians, with exceedingly few exceptions, join. In all of my efforts to find hostility I have only met one Chinese Christian who was doubtful about the Kuomintang. With this enthusiasm, there has gone an unwillingness to admit the strength of the hoodlum-Communist element in the party. Christians who expected the millennium with the arrival of the K. M. T. have been in many places disappointed, Nanking, moreover, has been a source of great disillusionment. Even now, however, I believe intelligent Chinese greatly underestimate the difficulty they are going to have in outing the reds from the place of influence which, through financial and military aid, they have made for themselves.

But it is doubtful if, even after Nanking, the fundamental belief in the K. M. T. will be greatly altered. Educated Chinese are too familiar with the violent acts which have accompanied wars and revolutions in the West to condemn too quickly their own movement because of such an affair. I have had chapter and verse of our own Civil War, with particular reference to Shermans' March to the Sea, cited as reference in case of doubt on that point. And when the history of the movement is written, it may be that not the violence to foreigners but its general absence will be the most striking fact. It would be a great mistake, therefore, if American Christians underestimated this continuing confidence of Chinese Christians in the Nationalist movement. These Chinese are prepared to surrender close association with us—if they are forced to it by our actions—rather than to surrender their own claims to international justice as expressed through the Kuomintang.

Another reservation, however, needs to be made. The Christian community and the educated classes generally are bitterly opposed to Communist influence. When they awaken to see the issue I believe there are no limits to the struggle which this group will make against red domination. Now, of course, first concern is centered on uniting the country from a military point of view. The reds are utilizing that preoccupation for their own ends. General Chiang—of whose sincerity and sanity I think there is no question—has precipitated the issue and it may be the final fight will come at once, in the long run even the laborers—now on the right arm of the Communists—will awaken to see how fantastic and extreme has been their betrayal at the hands of the radical wing of the party. When that time comes, the intellectual Chinese, who are neither violent nor red but intensely nationalistic, will come into their own. Meanwhile, however, China may be in for a long fight to oust the reds—a fight in which the Christians, with little doubt, will be called upon to play a decisive role.

So far, now, as Christianity is concerned, the most important fact in the situation is not the Nanking outrage nor the evacuation of our missionaries. The most important fact is the unswerving loyalty and self-sacrifice of our Chinese Christians who, rather than the missionaries, are bearing the real brunt of the attacks upon their faith.

I wish to emphasize with all the force at my command how great would be the tragedy if we lose our perspective in computing our property losses, and confuse our minds in the multitude of details attendant upon so general an evacuation. I do not need to say how serious and irreparable were the losses at Nanking and how tragic the death of Doctor Williams. But it needs to be said that the threat at Nanking, and throughout China, is not at any particular set of buildings, or even, at any particular set of people. The threat, rather, is at Christianity. And the question, therefore, is one that concerns, not the state of our property but the state of Christianity which,

I am convinced, is a different thing. And, in the long run, the state of Christianity is bound up neither in the fate of the missionaries nor in the buildings which they have erected but, rather, in the persistent loyalty of those thousands of Chinese Christians who, when this threat appears at their compound gates, cannot pack up and evacuate.

What of these Chinese, therefore, who now remain the sole trustees of the gospel which, through a century, we have preached to them? The answer to that question takes us back to first century Christianity. When it is finally given and the data all assembled I doubt if any period of Christian history will be more inspiring. The story is a succession of incidents.

At a recent meeting in Chungking when salary cuts were imminent the preachers said: "If we were in the employ of some other institution, the Post Office for example, we would now call a strike. We have talked the matter over. We have decided not to strike. The job of preaching the gospel is not that of the missionaries but of us Chinese Christians. We will, therefore, return to our tasks even though we scarcely have enough on which to live. We will do our utmost, God helping us."

Near Hinghwa, a few weeks ago, Southern radicals invaded a Methodist church on Sunday morning. The preached had just finished his sermon. Said the leader of the radicals: "You must interpret for me." Said the preacher: "I will if what you say is not anti-Christian." He began to speak and soon entered upon a tirade against Christianity. "I cannot go on," said the preacher, "I have just finished a sermon setting forth my faith in Jesus. I cannot aid in advancing your hatred of him."

Whereupon the preacher and the District Superintendent were both badly beaten and barely escaped with their lives. At any time had they recanted, they could have had freedom. Now, because they refused, they are exiles from their homes.

In Yenping, after the radicals entered, it was proposed to have an early morning (it was Christmas morning) anti-Christian song service in burlesque of carol singing. The Christian people heard of the proposal. They accordingly arose at two in the morning, and were on their way singing Christmas carols through the streets two hours before the anti-Christian group was abroad.

Most striking of all these examples of Christian devotion come from Nanking. During the entire day of terrors, when escape for the missionaries seemed unlikely, little groups of Chinese boys and girls and preachers and laymen—between frantic efforts to save their foreign friends—slipped into hiding places and held impromptu prayer meetings for the safety of the missionaries. "It was a day of tragedy," one missionary told me, "but also a day of prayer."

I might go on multiplying incidents of this sort. I record these to indicate how vital is the Christianity we have planted in China, and how different and apart is its fate from that which may befall our own human programs and equipment. It may be, as many missionaries believe, that in this China crisis, God is calling us to a new appraisal of Christianity—an appraisal wholly divorced from ledgers and budgets and building estimates, and wholly in terms of spiritual experience and of the lives of men and women.

The future, I believe, holds the greatest missionary test that has yet come to our American church. We have built in China a vast enterprise. It has been reared largely according to our plans and largely under our authority. What has been "ours" has now, overnight, become "theirs." A new type of consecration will be required of the highly endowed Christians of the West to support work which is no longer chiefly an expression of our own ideas and an extension of our own plans. In the past there has been little self-effacement in that support. Our names, so to speak, have been blazoned above our schools and churches and over our compound gates.

Chinese inscriptions are, now, very largely supplanting these marks of our control. It is a purely academic question to discuss whether or not, for such a step, "the time is ripe." The step has been forced by agencies beyond our authority. It only remains for us to determine whether, in going to China, our primary purpose was to propagate our own peculiar institutions and interpretations or to propagate Christianity, itself. If the former is the case, our money will be withdrawn when our names disappear from the inscriptions and our missionary representatives leave. If the latter is the case we will continue, even though anonymously so far as control is concerned to sacrifice on behalf of those Chinese who just now throughout the entire country, are enduring prosecution and facing death because in them there is the faith which was in Christ, himself.—World Neighbors.

of Brother and Sister Taylor. These people did everything to make a person feel at home. Quite frequently we had meals out with other members and friends of the church. The word OUT seems out of place because there was usually too much of a meal within. Sometimes just before preaching scarcely could the speaker breathe naturally. All in all the three weeks were enjoyably and we trust profitably spent.

Seldom does the evangelist receive such cooperation from the pastor. Brother Adams was always very solicitous of making the meeting a success. Much of the victory, where there was any victory, belongs to the pastor.

A large and a very impressive Communion service was observed on Monday evening, which climaxed our efforts at this place. We close, bespeaking for these people a great blessing and future as the result of deep consecration in the service of our Lord and Master.

WEST KITTANNING, PENNSYLVANIA

It has been a long time since the Evangelist Family has read about the work in West Kittanning. We have just recently closed our revival which lasted three weeks, Rev. Joseph L. Gingrich of Johnstown being the evangelist. These three weeks were truly weeks of refreshing and blessing. Brother Gingrich was untiring in his efforts to bring souls to Christ. God greatly blessed his efforts, thirty-eight souls accepted Christ as their Savior, while three renewed their vows. We rejoice that the Word of God is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. We give God all the glory for that which our eyes have seen and our ears heard. Of the above number 26 have been baptized and entered the church, while others are awaiting baptism.

Our meetings were well attended, and on several occasions the church was filled to overflowing. Truly the harvest is great. The writer greatly enjoyed the fellowship and continued helpfulness received from Brother Gingrich. He will long be remembered by the people of West Kittanning, and God is not unmindful of his labor of love. The church as a whole was greatly strengthened by the unfolding of the Word and the presenting of God's claim upon our life, our time and our talents.

On Monday night, April 29th, we held our Communion service. It was the largest communion service ever held here. There were ninety (90) seated at the tables. We were glad to have Brother Gingrich assist during this service.

Our Sunday school is growing, our record attendance was reached on Easter Sunday when 262 were present. Our Endeavorers are growing, especially the Juniors and Intermediates. Here we have a great opportunity of working with those who will be our church workers of the future. We ask that you pray for us, that we may be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

SAMUEL J. ADAMS.

WEST KITTANNING, PENNSYLVANIA

The author of this article was called to assist in an evangelistic meeting and a revival meeting at the above mentioned place. The invitation was accepted when the Third Brethren church of Johnstown allowed their pastor three weeks' absence. The meeting commenced on Monday, April the 8th, and continued until Sunday night, April the 28th. We are persuaded that the effort resulted largely in a real revival rather than an evangelistic campaign, although we are not discouraged at the numerical results.

The pastor, Samuel Adams, had everything in readiness. Much prayer, preparation, and publicity preceded the meeting. The people were very loyal from the first night. At no service was there a small audience. The presence of visitors from other churches was quite noticeable and greatly appreciated. This afforded an opportunity to sell Brethrenism. We took advantage of the opportunity.

The weather was not what we naturally desired, yet proved no barrier. In all the three weeks we had but three nice nights. more than once we remarked, "The Lord knew this was a Brethren revival and the people were not afraid of water."

Despite the counter attractions and discouraging features that always appear we have many reasons for feeling grateful. The Lord was on our side, the Devil was on the run, and that always spells victory. The evangelist seldom sees people laboring under such deep convictions and yet not surrendering. There is keen competition and rivalry between the whole Gospel church, the Brethren, and those of other persuasions. We venture the assertion the Gospel will win, and there is a great future for Brethrenism at this place. The Church of the Brethren and their pastor were very congenial as fellow-servants and worshippers, for which we are greatly pleased.

This writer feels that the West Kittanning Brethren church scarcely realizes what she could accomplish if she would only assert her self. With a church building free of debt and a consecrated pastor, and a large membership the church should be self-supporting and possessing great visions for the morrow. One thing sadly lacking in West Kittanning is a home for the pastor and family. Every church, if possible, should own their own parsonage. We might suggest that these people establish this as their goal.

There are many things of interest which we might enumerate, but space and time do not permit. The people have treated the evangelist with all due consideration. The writer was capably entertained in the home

ALLEN TOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

May 12th being Mothers' Day the Sunday school was given over to the women. The places of officers and teachers were filled by mothers and young women. The regular lesson of the day was first, a fitting program of music, both vocal and instrumental, as well as several recitations were given by the girls. The church services followed. Brother Christiansen preached a splendid preparatory sermon for the communion service which was held in the evening.

Communion service began at 7 o'clock. It was a blessed time of communion and fellowship with our Heavenly Father. There were 52 members present. Each member was made to feel the sacredness and solemnity of the occasion. Lack of knowledge of the sacred ordinances cannot be blamed on the pastor, who so faithfully tries to teach us to observe all things.

CANTON, OHIO

On Sunday, May 5th, the Brethren of Canton, Ohio held their second annual memorial celebration of the dedication of the new church house. A rather intensive effort was put forth to make the event a record breaker. All friends and former members whose addresses were known, received urgent invitations to be present. The efforts were richly rewarded by unusually large attended services through the entire day. The Sunday school "broke" all former records by an attendance of 415 and an offering of $165 and some cents. Then of course the morning preaching service was accordingly very largely attended. The auditorium was full and many people occupied the side class rooms.

Dr. Beal was at his best, and preached a heart-searching message on the subject, "What if they Had Quit?" There was a deep spirit of worship through the entire sermon.

At the noon hour dinner was served in the basement, as many came with well filled baskets.

At 2:30 P. M. a fellowship service was held, at which time short talks were made by representatives of the various departments of the church. Then at 4:30 P. M. a vesper service was held, conducted by the Christian Endeavor society.

The vesper service concluded the program of the day. And everybody went home rejoicing because of the fellowship, good will and blessings the day's service and worship had brought forth. The entire day, from the very first to the very last, was a day long to be remembered by the Brethren of Canton.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE TAKES A VACATION

By Paula Revere

One day a doctor turned his big spectacles my way and rumbled: "It is imperative that you have absolute rest and a change of scene. Go to the country!" It wasn't the first time I'd had such orders (unobeyed), so I merely remarked, as usual, that it was hard for me to get away from all the church work for more than a week or two.

"Week or two!" he exploded. "Count on a year, maybe more, little lady, to repair the ruin this high-pressure parsonessing has wrought upon your outraged nerves and long-suffering body. How'd the S. P. C. A. ever let you get into this fix? Aren't ministers' wives included in their ministrations?"

"A year!" I gasped. Preachers' wives do not take vacations of that length of time unless—they cross the "Dark River."

That night, when the busy, bustling world I knew and loved had quieted until I could hear the moaning of the sea, which was restless too, I pondered some long, long thoughts. At first I was almost willing to die right then and there if I could get it over quickly and quietly and have a chance to rest, for, oh, how deadly tired I was!

But after all, I didn't want to go just yet. Why, there was so much I intended doing, when I had time! Two or three dear-to-my-heart plans that I've kept locked away in the back of my head to yearn over and dream about in rare moments of leisure, usually during the sleepless night hours! Right then I dug out my most cherished ambition, a desire for self-expression in music, verse or story. I fondled it as a bereaved mother does a baby shoe, trying to be resigned.

But it didn't work. The longer I regarded that pet ambition, the less resigned I became. Here I was, half my allotted three-score-and-ten years gone. They had taken my health with them, and what had I to show for all my hard work? I had loved my job, it seemed. Not wisely but too well! Now I must pay, but not with my life! Oh, no! Like king Hezekiah, I prayed and wept sore.

Suddenly I remembered about his fifteen years and prayed harder. One could do a great deal in that length of time if she tried. Good! I'd begin trying to help the Lord answer my prayer right away. Though my life-blood was at low ebb, it was there! Though my nerves had gone to pieces my "nerve" was still with me, and the right of way to the ear of my Maker. Starting then and there, I tried to think constructively.

For years we had lived in a city so large and so "beautiful for situation" that an envious and unbelieving world comes to gaze, and, ever after, speaks of what it saw in hushed tones, and with misty, reminiscent eyes. So rich in historic and scenic interest is that thousands of adopted artists, musicians and writers have won world renown through the inspiration of its treasures; yet so circumscribed was my life, so relentless the daily grind, that only when friends from outside came and demanded to be piloted about, did I catch glimpses of these glories. Long had I promised myself that I would take a few days off, "some time" and get acquainted with my home town.

Well, it looked as if I might get that few days off. Why spend it in the country, even if we could have afforded it, which we could not. The antidote for fatigue poison is rest and change. Couldn't I find this alluring cure without breaking up our home?

I had caught glimpses of a little sheltered valley, loved of the sun, appealing in its suburban remoteness, yet within ten minutes of the down-town business center and fifteen, at most, from our church. Suddenly a mental croup of that quiet vale flashed across my restless spirit. It was like a cool hand on a fevered brow. I had an inspiration. Why not move over there! The very thought was so revolutionary it fairly took my breath at first. The manse was "joined hard to the synagogue," literally, and so was I—so hard that I hadn't thought it possible either of us ever could be pried loose.

But I was; and after I had gotten control of my mind so that I could make it stay with me, where it belonged and keep away from that parish work, I began to improve. When I could walk again, I ventured into the blessed sunshine, strolled about the quiet streets and lanes, enjoying the new faces and scenes. Nobody paid any attention to me, an amusing novelty, nor required conversation of me, a welcome relief. Soon I could climb a little hill where for hours I sat and dreamed. Sometimes, like that much-quoted mountaineer, I "jes' set." Long, blessed, uninterrupted hours! Folded hands!

But my hands couldn't stay folded. I ventured further afield, poking into all sorts of interesting places—browsing in libraries, loafing in hotel corridors, rest-rooms, ferry-boats,—just resting and studying folks. Sometimes I go down to the sea to sympathize with it for not being able to cut loose from its moorings as I did.

Never will I be permitted to take up the lines of work I laid down, but it isn't necessary. Others are doing that, and I have found many other wonderfully interesting things to do. That in itself is a change, a rest. I was not a little surprised, yes, hurt at first, to see how easily they could get along without me.

But I didn't leave home, simply took home along with me, just around the corner. I feel better in every way than for years, and I know that if the dear Lord is as good to me as he was to Hezekiah, I'll likely put through some pet plans, because of my home-made rest cure, the best kind of ail.—Christian Herald.

TWELVE REASONS FOR THE CHURCH SCHOOL

1. The founding of our government was upon the cornerstone of education which the church school conserves. Of the first 109 colleges in America, 105 were established and maintained by the church.

2. Our ideals of civilization are Christian. They must continue to be Christian. The mind of youth is the most susceptible mind in the world. The church needs to see this, and strengthen its power by fortifying its schools.

3. The church school emphasizes spiritual values which are leaven to life. Where it does so in fullness, life profits and prospers.

4. It is justified by its fruits. In every realm of research, every avenue of life, every philanthropic undertaking, the church school lives in power through men and women who have learned in its halls.

5. It is the unflinching fountain for the Christianizing of foreign lands. If the roster of Christian missionary service were deleted of those from the church school, little would be left.

6. It is potential in formulating thought and opinion. It stands for soundness in modern scholarship, but is opposed to the spirit or manifestation of undesirable radicalism.

7. It is free from the domination of political contention and untouched by private interest. It exists for the education of youth, the challenge to men and the glory of God.

8. Never does it lose sight of moral and religious values. The two are the ballast that holds it steady and keeps it off the rocks.

9. It aims that those who sit in its chairs of instruction shall have learned light and love and life at the feet of the Great Teacher.

10. It takes young men and women fearlessly into the mazes of modern research, while it manifests clearly that the loftiest thought of the ages is Christian; that the best life is that which is hid with Christ in God.

11. It offers the privilege of enduring investments in life service and achievements. The Lord's money invested in the church school pays unflinching dividends, and bears rich reward through safeguarding the democracy of oncoming generations.

12. Through its triune service to body, mind and spirit of youth, the church school strikes clearly and without muffling, its full, positive note in modern education.—(With acknowledgments to "Christian Education.")

Sighing for advantages which we do not have sometimes means lack of appreciation of those we do have.

THE MESSAGE OF THE BRETHREN MINISTRY

The Message which Brethren Ministers accept as a Divine Entrustment to be heralded to a lost world, finds its sole source and authority in the Bible. This message is one of Hope for a lost world and speaks with finality and authority. Fidelity to the apostolic injunction to preach the Word demands our utmost endeavor of mind and heart. We the Members of the National Ministerial Association of the Brethren Church, hold that the essential and constituent elements of our Message shall continue to be the following declarations:

1. Our Motto: The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible.

2. The Authority and Integrity of the Holy Scriptures. The Ministry of the Brethren Church desires to bear testimony to the belief that God's supreme revelation has been made through Jesus Christ, a complete and authentic record of which revelation is the New Testament; and, to the belief that the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testaments, as originally given, is the infallible record of the perfect, final and authoritative revelation of God's will, altogether sufficient in themselves, as a rule of faith and practice.

3. We Understand the Basic Content of Our Doctrinal Preaching and Teaching to Be:

- (1) The Pre-existence, Deity, and Incarnation by Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ, the Son of God;
- (2) The Fall of Man, his consequent spiritual death and utter sinfulness, and the necessity of his New Birth;
- (3) The Vicarious Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ through the shedding of His Own Blood;
- (4) The Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ in the body in which He suffered and died and His subsequent Glorification at the Right Hand of God;
- (5) Justification by personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, of which obedience to the will of God and works of righteousness are the evidence and result; the resurrection of the dead, the judgment of the world, and the life everlasting of the just;
- (6) The Personality and Deity of the Holy Spirit Who indwells the Christian and is his Comforter and Guide;
- (7) The Personal and Visible Return of our Lord Jesus Christ from Heaven as King of Kings and Lord of Lords: the glorious goal for which we are taught to watch, wait, and pray;
- (8) The Christian should "be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of the mind," should not engage in carnal strife and should "swear not at all";
- (9) The Christian should observe, as his duty and privilege, the ordinances of our Lord Jesus Christ, among which are (a) baptism of believers by Trine Immersion; (b) confirmation; (c) the Lord's Supper; (d) the Communion of the Bread and Wine; (e) the washing of the saints' feet, and (f) the anointing of the sick with oil.

TRADING OFF HIS SECOND BEST

By Flora Swetnam

"Mother," Harold came dashing in, "Roy and Jim are going out to the farm this afternoon! May I go with them?"

"If nothing happens," his mother said, "but you must get your work done first."

"There's nothing to do but sweep the yard, and it doesn't need sweeping so very much. Can't I wait till tomorrow?"

"You told your grandpa you were going to be a good business man. A good business man does not put off things."

"O, pshaw!" he grumbled. "I just hate to work all the time."

He went to work on the yard, but he did not do his best. He left corners unswept. He raked the leaves and papers into a pile and did not burn them. He thought his mother would not notice. She did notice but thought best to wait till later to talk to him about it. Just as he was ready to sit down to dinner Roy came to say that they were not going out to the farm till tomorrow but Harold could go then.

This gave Harold a chance to do a better job on the yard, but his mother did not say a word about it. He did not feel just right, but he hated sweeping. He let it go as it was.

The next morning he found that the wind had been blowing in the night. Those leaves and papers were all scattered again. He looked at them and felt ashamed. And there came the boys to get him to go to the farm with them.

"Harold has his work to do," said his mother.

"But, mother, I swept yesterday."

"Did you do your best?" asked his mother.

Harold hung his head. "Not—not—quite just my best," he said. "I—guess it was my second best."

"Please let him go," begged Roy, "and I'll help him with it this afternoon."

"But—but I was going on a trip with grandpa this afternoon, and"—

"I'll let you have your choice which trip you will miss," his mother told him, "but you will have to miss one for not doing your best."

"Mrs. Waldron," said Roy, "if you'll let him go this time, he will sign a written promise to do his best after this. Won't you, Hal?"

Harold thought a minute. "Yes," he answered.

"All right," his mother agreed. "I'll have it all written up when you get back. Each of you other boys can sign as a witness." "Sure!" they cried.

So Harold ran off with Roy and Jim. He was sure he was going to have a good time, but he kept thinking of that second best work and hoping grandpa would not happen around and see that yard.

When he came back his mother had the promise all ready for him to sign. He looked at it and read: "I promise never to do any kind of work but my very best."

"Whew!" he whistled. "Do you reckon I can keep it?"

"You know what you'll be if you don't keep it," grinned Roy.

"I know what I'll be if I don't sign it," said Harold as he dipped his pen into the ink.

He signed his name, and then Jim placed his below as a witness, and Roy added his.

"Mother's got me tied for life," Harold said as he looked at it.

"That was a good trade," laughed Roy as he and Jim started for home.

Harold was glad when he found that grandpa would not be starting until two o'clock. He went to work and made that yard shine.

"My," said grandpa when he came, "you're making things look nice around here!"

"I'm going to keep 'em that way, grandpa. I've traded off my second best."

"Good!" smiled grandpa. "What did you get for it?"

"My best," said Harold proudly.—Evangelical Messenger, Columbia, S. C.

A Memorial of Sacrifice

was demonstrated to the world's awful sorrow in the Great War. The bitterness and bloodshed was directly the result of the selfish way of life. And if there is one lesson above another that we need to learn, and one that this Memorial Day brings to our attention, it is the great advantage of sacrifice as the governing principle of conduct in corporate as well as individual life. Every man needs a greater appreciation of that principle, and every nation, ours as much as any other. Selfish nationalism is not in keeping with that principle, whether it expresses itself in "Germany over all" or in "America First."

Sacrifice, not selfishness, is the dominant word in our minds as we contemplate the nation's honored dead. "We dare not trample and desecrate their blood by setting out to make selfishness the ruling principle of our life." Increasingly the spirit of service and sacrifice is being recognized as the vital principle of the life that has true and abiding worth. And it certainly is crowned with the approval of Jesus, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many. "I am among you as he that serveth," said Jesus, and on the cross he sealed the truth that he taught his disciples, "that he that loseth his life shall save it unto life eternal."

The Way to the Church's Larger Future Leads through the Portals of Ashland College

Educational Week is well observed (1) when there is a public address or sermon on the needs of education that accords with Christianity, (2) when this is applied to our own situation, and (3) when an offering is taken for Ashland College and Seminary.

The offerings for the past five years average $3,021.00

The largest yearly gift was five years ago, a bit over $5,000.

In making our average this year, that must be dropped and this year's gift added. Hence, to keep the average up this year we must have $5,000.

We may count in our endowment, $300,000 of permanent funds. The rest of the total minimum of $550,000, or $250,000, must be Living Endowment. This must come from a permanent source. This source as far as Ashland is concerned is no other than the Brethren Church. Hence, the need of $5,000 for Educational Day.

The Board of Trustees approves and urges it.

We expect to ask for admission to our regional standardizing agency before Thanksgiving. We must have the $5,000 by that time.

Three Ohio colleges have had all recognition removed by certain important agencies. We must meet the demands or our college has no future.

Let these facts face us during Educational Week.

A VOICE from the Skies.

There is no privacy any more. A few days back, while sitting in my study out in West Hollywood where one seldom hears any disturbing noise except the chattering of the mocking-birds, there came distinctly through the open windows a stentorian voice advertising the merits of a particular gasoline. I looked out the window, but the street was empty. Still the voice continued, growing louder. And then I discovered its source—an airplane several thousand feet high, fitted with a loud speaker, was flying back and forth over the city. I tried closing the windows and doors. It was no use. The voice came through with startling clearness, every word distinct inside the house.

I was like the Wedding-guest in the "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" who sat upon a stone and could not "choose but hear."

As I listened, rather unwillingly, there came to mind a prophecy written by the Apostle John, "And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, 'Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound.'" (Rev. 8: 13). Thus God will some day announce his dreadful judgments upon a rebellious world which has rejected his Grace. And it may be soon.

TOO much for Paris

Paris has always been regarded as highly sophisticated in the various kinds of wickedness. But it seems now that the films of Hollywood have become too degenerate even for the hardened Parisians. An organization has been formed and posters have been circulated throughout the French capital, calling upon Frenchmen everywhere to "preserve French youth" from the contaminating influence of American pictures. We shall hope that this campaign will spread to our own country. It is needed here.

MAN'S Pathetic Protest against Death

That cartoonist who draws daily the amusing adventures of Andy Gump, over which some of us have had many a hearty laugh, has done something rather unusual for a professional humorist. He has let one of his characters die. It was a daring thing to do—introducing the tragedy of Death into a comic strip! There is nothing amusing about Death. One wonders what the artist's motive could have been. Perhaps he was interested to know how the public would react to such a situation.

At any rate, the public reaction here in Los Angeles has been very interesting. Different people wrote letters to the Editor protesting against the action of the cartoonist in letting poor Mary Carr die. And they did it seriously! They argued that he should have had Mary recover from her sickness, and marry Tom, and then live happily ever afterward.

Now all this may seem to be a very trivial thing to be writing about, but beneath the surface there is an impressive meaning: Men are powerless to shut Death out of actual human experience. He comes unbidden to our feasts and turns our laughter into tragedy. And so men, in the realm of their imagination, like to fence off a bit of experience into which Death cannot come. It is man's unuttered protest against Death. Powerless against the "Last Enemy" in actual experience, man creates a world of "make-believe" into which he can withdraw for a little while and there forget his own impotence.

This is the reason why most of us like to have the story in the book come to a happy ending. This is why people protested bitterly against the death of the fictitious "Mary Carr." She belonged to their world of "Make-believe," and in that world people may have adventures, but they are not supposed to die. It is all rather pitiful—man's attempt for a brief moment to forget the presence of the "Last Enemy."

But this deep yearning of the human heart will some day be realized. We shall have a world into which death cannot enter, an actual world, not a world of "make-believe." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth . . . and Death shall be no more: neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more." (Rev. 21:1-4).

And don't forget it—that coming blessed world has been made possible by the work of Christ. He died for sinners in order that Death might be destroyed. He rose from the dead that "life and immortality" might be brought to light.

35. What is meant by "sanctification," as in John 17:17? Mrs. S.

The verse in John reads thus,—"Sanctify them in the truth; thy word is truth." The same verb occurs again in verse 19. The verb occurs about twenty-eight times in the New Testament. It is rendered into English by the term "hallowed be" as in the Pater Noster. See Matt. 6:9 and Luke 11:2. Also in Rev. 22:11 it is translated by the phrase "let be holy." Elsewhere it is rendered by some form of the verb "to sanctify." The same root gives us the adjective which is always translated into English by our adjective "holy" or when used personally, that is with the definite article, "saints." From this of course it is readily seen that "saints" are "the holy" (ones). This adjective form of the Greek word occurs perhaps more than two hundred times. We also have two noun forms occurring four times and translated in each instance by "holiness." The New Testament forms of this word find their root in the Septuagint. The classical root is a word meaning in general "religious awe," and as a verb "to reverence" or "respect." From these meanings it was an easy passage to the New Testament usage of the forms employed, namely, first "dedicated to the deity." Hence "holy, pure, sacred." And the verb means "to make holy, to consecrate, to sanctify." With these meanings of the word we may readily perceive its meanings in the several passages. Take the idea of holiness which is in the word when it refers to God and we see it transferred to the vessels used in his service, to the ministers of his service, to the places of such service and so on. Since God is holy that characteristic is imputed to those who are his children. Primarily then it means dedicated, consecrated, set apart to God's service or use. The quality which is transferred to the person or thing by imputation at the first becomes an acquired characteristic. The particular meaning in any passage must be determined by the passage itself and its context. In John 17:17 "to sanctify" clearly means to set apart to, or to dedicate to, the divine vocation. Even where it means "to make holy" we can not insist upon an absolute holiness being transferred to an individual who does not possess it. That were a mere fiction and certain to lead to deception on the part of the claimant. God only is absolutely holy. If we remember this there could be no serious objection to rendering the verb everywhere "to make holy" because the person or thing belongs to God who is holy.

Suffering is not always penalty. It may mean discipline for service, or even service itself. There is a sacred chalice pressed to the lips of love that selfishness can never know, and which makes suffering, at times, a very sacrament. However Satan may transform himself into an Angel of Light to tempt men, he has never appeared to them on the Cross. The nails and the crown of thorns have no attraction to anti-Christ. It is only the Good Shepherd that lays down his life for the sheep.

The power to suffer is measured by the power of love. It is found at its best in God himself. Incapacity to suffer means an abnormal, an undeveloped nature. It needed a Being perfect in pity, in compassion, in forbearance, in love to so love the world as to give his only begotten Son to save sinners.—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Office and Qualifications of Deacon

Recent inquiries about the qualifications and office of the deacon have impressed us with the need of some definite instruction along this line. Possibly this important phase of our church's organization has been too much neglected in our discussions. And it may be that this is an indication of a weakness that quite widely characterizes the leadership of our local churches. Office holders in the church are too generally left uninstructed regarding their duties, or undirected or unencouraged in their work. Not infrequently the inactivity of those set apart to leadership in various functions and departments of the local church is due to the fact that the importance and duties of their office have not been stressed. The overseers of the congregation have no right to scold or complain about the indifference and inactivity of their office holders, if no attention has been given to their work and no instruction given regarding the responsibilities resting upon them. And of all the local officials, outside the elder or elders in charge, none occupies a position quite so important to the well-ordered congregation, nor quite so essential to its spirituality and harmony as the deacon. Concerning the duties and qualifications for this office we have not far to seek for information, for it, like the ministry, is ordained and characterized by the Word of God.

The duties of the deacon are such as to make him primarily an assistant to the minister. It was to relieve the apostles and preachers of the Word of certain details connected with the distribution of charities that the office was established and deacons chosen and ordained in the apostolic congregation. This is set forth in the first six verses of the sixth chapter of Acts. But that their duties were not confined to the care of the needy is evident by the action of Stephen and Philip, who forthwith began to bear effective testimony to the power of God as manifested in Jesus Christ, Stephen becoming the first martyr of the Gospel and Philip the first preacher of the Apostolic church in Samaria. The duties of the deacons, therefore, dealt with the spiritual as well as with the material interests of the congregation, having charge of the collection and distribution of gifts for the poor so that the apostles need not be deterred from giving their whole time to their spiritual labors, and being charged with preparing the tables for their common meals, and also, as they had opportunity, engaging in teaching and preaching concerning Jesus.

About the most complete and yet concise statement we have read of the entire office work of the deacon is found in the ordination service of the Mennonite "Minister's Manual," which takes an almost exact parallel position on the work of the deacon to that historically held by the Brethren. In giving the charge to the person being ordained to the deaconship, the Mennonites say, in part, "It will now be your duty to receive, and take care of, the charities of the church, to distribute them to the needy members, according to their necessities; to visit the sick, the widows and the orphans, and comfort them and pray with them in their afflictions; also to assist the bishop in the administration of baptism, and the Lord's Supper; to bear testimony to the truth in their public ministrations, and when, from any reason no minister is present where the people meet for public worship, it will be your duty to conduct the services, by reading, exhortation and prayer. When strife or difficulties arise in the church, or between brethren and sisters, it will be your duties to use your utmost endeavors to bring about a reconciliation and restore unity and peace." Such a statement follows very closely all that we are able to learn from the Word concerning the office work of the deacon, as instituted and practiced by the apostolic church.

Now, the person who would enter the deaconship must have certain outstanding qualifications consistent with the high character of the office. At this point the Word of God is very specific. A careful reading of Acts 6:1-6 and of 1 Timothy 3:8-13 will give one an understanding of the nobility, blamelessness, strength and spirituality required of the deacon, and the personal qualifications for the deaconess are just as high as those for the deacon.

According to Acts 6:3, the deacon is to be a man of "honest" or "good report." He is to be a man of good reputation, and of good reputation as a Christian. He is to be one who has sought to follow the admonition of the Lord Jesus, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The church has a right to look to the reputation of its office holders. It would be foolish to place in positions of high spiritual responsibility men who had lived carelessly before men and had not built for themselves good and honorable reputations as Christians. That good reputation concerns the home life. The deacon must be known as a Christian in his home life. He must be honest, chaste, faithful as a husband and successful as a father and head of his house, building a Christian spirit into his home, teaching the members thereof in the law of the Lord, directing them to walk in Christian ways, and establishing them in the habit of daily worship. The church is powerless when its members are prayerless and when there is no distinctly Christian atmosphere in the home, and if the deacon's home is of that prayerless type, where can we expect to find prayer?

That good reputation is to be had also in the daily life, as one mingles among his fellowmen, in shop and factory, in office and counting house, in the professions and in social intercourse—everywhere that we meet men. The deacon must have a reputation for endeavoring to live the Christian life in the world. He must be "serious minded," not a "talebearer," nor "addicted to drink or pilfering." (See 1 Tim. 3:8.) He must never forget that he is a leader among those who are the "called out" ones from the world. And if the church needs one thing today more than another it is a complete renunciation of that worldliness and carnality that is holding it down to the earth and devaluing its life. The world is unconsciously seeking that saving and keeping power that we profess to have found in the religion of Jesus Christ, but it will have only scorn for our profession unless it sees improvement in our lives. The church member who is compromising with evil in any manner is a stumbling block to the world and a hindrance to the church, as well as an offense to Christ. As the Lord commanded the Jews standing before the grave of Lazarus to take away the stone that he might call forth the dead to life again, so is he calling upon the professing Christians now, challenging them to take away the stones of inconsistency that make them one with the worldly, irreverent crowd, that he may speak through them to the calling of dead souls to life eternal. And may we not expect the church's spiritual leaders to take the lead in this regard?

And the deacon should have a reputation of love for and loyalty to the church. He should have a keen appreciation of its immeasurable value and be among the first to give and to serve and to sacrifice for it. There is much carping criticism abroad in the world against the church, criticism that is both foolish and vicious, and calculated to lessen men's respect for it, if not to break their attachment to it. The way such criticism reacts upon the average member depends in no small way upon the attitude of the church's spiritual leaders towards it. If they still maintain that the church is of God and is the noblest institution in the world and is destined finally to triumph against every foe, the rank and file of the membership will follow their lead. The deacon should therefore hold steady in his allegiance to the church. He should also have a strong faith in its message and in the importance of communicating its truth unadulterated and with all its quickening power to the world. He should have a relish for spiritual things and be able to enjoy himself in the intensely spiritual atmosphere of the prayer meeting and of the communion service. He must guard against the ever-present tendency to lose his keenness for the things of God, to grow lukewarm about frequent church attendance, and to cease to feel his need of regular periods of divine worship. The attitude he takes toward these things will have much to do with the church's influence upon the community, as well as with the community's confidence in his leadership. If he is to be of the greatest service to the church and the kingdom in his responsible position, he must so conduct himself toward the church and spiritual things that he is able to build for himself a good reputation for loyalty and love for it.

The apostles required that those who should be chosen for the office of deacon should not only be men of good repute, but also be filled with the Holy Spirit. The necessity of such a qualification is so evident that it needs no argument. It would be utter folly for them to attempt the great work to which they were called without the empowerment and guidance of God's Spirit. But if they had not become used to the presence and guidance of the Spirit during their days of common service, they would not have known how to have accommodated themselves to his leadership in this special work. And it is not only the deacon who needs the Spirit's infilling today, but the layman as well. But only such men as are Spirit-filled are qualified for the deaconship.

The third requirement for the deaconship, according to the apostles (Acts 6:3), is that he shall be a man of wisdom. It takes a good mind to be a successful leader in the church of Christ, to lead the people into the deep things of God and to administer the ordinances. The church of the living God is the biggest work in the world and requires the best leadership of every community, if it is to do its best. Mere piety and good reputation are not enough in themselves to make a worthy leadership, it takes mental strength as well. We would not be misunderstood—we do not advocate an intellectual aristocracy within the church; there is a place within its service for men of every calibre. But the next to the highest place in the officary of the local church calls for good minds, for men who are wise and capable, who know how to work tactfully with men and how to divide aright the Word of truth.

A man of wisdom is one who can see ahead, a man of vision. A deacon should have that faculty, for the church needs vision. Lack of vision is often a church's greatest handicap and most

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

Brother Albert Lantz, pastor of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania, writes that the church is very much alive and that the Lord is blessing the preaching of the Word. He announces communion service for June 2.

Brother Sylvester Lowman and Brother W. H. Schaffer, pastors of Portis and Hamlin churches respectively, tell of the enjoyable time they had exchanging work. Both these Kansas churches are going good, each under the direction of a most enthusiastic worker.

Christian Endeavorers will find a report this week from the splendid society at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. Also the Ohio young people are having their attention directed by Miss Helen Garber, our Ohio Secretary, to the Ohio convention to be held at Dayton, June 25-28. Let's Go!

Sister Mary Pence reports two additions to the church at Limestone, Tennessee. Their new pastor, Brother M. D. Early, has been making occasional preaching visits from Lost Creek, Kentucky. After a visit to California during the summer, Rev. and Mrs. Early will return and locate on the field.

Brother George E. Cone, pastor of the church at Milledgeville, Illinois, reports several confessions, four of whom have been baptized, and others await the rite. The pastor continues his faithful effort to instruct the young people of his congregation. He is called for the fifth year as pastor.

According to word from Brethren Sibert and Owen the recent meeting following the dedication of the new church at Ellet, Ohio, resulted in about twenty converts. Brother B. F. Owen was the evangelist, and also had charge of the dedicatory services. Brother Floyd Sibert, the pastor, promises us a report of the dedication and the campaign following.

The editor recently had the privilege of visiting the congregation at Fremont, Ohio, preaching for them in the morning and assisting in the ordination of three deacons and three deaconesses. These new pastoral assistants should mean a distinct advance in the spiritual life of this church, which, under the capable leadership of Brother W. S. Crick, has much reason for encouragement.

Brother A. L. Lynn is being kept busy in evangelistic work among the churches of Southern California, but he has not neglected his own charge, the La Verne church. During the meeting there, there were forty decisions. Seventeen had been baptized at the time of the report. The church is moving forward in a splendid manner under his efficient ministry.

See the Sunday school page this week for the announcement and information regarding the Shipshewana Young People's Camp, July 7 to 14. Professor Stuckey assures us that the prospects are good for the largest and most successful camp yet conducted. It is a great opportunity, not limited to Indiana folks but open to all the young people who are able to make the distance.

The church at New Lebanon, Ohio, under the wide-awake leadership of Brother L. V. King, is pressing forward with the purpose in mind of enlarging their present church edifice so as to care for their growing Sunday school. They recently celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the organization of the church with Dr. Martin Shively, the organizer, present as the special speaker of the day.

A most encouraging report comes from the Third Church of Philadelphia, where Brother W. A. Steffler is the energetic pastor. As a result of the continuous revival spirit in this congregation the pastor has baptized sixty and received into membership fifty-three since taking up the work last September. The total membership stands at 112, which indicates a remarkable growth in recent months. The outlook is most encouraging.

The Ashland, Ohio, church of which Dr. Charles A. Bame is pastor, recently celebrated the third anniversary of the dedication of their new church home. Dr. W. S. Bell was the special speaker for the morning service, the pastor preaching the sermon at the afternoon meeting, which concluded the program of the day. Dr. Bell had charge of the financial appeal at both services, and while we do not have any definite figures to announce, we understand the congregation responded very well in the renewal of its pledges.

We have two letters this week from our African missionaries: one from Dr. Gribble, and one from Mrs. Sheldon, who reports further concerning their homeward trip. Dr. Gribble seems to think the situation at Yaloke is somewhat more encouraging than formerly, though there is yet much to be desired, which prayer and patience are likely to bring about. It is a matter of thanksgiving that the other two stations have not been affected by the uprising.

According to a recent announcement, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., made a gift of $300,000 to the Oberlin College School of Theology, for the purpose of erecting new buildings to take the place of old ones. Wouldn't it be fine if some young miniature Rockefeller (financially speaking) would make Ashland College and Seminary a really big Endowment and Building gift? Perhaps if we keep persistently teaching and advocating the idea, it will be realized some day. But if not, we can be assured that our school will be supported by the small gifts of the many. And that is better.

The church at Washington, D. C. is going forward steadily. Eleven additions to the church membership have been registered since the first of the year, these having come at the regular services. The Sunday school is overflowing the basement, 291 having been crowded in on Mothers' Day. It is very plain that this church needs badly the completion of its building. Brother Homer A. Kent and his capable help-meet are doing a splendid work here. The pastor has been retained for the fifth year of service.

An Educational Day Message to Pastors and Church Leaders

By George T. Ronk, President Board of Trustees of Ashland College

For years we have heard rumblings of disaster to our beloved College. In fact we have heard them so long that, like the cry of "Wolf, wolf," they have become meaningless to us. However, now that the heat of battle is lessened somewhat and the high mark of crisis passed, temporarily at least, I am making this statement:

Our church has been passing through the greatest crises of its history and it is only by extraordinary, emergency measures our College and Theological School have been preserved.

"Why just now," you will ask, "after all these years of effort; after this great increase in endowment and student body, should things be more critical than in the past?"

In answer I will say it is due solely to external pressure on the College from rating agencies, due to the great modern passion for standardization. After years of worrying, we have finally been faced this year with what amounts to an ultimatum—we can not longer run Ashland College as in the past, without meeting the demands of these standardizing agencies, including the Department of Public Instruction of Ohio. It is plain to see that if we had our recognition reduced, in time there would be no College and no Theological School, and without a Theological School, there would be no preachers, without preachers no church.

Let us face the truth: Two timely achievements, only, make possible the continuation of the college with unimpaired standing:

1. Success of the Bell endowment campaign in securing endowment notes, which is a limited factor, due to the fact that the rating agencies would not accept endowment notes signed by the richest men in the country unless they were backed by collateral security. Our endowment notes are not so secured.

2. Success of Dr. Jacobs in leasing property of the College and in securing acceptable collateral for part of the endowment notes, as a temporary emergency measure, until the notes are paid.

Let us face another truth—The Ashland Endowment Campaign must go on until every individual in the church has done his part. Moreover, makers of notes must use every endeavor to pay these notes in advance of time specified therein, in order to translate this temporary situation into a permanent one.

Demands of Rating Agencies

The radical nature of changes required for the school year beginning next September is shown by the fact that we must have on the Faculty six Ph.D's, whereas previously we have had only one. Lesser degrees than this will no longer count. Bachelor and Master degrees are not acceptable except for assistants. I am sure all will rejoice to know that since the recent Board meeting, due to the extraordinary measures that have been taken and to support from those not members of the church, Dr. Jacobs will be able to meet this condition for the opening of the next school year.

In fact he has received encouragement from officers of the North Central Association and approval for the changes thus far outlined.

Let it be noted, this success is but temporary, based on temporary emergency measures, and can be confirmed and perpetuated only by the churches making good on a financial set-up prepared and approved by the Committee. This set-up calls for approximately $400,000.00 in permanent endowment as of February, 1930, which we now have, a part of which is in outside collateral supporting endowment notes and which will remain on temporary basis until sufficient endowment notes are paid to redeem this collateral.

A part of this set-up calls for approximately $200,000.00 of living endowment. For, strange to say, though the rating agencies will not accept endowment notes, they will accept systematic gifts made by church agencies, established by five years usage and averaging over the period of five years. In other words the income produced for the College by the Women's Missionary Society, National Sunday School Association and the Educational Day Offerings are counted as 5% income on an equivalent capital sum.

Thus, the Women's Missionary Society, giving $2,500.00 yearly, contribute the equivalent of $50,000.00 to this endowment, the National Sunday School Association does likewise. About these two items there are no questions. In other words, we are allowed to count $100,000.00 on the Women's Missionary Society and the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church. The other $100,000.00 required on this living basis must come from the Educational Day Gifts but, unfortunately, in several past years there were very light. Thus in 1925 the amount was $2,948.00; in 1926, $2,116.00; 1927, $1,372.00; 1928, $4,500.00; 1929, we are setting up $12,000.00. Adding these five years' offerings together and dividing by five gives a yearly average of $4,587.00, which is 5% of $91,740.00. In other words, if the Educational Day Offering of 1929 equals $12,000.00 we will be able to count in living endowment $191,740.00, which may be added to approximately $400,000.00 permanent endowment. This will give us a figure somewhat under $600,000.00 total.

The North Central Association of Colleges require $550,000.00 plus for a College with the number of students enrolled at Ashland. This must be net of all debts of the college. Ashland College still owes a small amount on new building program, due to unpaid pledges. It also owes $16,000.00 annually on annuities. These obligations must be offset against the total amount of endowment shown. Therefore it will be seen this financial set-up is adequate for entrance in the North Central Association and for perpetuating Ashland College as a degree conferring institution.

The task of the church is to meet the needs of this Educational Day Offering this year with an amount large enough to bring the five year average up, as shown above. $12,000.00 has been set by the college as an absolute necessity. In order to ease your minds about this burden, note that one-half of this amount has already been provided by gifts to the Educational Board by men who are not members of the Brethren church. Surely when indi-

The Whole Church's Immediate Task

The task of the church is to meet the needs of this Educational Day Offering this year with an amount large enough to bring the five year average up, as shown above. $12,000.00 has been set by the college as an absolute necessity. In order to ease your minds about this burden, note that one-half of this amount has already been provided by gifts to the Educational Board by men who are not members of the Brethren church. viduals belonging to other churches appreciate enough the seriousness of this crisis and think highly enough of our school to do this for us, it is not asking too much for the entire church to contribute $6,000.00 in this Educational Day Offering. I know there is a feeling we have too many offerings. There is also a feeling by certain people that since they have contributed an endowment pledge to the college they should be excused from offerings for this same purpose, but it must be noted these endowment notes signed for the college cannot be counted in the present crisis, unless backed up by acceptable collateral security, and that not enough of the notes have been so guaranteed. That, therefore, the only recourse of the college is to living endowment, in order to furnish the proper capital sum. It also should be noted that every dollar given in this Educational Day Offering counts at twenty times its face value in this living endowment. A gift of five dollars to the Educational Day Offering provides $100.00 of this financial set-up.

This is no time for quibbling! It is no time for exposition! It is time for action! A few men have sweat blood in this great hour of trial to assure the church a college, a Theological Department and a future ministry. Some of these have not even been members of the church. It is a time for every loyal member of the church to come forward and do his best in putting across this Educational Day Offering. Our dollars are multiplied in the Lord's service always but where can you make an offering at a time of great need equivalent to this one, which actually multiplies itself twenty times?

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

A Clarion Call

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D., Ashland College Trustee

If the Brethren church is to live,—to say nothing as to whether she is to grow, she must educate her own ministry. The day of an uneducated ministry is past, simply because the masses are being educated. And, educated masses are not going to gather themselves about an uneducated ministry. This is a simple fact, a discussion of which is useless. The successful minister of today may be self-educated; but, educated he is.

Experience can only teach us the folly of permitting the Presbyterians or the Methodists or the Interdenominationalists educating a "true blue" Brethren ministry. If we are to have a "true blue" Brethren ministry, we must educate them in a "true blue" Brethren College. A Presbyterian College will either make a Presbyterian minister, or it will make a hybrid Presbyterian-Brethren minister. Failing to do either, it will make a spineless, non-theological, wind-jamming Modernist, as many are assuredly doing. The church of God is calling loudly for men of strong convictions. Such is her direst need. The Brethren church must have them, or perish. Wherever the Brethren church is failing, she is failing only because she lacks an educated ministry, inspired with the tremendous conviction that the Brethren church is called of God unto a work worthwhile,—a cause that involves the eternal life or the eternal death of men! Preachers without tremendous convictions never will do a tremendous work for God.

President Jacobs is sending out a clarion call for help at a critical time in the history of Ashland College. The answer to that call will be a test of our faith in the Brethren church as an instrument in the hands of God in this time of great apostasy. Let every church do its bit on "Educational Day." Let no church be dubbed a "slack-er." We must! We can! WE WILL!

Long Beach, California.

The Church's Future Centered in Ashland College

By George F. Kem, Vice-President, Board of Trustees

No doubt a goodly percentage of the members of our church do take time to reflect what our church and Ashland College mean to us. I may suggest here some of the ways in which it comes into our lives in a paramount way whether we are daily conscious of it or not.

We owe to our church the privilege and opportunity of Christian fellowship. The major portion of our inspiration towards higher living, higher thinking, and living better lives come from the Christian fellowship created by our common belief and faith in the teachings, example and divinity of Jesus Christ. We individually owe to our church a very great debt for the strong contributing factor that it is in helping to keep pure the Protestant faith by combatting with every power at its command, the inroads of so-called modernism, and preserving a pure, simple form of worship according to the tenets of the New Testament.

May we suggest that you take again a few moments to reflect what the foregoing factors existing by reason of our church, have contributed and will contribute to the peace of mind, prosperity, happiness, and hope of eternal life, and we feel that the inevitable conclusion would be that if the church and its influence were subtracted from your life, it would be empty indeed.

Now to the point we desire to stress, i. e., that the life and future existence of our church is centered in Ashland College as much as the life and existence of the individual is centered in healthy heart action. If we no longer have a college to produce a trained ministry, church workers and leaders sound in the faith, it does not take a far sighted person to see that our church could no longer go forward, but that the disintegration of our church as a denomination would at once begin with a prediction that in less than two decades this disintegration would be complete.

I would that I could have every one of you know as well as I know, the personal sacrifices, the unremitting toil both physical and mental, the Herculean efforts that have been put forth by President Jacobs and those associated with him on the faculty; by Dr. Bell as Field Representative, and others, to save our college as an educational institution for our church.

The citizens of the city of Ashland, and of Ashland County, have contributed almost as much in permanent endowment, as our church itself, towards the preservation of our institution. I recite this to show that it has the confidence of the people of the community in which it is situated, hence is entitled to the confidence of our church people in a greater degree. The issue is clear; certain minimum requirements must be met this year or Ashland College as a recognized institution of first grade, will no longer exist. If our college fails to meet these requirements and does not qualify as a recognized institution of higher learning, its future is doomed and with it, the future of the church. I herewith recite the minimum requirements:

The minimum total endowment must be . . . . .	$550,000.00
Our present permanent endowment is . . . . .	300,000.00
The Living endowment required is . . . . .	250,000.00

To make this amount, the churches must give this year an Educational Day offering of no less than ..... 5,000.00
 Members of the Brethren church, what shall the answer be? If each church will do its share, there can be no question. THE ISSUE IS UP TO YOU.

Make a Liberal Offering

By N. P. Eglin, Ashland College Trustee

In this article I wish to appeal strongly to the Brethren churches all over the brotherhood, and especially to those of the Mid-west district, to make a liberal offering during Educational week. This is not a matter of sentiment, but one of need that must be met now, if Ashland College is permitted to be a member of the North Central Association of Colleges when the college year begins this coming September, and this must be if Ashland College is to continue to be a success. Some time in the future will not do, for your offering, it must be now.

Let us rally to the support of the splendid, self-sacrificing men who have given the best years of their lives as instructors in the College. To meet the demands there must be more men engaged. This demand can not be evaded; it must be met, so come with a liberal offering, and God's blessing will be yours, and the splendid students may be given the credits they are entitled to.

Pelley's "Seven Minutes in Eternity"

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

Satan, the Prince of the world of evil spirits, is set forth in the inspired volume, as a great fallen spirit, who fell because he sought to supplant God in the universe. He said, "I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: . . . I will be like the Most High." And he had the unprecedented audacity once to invite the incarnate God to fall down and worship him! And we need not wonder that this great super-spirit, in his determination to "be like the Most High," has always striven to imitate the work of God. Thus, we behold him at work through his earthly ministers,—Jannes and Jambres,—withstanding Moses by throwing down their rods to become wriggling serpents, thus imitating the work of God. It was the Master who said that when he, the Son of Man, goes forth to sow good seed in the field, a great enemy, Satan, will likewise go forth to sow. And, when the seed begins to grow, the seed of his enemy will produce "tares," close imitation to "wheat." Again, we recall that when the apostles of Christ go forth to their appointed tasks, "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ," will likewise go forth as "ministers of righteousness."

It is quite apparent that the spirits that took William Dudley Pelley into tow on that moonless night in the Sierra Madre mountains, sought to imitate the works of God.

On two occasions, when men asked for "a sign" of his claim to the supernatural, Christ gave the same reply, "Destroy this temple, and I will raise it up —. When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered."

And what can be said of Mr. Pelley's experience but that it was an imitation of the Master's exit from the body, and his return to it? Great must be the rejoicing in a world of anti-Christian spirits, if Satan likewise can shew forth the great "sign."

When the mighty apostle to the Gentiles was "caught up into paradise," "whether in the body or out of the body," he knew not, yet, while in that blessed state he received his wondrous revelation of divine grace that is regarded as fundamental to the doctrine of the church of God today. Of such import is Paul's gospel of grace that he attests: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. . . . But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Now, what rejoicing among the powers of darkness there must be if Satan has really accomplished a similar wonder by taking the spirit of a man out of his body, over into the realms beyond death, giving him a revelation and returning the spirit back to the body,—all, with the most beneficial results!

Tens of thousands of Christians rejoice today in what they term "a second work of grace," which usually comes as an after-conversion experience in their lives, at a time when through a fuller, completer surrender than they have ever known before, they are "filled with the Holy Ghost." At such a time, old filthy habits (the "grave clothes" of only too many born-again children of God) are sloughed off, and victory over ill-temper, worry, etc., comes, with, of course, the attendant blessing of better health and a larger circle of friends. Apparently, in the experience of Mr. Pelley, he, too, had his "second work of grace," after which, straightening came to his bent-over spine, sensations of renewed strength entered into bone and muscle, fatigue and insomnia disappeared, as did also his old habits with cigarettes, cigars, and "corn-cobs," while a crabbed disposition changed to one of love and forbearance, bringing him hosts of new friends and new fortunes. May it be that the famous author was unwittingly in the play of sinister forces who would imitate the work of the Holy Ghost? Really, were the subtle powers of the underworld offering to William Dudley Pelley those gifts which are supposed to come only from God himself,—"love, harmony, health, good humor, prosperity,"—in return for his allegiance to their cause, knowing that through such as he, many human hearts athirst for such blessings as these, would be willing to "so order their lives and thinking as to be susceptible to such revelations?" And has not William Dudley Pelley (unwittingly, we must believe) already gone to the aid of sinister occult forces by declaring to all "ordinary two-legged Americans, full of aches and worries, that this subliminal world is the real world,—the world of 'stern reality' if you will;" and "that it is waiting for the race to learn of it and 'tap' its beneficent resources" (even as he did) "without waiting for what we call physical death;" and, "that our 'dead' dear ones are existent in it—alive, happy, conscious, and waiting for us to join them, either at death or any time we can reach that stage of spirituality where we can make contact with them?"

"I have seen my own there," he cries, "and have visited them." Think of the countless millions that mourn because of separation from those they have loved more than life itself! The opportunity to join them, to say nothing of the gain of "love, harmony, health, good humor, prosperity,"—what a prize could be gained!—to be gained, he affirms, if only we will "hunger after 'the things of the spirit'—that is, the sincere desire to penetrate behind the mediocrity of three-meals-a-day living and ascertain what mystery lies behind this Golgotha of Existence." He declares that such "hunger" on his part "attracted" (to him) "spiritual forces of a very high and altruistic order, who aided (him) in making a hyperdimensional visitation." "I believe," he says, "such hunger will always attract such forces." "I know," he cries, "because I have experienced!"

All very well! But, do we want to "attract" unto ourselves the forces that for from seven to ten minutes took the soul of William Dudley Pelley into eternity, even for the prizes he gained thereby? How many who read the experience of William Dudley Pelley are going to "hunger," are going to strive to "reach that stage of spirituality," etc., in order to attain a similar "hyperdimensional visitation?"

Divine revelation from beginning to end warns the people of God against being attracted by spirits that "peep and that mutter" in the dark, no matter what prizes they offer. "Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, ... for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to enquire of it." The Prince of all the powers of darkness once took the Christ "up into a high mountain, showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time," and said: "All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them—if thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be thine." But, to that stupendous offer, the Lord replied: "Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Then and there, for all mankind, the Master pointed the way to the Prize that is everlasting, to the pathway to Eternal Peace! Long Beach, California.

Love

By C. F. Yoder

Love seeketh the lost ones wherever they flee;
Love shareth their sorrows whatever they be;
Love healeth the wounds that ingratitude makes;
Love cheereth the heart when its courage forsakes;
Love lifteth the world, blessed Father, to thee.

Love gildeth the cross and maketh it bright;
Love lifteth the burden and maketh it light;
Love stirreth the heart to compassionate beat;
Love warmeth the hand and hasteneth the feet;
Love maketh all service a source of delight.

Let me scatter sunshine where cold breezes blow;
And smiles as a balm for a part of earth's woe.
Is your burden heavy? Let me bear a part.
Has trouble o'erwhelmed you? Come tell me your heart.
Today I must help you,—Tomorrow I go.

Tomorrow I go, but today I may love,
And by humble service my love I may prove.
Thus, loving and serving with Jesus the Lord,
And preaching by practise his wonderful Word,
My life may be witness of Heaven above.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

He that uttereth truth sheweth forth righteousness;
But a false witness, deceit.
The lip of truth shall be established for ever;
But a lying tongue is but for a moment.
Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord;
But they that deal truly are his delight.—From the Book of Proverbs.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

DID THE PRESS PRINT THIS?

They did not. That is, the wet press did not. Those of us who have learned to follow the Christian Science Monitor, because we want an honest paper, found the item there.

The Connecticut Bar Association, a dispatch to the Monitor shows, refused to countenance a State-wide poll of lawyers on the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court sounded the knell of the proposal when he said:

"I began by being in favor of the enforcement of the law, because as a lawyer I had sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States. Whether I believed in that law or not, whether I believed in that amendment or not, I conceived it my duty to support it. As judge I took my oath of office to support the Constitution of the United States. I took that oath in the presence of God Almighty and my fellowmen. That is why I undertook to see that we might have law enforcement in this state."

Not a line reporting this event appeared in the six leading New York newspapers that I have examined. Had the decision been wet rather than dry we would have been treated to a front-page story. In this fashion are we misled.—Christian Herald.

HEROES AND CIGARETTES

Some time ago the "Messenger" called attention to the bunk advertisements upon which cigarette manufacturers are spending millions. It is fine to see the rising tide of opposition and contempt for the "bought and paid for" recommendation and the amazingly grotesque claims in these misleading advertisements. The American Motorist says: "It is our opinion that the American public is becoming sick of the fake advertising that is foisted upon this country in the shape of purchased testimonials favoring cigarettes and patent lotions. The brilliant rescue of men at sea by able seamen was recently turned into a mockery by the appearance of advertising telling of the important part a cigarette played in that heroic rescue. No wonder Colonel Lindbergh and Miss Helen Wills retain the affections of the world. They are above commercial bribery. The American manager of a brilliant English sportsman visiting in this country, told the writer of this editorial that he—the manager—would sign a testimonial if he were paid enough. Shortly afterwards this testimonial appeared. The manager put feet of clay upon his hero for a mess of money."

The Royal Arcanum Bulletin waxed humorous over the situation by telling this fable: "Once upon a time there was a movie star who said: 'I really cannot conscientiously recommend your cigarettes. In fact I never smoked your product in my life. Even though you pay me 1,000 grand, I believe the blindfold test would be futile because my sense of smell is none too reliable.' Is it not about time, as many have suggested, that the National Vigilance Committee or the Better Business Bureaus of the country, or some other organization, should do something to restore public confidence in truthful advertising?—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE CHURCHES KEEP UP

The church does not lag behind in many of the great enterprises which interest mankind. Though often accused of being conservative and backward as to remain in the rear of forward movements, in reality it is always on the alert seeking for agencies by which to disseminate the gospel. The radio had hardly begun to broadcast before the churches saw the availability of that method of extending their ministries. The command to go into the by-ways and hedges and invite guests to the feast is being observed in a way not dreamed of when that order was given. In the places that could not be otherwise reached the voices of the air are penetrating and proclaiming the message of salvation. Great religious programs are broadcast from Sabbath to Sabbath. Sermons and songs are heard in the homes of people where sickness and infirmity prevent church attendance. Men upon the streets hear the voices of the servants of God. In the far mountain retreats the call extends. Hospital patients enjoy the services of the churches; religious music is furnished to nation-wide congregations.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

VATICAN WEALTH INCREASED

The recent adjustment between the Italian government and the Vatican state brought into the coffers of the Pope the neat sum of $87,000,000. Doubtless it was not paid in one large sum. The Italian people will have to pay it in some form. That is obviously a very large amount. It will make the Vatican bank walls bulge, which receives tribute from all parts of the world and is the richest of all financial concerns. The spiritual potentate dwelling at the center of the Roman Catholic world does not need to pray the Lord's Prayer: "Give us this day our daily bread." He will get his all right; also the great company of people forming the hierarchy of the Vatican state will not be in want. As to the largeness of the amount, which may stagger Protestant observers, it should be made known that it is less than that offered the Pope by the Garibaldi regime about the year 1870. The reaction on the part of the far-flung battle line of the Roman Catholic world would amaze the Protestant world, if its leaders were able to see it. After reading a large number our conclusion is that this church is still dominated by the medieval mind. It is largely institutionalized in its outlook and bound hand and foot to a past out of which comes at times the spirit of non-cooperation in conformity with the mind of this age.—Western Christian Advocate.

obstinate barrier to progress. And if the leadership have not vision, their case is hopeless; the people will perish. He must not only be able to see opportunities, but also, and more especially, spiritual realities. He must be able first of all to see God, see him in the ecstasy of a great spiritual experience and see him in revelation. And when he has gotten a great spiritual vision he will have something to bring to the people. But unless he has gotten a splendid vision of God in revelation he will not be able to lead his people in the practice of God-like virtues and works.

A man of wisdom is also a man who keeps informed, and not only informed concerning the truths of God's Word, but also concerning the progress of the Kingdom interests at home and abroad, the plans and programs of the denomination, methods of procedure, and events of special interest. He is a man who reads his church paper as well as other religious journals, makes use of his own church school lesson publications as well as other special helps which he may desire, and keeps in vital touch with all movements and interests of his church. By keeping thus informed he is able to lead his people in all matters pertaining to the work of the congregation.

Furthermore a wise man is one who knows how to work with people tactfully, knows how to lead the people without being offensive, and how to direct others into larger things without exalting self or seeming officious. And he is one who has learned how to obey the instructions of others and to follow their leadership, and above all has learned to accept without equivocation and obey and practice the Word of God. And finally, he is one who is apt to teach, and ready and willing to bear intelligent testimony to the power of the Gospel, and to assist the pastor in every way to build up the true house of God.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will. To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved: In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence. Eph. 1:5-8.

MONDAY

Adoption.—Such is the love of God that even though he foreknew that we would turn our backs upon him, spurning his every effort to win us, he yet predestinated us for adoption as his own children. And this the reservations so common among men: as his adopted children we have equal rights and inheritance with his only begotten Son, our Savior. Little wonder that we cry, Abba, Father! Read Rom. 8:15.

TUESDAY

Children.—It has often been argued that an adopted child should love his adopted parents more than another child loves his father in the flesh. Surely, this is only reasonable, in view of the deliberate choice involved in adoption. If the contention is raised that "blood is thicker than water," we are still bound to our Father by the blood of Jesus Christ. We have, thus double reason to love and honor our Father who art in heaven. Rom. 8:16-24, 29, 30.

WEDNESDAY

His Will.—Our adoption as children was dictated purely by the desires of his own loving heart. Some think that he predestinated that some should be saved, and others lost; and that there is little that man can do about it. Not so! He is not willing that ANY should perish, and hath predestinated ALL to the adoption of children. It is only freedom of choice that prevents any sin-blinded man from being God's child. May each life be lived in accordance with his loving will! 2 Pet. 3:9-18.

THURSDAY

The Glory of His Grace.—Again we are reminded that it is his grace wherein we are accepted in the Beloved! Lives of faithful, upright service from men that would otherwise be sunken in sin and misery are the praise of the glory of his grace. Help us, our Father, to render such praise unto thee, and may our lives also inspire others so to praise thee. Read Rom. 5:1-11.

FRIDAY

Through His Blood.—Redemption is a word much older than the Christian faith. It was used by the pagans with various loose meanings. It is here defined, in part at least, as the forgiveness of sins through his blood. A friend once resented my statement that his was not a Christian religion, since it in no way recognized the fact of or the necessity for the life or death of Christ. Apart from his shed blood, death has not been abolished, and there is no remission. Hebrews 9.

SATURDAY

Abounded.—As in all things toward his people, he hath abounded in his grace. No matter what our need, our God shall supply ALL our needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus (Phil. 4:19). Where sin did abound, grace hath much more abounded! Read 2 Cor. 9:8-15.

SUNDAY

Wisdom and Prudence.—God does not "spoil" his children through lavish and unguarded gifts, but in wisdom and prudence bestows upon us that thing which he sees we need. Thus it is sometimes necessary even to rebuke and chasten those he loves. "Do you think He ne'er reproves me? What a false friend he would be, if he never, never told me, Of the sins which he must see!" Read Rev. 3:14-22.—T. C. L.

Brethren Young People's Camp

Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, July 14-14, 1929

"This organized summer camp is the most important step in education that America has given the world."—Chas. W. Eliot.

Promoted by

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

In Cooperation with the Indiana District Conference Ashland, Ohio

DESCRIPTION

This Camp and Training School for Brethren young people is being conducted by the National Sunday School Association in cooperation with the Indiana District Conference. While most of the young people and their accompanying adult leaders will probably come from the Indiana churches, the camp is open to Brethren young people from every part of the brotherhood.

LOCATION

The camp site is pretty Shipshewana Lake, which is sixteen miles east of Goshen and twenty-two miles east of Elkhart. South Bend is thirty-six miles to the west while Warsaw and Peru are forty-two and eighty-five miles respectively, to the south. Brighton is fifteen miles and Bryan is fifty-five miles to the east, while Ft. Wayne is sixty miles and Huntington is seventy-five miles to the southeast.

DATES

The conference is to open on Sunday, July 7th. There will be an afternoon and night program for young people. On the next day, Monday, July 8th, registration will take place. However, it will be advisable for some students to come on Sunday and worship at Shipshewana in order that all things may be in readiness for an early camp opening. The camp ends on Sunday, July 14th. On this date Bible conference begins. No doubt there will be those who will be desirous of remaining over for that conference. At all events, let it be remembered that all delegates must be present by July 8th.

WHO MAY ATTEND

The camp conference is planned for young people of high school age and above and their adult leaders. It is hoped that there may be something near an equal representation of both girls and boys. Churches should keep this in mind in selecting their representatives. The program aims to help all young people to experience the measure of Christian growth and to help them in finding a solution for life's problems. The church is not limited to any particular number of delegates. It will help to have each group accompanied by some sympathetic adult leader.

WHAT THEY SHOULD BRING

The campers will lodge in cottages or tents. The girls will be housed in the Girls' Lodge. Cots will be provided. Each camper should bring linen and blankets and camp pillow. Camp clothing may be worn.

Bathing suit, fishing tackle and athletic equipment should be provided. In addition each camper should bring his or her Bible and notebooks.

DAILY SCHEDULE

The morning program will consist of morning watch, class periods for instruction and chapel worship. Dinner, as well as the other meal hours in the dining room of the Girls' Lodge will be a time of joyous, wholesome fellowship. The first part of the afternoon will be spent in rest and reading. Directed recreation, consisting of hikes, games and contests will follow. Then to the lake for boating and swimming. Evening vespers will turn the heart to worship. Personal and group conferences close the day and prepare busy, happy people for refreshing rest.

LEADERSHIP COURSE

One type of course will be offered, from which each camper will be required to choose according to directions which will be announced by the dean. The courses will meet for one period daily.

The courses to be offered in the main this year are as follows:

13. The Principles of Teaching, III—Rev. W. I. Duker.
14. Sunday School Organization and Work, III—Rev. S. M. Whetstone.
15. Life Work Guidance and Social Activities, III—Prof. R. R. Haun.
16. Expert Christian Endeavor, III—Rev. E. M. Riddle.
17. Missionary Education and Training, III—Rev. N. V. Leatherman.
18. Bible Study and Doctrine, III—Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

EXTRA COURSES

- a. Sermon Preparation.
- b. The Work of a Pastor.
- c. Stories and Story Telling.

THE CAMP STAFF

Administrative: Dean, M. A. Stuckey; Registrar and Business Manager, S. M. Whetstone; Dean of Girls, Miss Catherine Teeter; Dean of Boys, R. R. Haun; Camp Physician, Dr. M. D. Price; Camp Nurse, Miss Mary Price.

Instructors: W. I. Duker, S. M. Whetstone, R. R. Haun, E. M. Riddle, N. V. Leatherman, M. A. Stuckey, and others.

EXPENSES

Each camp student will pay a registration fee of one dollar. This will be collected by the registrar who will enroll the students under the direction of the dean. Room and board will be kept within the total cost of eight dollars. This will be collected by the business manager who will assign campers to their lodging place. Last year many students bought books; this year there will also be students who will desire books. However, to eliminate the cost involved in purchasing books, it has been planned to have the instructors present outline studies to their pupils. This will save considerable expense to churches that have already co-operated in this work. Additional expense will be what the individual makes it. Churches will make a good investment in assisting young people to meet the necessary expense of camp life.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS

Requests from all parts of the brotherhood indicate that this school is growing in popular favor among the brethren. It is to be hoped that it will become a training center for Brethren young people and adults at large. In fact that is just what we desire it to be. Pastors and Sunday school superintendents will have problems lightened in their own parishes if they send capable and talented young people to this school for instruction. Ashland College students who were permitted to attend the conference last year are desirous of spending their vacation at Shipshewana again this year. To them it was a real treat of instruction, worship, and recreation. Let us help the youth of our church to build a greater Brethren church.

EXTRA SUGGESTIONS

To those coming from a distance, let it be suggested, and especially in the case of girls, that an opportunity will be given for light housekeeping. This can only be done in a limited number of cases. Write the registrar relative to the matter.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

The Story of the Rechabites

(Lesson for June 9)

(Temperance Lesson)

Scripture Lesson—Jer. 35:1-19.

Printed Text—Jer. 35:5-11.

Devotional Reading—Psa. 107:1-9.

Golden Text—We will drink no wine.—Jer. 35:6.

The Rechabites

The Rechabites, whose loyalty to their ancestor Jeremiah contrasted with the disloyal attitude of Judah toward Jehovah, were a tribe who traced their ancestry to Rechab, a descendant of Hammath the Kenite. See 1 Chron. 2:55. The word Rechab, meaning a camel-rider, probably indicates a tribal history going back to nomadic life. It was probably Jehonadab, the Rechabite (see 2 Kings 10:15), who organized the family into a tribe, upon the basis of loyalty to Jehovah and abstinence from intoxicating drink.—E. Leigh Mudge.

Jeremiah was told by Jehovah to bring their sheik and all their encampment to a chamber within the temple precincts. (A number of the tribe had come into the city for protection during the unsettled condition of the land.) He caused large bowls of wine to be set before them, such as were set before guests at a feast, and invited them to fill their cups from them and drink.

The proposal was most probably recognized as being made in mock earnest for some special purpose, for the prophet doubtless knew the customs of the Rechabites, and they did not appear to be in the least insulted by the action.

However, all declined, without the least hesitation. They had vowed, they said, to obey the commands of their forefather, Jonadab, and would be true to their pledge. —Adams.

A Changed Attitude Needed

One of the very important things needed with reference to the temperance movement is a changed attitude on the part of the public towards Prohibition, and toward the bootlegger and the man who drinks from his trade. We have been wasting too much sympathy on the trapped bootlegger and the drinker, and Prohibition is looked upon as too much as a joke. The majority of the public favors Prohibition, but at the same time are apologetic in their attitude toward enforcement officers.

Just so long as a drunken man is looked upon as a funny spectacle, bootleggers and rum runners as brave heroes, and officers of the law as snoopers and persecutors—people to be fooled as long and as often as it is possible—just so long will Prohibition be fought by the thoughtless. And the natural result of the praising of the law-breaker and the vilification of the law enforcer will come to be the idea that the bandit who shoots up a train and kills the guard defending the mails is a hero, and the officers of the law who strive to ferret out and arrest this hero, men to be hindered in every way possible. And in time all law will be a farce, and anarchy will come. Break one law and it is easier to break more.

Competent Witnesses

Jane Addams, one of the greatest women of this generation, and an outstanding social worker in America's second city, knew well the curse of the liquor traffic in the old saloon days in Chicago, and likewise knows well the change that has taken place since the establishment of Prohibition. She says:

Here around Hull House we used to watch whiskey and beer being left at saloons by the drayload. The poverty and suffering from drink were appalling. There is such a difference now that it seems like another world.

Drinking has decreased, and so has our work of rehabilitating families wrecked through intemperance. We have hardly any more squalid homes and neglected families to deal with. The stuff folks get now makes them uglier, but its evils are offset by the difficulties of getting it. I would not see the old system again for anything.

"The greatest experiment in social welfare in the modern world is the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The prime object of the national prohibitory law is not 'to make men good by law.' It is to protect society at large from the anti-social acts of those who insist upon demonstrating that they will not be 'made good by law.' National prohibition of beverage alcohol is in harmony with the highest purpose of law, namely to make it easy for men to do right and difficult for men to do wrong."—Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D.

A former Chief Justice of the Court of Special Sessions of the City of New York, Isaac Franklin Russell, who is now senior professor in the New York University says: "The prosperity of our people is, to my mind, due primarily to prohibition. The signs and proof of our progress and prosperity are seen in increased savings-bank accounts, in the enormous amount of life insurance maintained, in higher rates of wages, and in the investments made throughout the country in radio apparatus and automobiles. Prohibition has not annihilated crime, but it has reduced the calendars of our inferior criminal law courts. If the prohibition law is inadequately enforced in New York City, the same thing can be said of all our laws."

Who Benefits from Prohibition?

A recent survey of the benefits from Prohibition has been summarized in the following brief statements, in reply to the question, "Who benefits by Prohibition?"

Wage Earners—whose wages were $8,000,000,000 more in 1926 than in 1918, which is an increase of twenty-five per cent, while living costs are reduced eighteen per cent since 1920.

Employers—who benefit by increased production and a reduced labor turnover; by sober workmen, fewer accidents—and no more "blue Mondays."

Farmers—who buy three times as much farm machinery, and who sell forty-five per cent more milk than in 1920—and who rarely have a drunken farm hand.

Bankers—twenty-three million new depositors since 1920 have increased deposits in the savings banks by $9,000,000,000, an increase of sixty per cent.

Insurance Men—who have sold $51,000,000,000 of new insurance since 1920, which is a 130 per cent increase. Sixty million persons now hold life insurance.

Real Estate Men—who sold an average of 741 new homes every day last year, and who find rents and payments easier to collect.

Manufacturers—manufactured products in 1925 and 1926 reached $62,000,000,000 in value which is more than the peak of post-war production.

Merchants—who get much of the $2,000,000,000 formerly spent in drink, and who have thousands of buyers where they used to have hundreds.

Everybody's Wife—who shares in all this increased prosperity and rejoices in all it means to her family. Probably she has one of the 612,000 washing machines; surely she has one of the 1,000,000 vacuum cleaners or some of the $900,000,000 worth of furniture which has been sold each year since 1924. A million farmers' wives are enjoying the 1,000,000 bathrooms which were put into farmhouses last year.

Everybody's Family—there is one passenger automobile to every one and one-fourth families, and one radio set to every five homes in our country. Colleges have doubled their attendance in a few years and schools of every kind are full to overflowing.—Quoted in The Congregationalist in the spring of 1928, from the Walla Walla, Wash., "Bulletin."

A Revival of Instruction Needed

The church has been accused of not doing its duty toward the Prohibition Amendment. It fought terrifically for it until it became an established fact legally, then it suddenly released the pressure as if it was all over. The enforcement officers were supposed to do the rest. During the last ten years so very little temperance instruction has been given to the children that there has grown up a young generation who know neither the curse of the saloon nor the harm of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. The church cannot afford to be longer remiss in its duty at this point. Neither dare the public schools be allowed to steer clear of temperance, as the superintendent of the Cleveland schools so long ago insisted on doing, on the pretext that it was a political issue. There must be built up a sentiment that will demand a revival of temperance such as brought this great reform, or we shall ere long see the fruit of many years destroyed.

How About It!

By Helen Garber

Did you ever eat anything that tasted so good you felt you could eat it for every meal and all the time in between? Have you ever read a book that was so interesting you wished it would never end? Have you ever heard music that so thrilled you that you were forgetful of time and space? Did you ever meet anyone whose personality was so gripping that you wished you might always be near him? Did you ever hear a speaker who so spoke to your eager mind and heart that you might have listened endlessly? If you have had any of these experiences and wish to renew some of them, dear friend, DO NOT FAIL to attend the Ohio State Christian Endeavor Convention at Dayton, for there you will be satisfied.

Your state secretary just returned from a County Christian Endeavor Convention held in Pomona, California. There were over 3,300 registrants, and remember, only a COUNTY convention! You may talk about thrills from this or that, but nothing gives you quite the thrill you get in a Christian Endeavor Convention. Do you believe me? Doubt my word and prove it for yourself. Go on to the Dayton Convention and then tell me if I am wrong.

Do you like to be POPULAR? Surely you do! Would you like to know what is the most popular thing to do among the young people of California? (Now please don't tell them I said this, for this is confidential.) This is it—attending the C. E. Convention. Now, are you folks in Ohio going to be "out of style"? Why should Brethren young people, ARISE! Fill in the ranks. Carry your banner as a crusader in Christian Endeavor for Christ and the church. The Brethren Endeavorers here in the west carry off honors almost every time such things are given. Why not you too? Go to the Dayton Convention, and you will return home wondering why you have been sleeping so long when such fine things are to be had.

The convention this year is to be held June 25-28 at Dayton, Ohio. How I should enjoy meeting you there! Watch this column for further information as you plan to meet your fellow-Endeavorers in Dayton.

PLAN NOW! THEN GO!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS AT WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

This report will cover the time from May 6, 1928 to April 28, 1929. Early in May of last year and through the month of June a membership campaign was held with special programs on Sunday evenings and special effort which resulted in increased attendance and new members being added. A social followed the campaign to welcome the new members into our society. Another social was held during the past year after Thanksgiving, in the form of an Indian social. These were our only socials during the year. The attendance at our regular meetings has kept up good. The number of members at present on roll (active) is 34; number of members present during the year, 916; number of visitors, 426; percentage of members in attendance, 74.

The present list of officers is as follows: President, Elmo Hoover; Vice President, Brinton Stains; Secretary, Chester Zimmerman; Treasurer, Gladys Boyer. Committee chairmen: Prayer or Program, Florence Highberger; Missionary, Gail Stouffer; Outlook, Brinton Stains; Music, Ed. Cordell, Jr.; Social, Hypatia Snider.

We also have a Junior Christian Endeavor which is growing very rapidly and will be of much help to the Senior society in the future. Miss Evelyn Fisher is the superintendent of the Juniors.

Yours truly,

gels preaching to patients-in-waiting while the doctor or nurse and native assistant are caring for the cases in hand. This has been, especially, since the beginning of the war, one of our most fruitful sources in garnering the harvest from among lost souls.

We have so much to praise God for. The other stations have not suffered, and we ourselves have suffered so much less than what threatened us. In spite of our hindrances, there has been a continued, though lessened ingathering, and we are now ready for the revival for which we are expectantly praying and waiting.

Faithfully yours,

Travel Experiences Home

III. The Return Journey. Leaving Africa

On Board the "Anversville".

April 3, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

My last letter was written on the Oubangui River. The little river boat arrived in due time to the muddy Congo from which point we were able to travel more rapidly. We arrived at Brazzaville on March 20th. Then we crossed Stanley Pool to the much more progressive town of Leopoldville. A busy day and a half was spent between the two cities, getting baggage through customs, buying Belgian francs, buying tickets for the train, gathering food for the journey, reserving places on the ocean liner, besides many more duties.

After this rush at Leopoldville, we were glad to sit down on the little train and relax. This miniature-looking railroad between Leopoldville and Matadi would look like a toy to most Americans, but one soon learns to appreciate it and to think it quite wonderful after all. Before it was completed all baggage as well as travelers had to go these 200 miles by caravan. Much work has recently been done in straightening the tracks. The train ascends to Thysville, which is 2,000 feet above sea level and much cooler and more pleasant. The next morning at six o'clock we were on our way again but did not arrive at Matadi until eighth that evening. We stayed at the A. B. C. hotel.

We bought our tickets for the Anversville, a Belgian liner. On March 25th at almost noon she began to descend the muddy Congo. In almost two hours we arrived at sun-baked Boma where the boat anchored and the crew loaded on palm oil and other supplies. The harbor is between two hills and so intense is the heat that one is almost convinced he can never feel cool again.

There are about 250 passengers on board, the most of them being Belgian officials. Also there are about a dozen English people who have been working for different commercial companies. There are six missionaries besides ourselves; three from the Presbyterian Mission in the Kasai district, one English Baptist missionary, and two Methodist missionaries with their three children. There is one priest on board.

In his Name,
HATTIE C. SHELTON.

News from the War Area

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
March 18th, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Events have transpired quickly during the last month. The scene of war has shifted from the immediate vicinity to the Bambea road, that is, beyond Bossemballi in the direction of Bossongoa. We hear today of several who have been wounded, some of whom we knew as soldiers when stationed here during the occupation. The faith in the sorcerers continues to exert a powerful influence over the deluded peoples. Cannons are now being imported to convince them. These are days when God is very near, and prayer our continual resource.

Since last writing you illness has visited several of us, notably Mrs. Foster, who was taken ill on February 16th, and was seriously ill for a time, it being necessary for her to remain in bed a week. Each of the other ladies on the station had a day or two of illness the same week. One day three were in bed. On Monday, February 18th, our hearts were rejoiced by receiving mail. During the four weeks succeeding we consider ourselves extremely fortunate, having heard from our loved ones, in all, four times, February 18th, March 4th, 9th and 13th, almost an unheard of frequency.

March 9th was the day of the arrival of sixteen parcels from Johnstown, Pennsylvania. On occasions such as this your otherwise staid and dignified missionaries indulge in an almost childish glee, as packages are opened and their contents distributed.

February 22nd was the day of the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon at the station with their little Kenneth. We had the pleasure of having them with us until their departure for Bangui on February 28th. They went to Bangui by push and bicycle, reaching there March seventh and departing from there March 13th by the Steamship Bongo which was to make connections with the Djah at Zinga. They hoped to arrive April 12th in Antwerp, the earliest possibility of arrival at New York being about April 20th.

On March seventh, Joseph Nguende Yaloke was taken away by the government, the same being the procedure with other sons of Yaloke. We do not know when we shall see them again.

March 8th the most recent mail was received from Bassai and Bellevue, the missionaries being well there at the time of writing.

On March 4th a hospital patient was brought to us in a very critical condition, having fallen upon a spear cunningly arranged in a trap, made in the form of a pit. We discharged him today, practically cured, he and his brother having both accepted the Lord during their stay here. We have registered in believing faith a definite prayer that God will follow these two, and that they may be greatly used in believing faith in the evangelization of the Boufi tribe of which they are members. From this tribe we have already had a few Christians, among them being Yama and Salakora, two of our evangelists.

Tomorrow, March 19th, Mr. and Mrs. Foster expect to leave for a visit to our various chapels. Their itinerary will be for the combined purpose of evangelization and baptism, there being many converts who have never had the privilege of baptism.

The routine work of the station continues as usual. The morning services are daily held, and baptisms occur almost weekly. The number of patients treated daily at the dispensary varies from 60 to 75. The school has continued in session throughout the uprising, although the number of pupils have been depleted, some of them having been, so to speak, carried away with the jungle tide.

Building has been greatly interfered with on account of the withdrawal of workmen. Commencing with the trip to the undertaker tomorrow, we trust that itineration may now be continued without interruption along roads where hostilities have ceased and the people have returned to their villages.

Preaching services are held daily except Sunday at the dispensary, one of the evan-

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

Dear Friends in the Brotherhood, Greetings in the Lord:

The Milledgeville church is still at work. The Sunday before Easter Sunday we observed as Decision Day in the Sunday school. Several signified their desire to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as Savior. Of this group four have been baptized and others are awaiting favorable time for their baptism.

Easter Sunday was a special in attendance, program, and the raising of an offering for Foreign Missions.

Since the Easter season we have been successful in organizing a Young People's Bible Study Class which meets on Tuesday evening each week. We have believed that the young people of our churches should be given the privilege of a week day Bible study which they could call their own. It is in an effort to prove the value and practicability of such that we have organized this class.

This church has been in the custom of arranging for the work of the church ministry in ample time each year. This year is no exception to this rule. Early in May the spring business meeting was called and the matter of a pastor for the coming year was discussed. The vote was called for by ballot and the vote of those present was a unanimous one to call the present pastor for another year. There seemed no good reason why the offer of the pastorate for another year should not be accepted. Therefore, the Lord willing, this church will be served for a fifth year by the present pastor.

There are many features of the work that we hope to be able, under the guidance and blessing of the Lord, to strengthen and build up.

There are plans for re-decorating the auditorium of the church as soon as the weather becomes warm and settled enough to do so. These brightenings of surroundings occasionally are conducive to a brightening of our attitude of worship.

We note the many interesting reports from the other churches. We wish all the best the Lord has in store for his own. We covet a place for this work in your prayers.

GEO. E. CONE.

GOOD NEWS FROM THE THIRD CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA

Some times it is best when, not having anything good to say, to say nothing at all. This partially explains our silence until now, at which time we are happy to report progress.

We have been very fortunate in having as our pastor since September the first Rev. Wm. A. Steffler who, together with his talented wife, has had a continuous revival since coming to us. Brother Steffler has baptized 60 and received into membership 53 new members. We now have a membership of 112. The attendance in Sunday school has increased, and on Easter Sunday there were 210 present. Facts speak louder than words, so we will make this report short, and just give the facts.

In December, a day was set apart for the purpose of reducing the mortgage. What a day it was! Late Saturday evening the good ladies of the W. M. S. prepared food in order that the members and friends might stay all day at the church. It was exciting to watch the thermometer, drawn on a large chart, rise each time a class or an individual pledged a subscription. Brother R. Paul Miller gave us a stirring address in the afternoon and Brother W. C. Benshoff (who motored in with four other Brethren) gave us a splendid sermon in the evening. The First Church of Philadelphia cooperated with us so well that we feel the two churches in this city are beginning to become more acquainted with each other than they have been in the past.

In this connection, the choir of the First church invited the choir of our church to a treat. We were given such a wonderful evening that our chorister (who was due home earlier than the rest) was unable to leave until it was over. The First church Christian Endeavor Society has also challenged our society, and we surely know that they will lose, and have to give us another treat.

Does it pay to be FAITHFUL TO CHURCH, At the Communion Service just recently held, one of the church's founder members answered this question. As he looked on the largest attendance in the history of the church he reminded us of the time that there were only ten members who many times grew discouraged and wondered if it would be worth while to carry on the work any longer. Subtract ten from the one hundred and twelve members we now have and what would have become of the remaining 102 members gained by being faithful?

All in all, there is a great work here and we thank God for everything, especially for sending Brother and Sister Steffler to us at what seemed to be the "darkness before dawn" period. We appreciate the services of a real Brethren preacher who IS NOT AFRAID TO PREACH THE WHOLE GOSPEL, and not sparing on shoe leather. In spite of reports to the contrary, people do want to hear the whole Gospel preached.

We ask your pardon for making this account so lengthy but we must add that our Easter offering this year is the largest it has ever been, amounting to over $200.00.

PRAY FOR US that we may continue to grow and be a blessing to others.
(MISS) RHODA GREENWOOD, Clerk.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

We have just read the news in the Evangelist which inspires us to add our bit, though nothing very exciting is taking place just now.

Brother Early who has charge of the church here now has been making his monthly visits from Kentucky and giving us some splendid sermons.

In April Mrs. Early made her first visit together with Thetis and Omeda Hadden, some of our Kentucky teachers and whom I had not seen since my last year in Kentucky in 1918. It was a real treat to have them with us. At this time we held our quarterly members' meeting and a spring Communion with a good percent of the members present. We were glad to have Sister Early with us and look to the time when she shall be here permanently.

The second Sunday in May Brother Early and wife were here again, bringing Miss Miller, one of the Kentucky girls with them. When they come in June they will be on their way to visit their four married children in California, returning by way of National Conference, then back here to make their abode among us and have full charge of the church. In the absence of a parsonage we praise God for opening up a very desirable home for our pastor and his wife.

In the meantime local workers are carrying on the regular work. In our Bible class we are now studying Leviticus, the very center of which is Jesus Christ our Lord. When we neglect these great books of the Old Testament we cheat ourselves of the revelation of the deep truths God wants us to have. How very precious God's whole Book is if we study it with open heart.

Since last report two have been received into the church by letter.

We rejoice in all your victories for the Kingdom of God. We can with each one rejoice daily that we are hastening toward the time when we shall see him Whom we love and serve. "By his grace we shall look on his face." May God help us to hasten his coming.
MARY PENCE.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

We have been very busy under the energetic influence of our pastor, Brother Lynn; and it seems scarcely possible that Brother and Sister Lynn have been with us for six months.

A new Senior Christian Endeavor society for young married folks has been organized and are meeting each Sunday evening in a Sunday school class room.

March 24th, Brother Lynn closed a very successful two weeks' revival campaign at the First Brethren church of Los Angeles, of which Rev. A. B. Cover is pastor. There were several delegations from La Verne during this time. The distance being about eighty miles round trip, it was not possible to attend every meeting. Brother Lynn also assisted in the mid-year Bible Conference of Brethren churches held also at the First Brethren church of Los Angeles.

Preceding Easter, a very thorough religious census of La Verne was taken by Sunday school workers. A pot luck supper in the church basement was attended by about a hundred Sunday school teachers and others interested, to make preparation for this census. On Easter Sunday morning there was a special program given by the Primary Department. In the evening a Missionary pageant, "America's Responsibility," was presented by the two Young People's Christian Endeavor societies. The foreign mission offering of the La Verne congregation on Easter Sunday was above $1,000. There was also a sunrise prayer service at the church, Easter morning. Most of our Christian Endeavor members attended the Los Angeles County Christian Endeavor convention, in Pomona, recently.

We are very grieved for the loss of our Brother A. C. Hendrickson who was the teacher of the Woman's Bible Class for several years. He was a very helpful, active member of the church and we shall miss him greatly. Our deepest sympathy is extended to our beloved Sister Hendrickson and the four daughters. At the funeral services all the Brethren churches of Southern California participated in paying tribute to his splendid Christian service among us.

The Woman's Missionary Society has been honored by visits from returned missionaries from time to time. The most recent was Miss Mary Bricker (from India) whose message we appreciated very much.

We are happy in anticipation of the arrival of our Brother and Sister Sheldon from Africa, and especially Baby Sheldon!

Last but not least, comes the report of our own revival meeting. Brother Lynn presented the messages each evening for two weeks, except on Saturday, Brother Cecil Snyder of Los Angeles very graciously gave his assistance in leading the singing. Brother Lynn has aptly described the meeting as a "Victory Revival" which resulted in about forty decisions for Christian service. Seventeen were baptized on Wednesday evening at the close of the services; others have not yet received the rite.

The church desires to express appreciation for the services of Brother Cecil Snyder of the First Brethren church of Los Angeles for his very faithful attention to the musical part of the program. The Aeolian Male Quartet of La Verne College assisted very materially also with their splendid musical selections.

The pastor wishes to stress the importance of the special prayer meetings as a means of success for the salvation of souls.

The special delegation of sixty members of the First church of Los Angeles, with their pastor, A. B. Cover, was an exhibition of fine Christian spirit of cooperation which we shall be pleased to remember. The folks who came from Fillmore (85 miles distant) also deserve commendation.

The local congregation desires to express to Brother Lynn a deep sense of gratitude for his earnest preaching of the Word and his untiring effort, that souls should be won for our Lord. Brother Lynn is at this time serving the Second church of Los Angeles in a three weeks' evangelistic service.

ELSIE RAGER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. NEWS

Greeting! The work here among the Washington Brethren seems to be advancing steadily and some gratifying gains are being realized. Every department is active and going forward. All of the services are well attended and a commendable interest is manifest. Since the first of the year eleven new members have been added to the roll through the regular services of the church. It is the pastor's desire that the church be evangelistic the year around, and in part at least this desire is being realized. There are a number who will probably come among us shortly.

We are wondering where we shall possibly put many more, especially in the Sunday school, with our present basement accommodations. A recent contest in the school, an airplane race, has increased our attendance appreciably until on Mothers Day we had 291 present. There was an intolerable jam. We have used every available space and are subdividing with curtains at present. The church here is praying that the building can be completed soon and we covet the prayers of the Brotherhood to that end.

The Home Department put forth a special effort to have every member present on Mothers' Day and a splendid program was given in their honor by local talent, the pastor preaching an appropriate sermon during the church hour. The church is quite fortunate in having a splendid group of consecrated leaders who are proving a real blessing and a pastor's aid.

Last Sunday night was Men's night at the church. The men of the church, led by the W. M. Lyon Bible Class, presented a most attractive and helpful program before a full house. Three able men spoke well on the related subject, "What the Church Means to Me," "What the Bible Means to Me," and "What Christ Means to Me."

A group of men from the Berean Bible Class recently went to Winchester, Va., to assist Brother Rohart in his splendid work there. They sang and spoke and were so well received that they have been asked to return this coming Sunday to aid in an all-day anniversary meeting that the Winchester Brethren are holding.

We are planning to conduct a three weeks' Daily Vacation Bible School beginning the latter part of June. This will be our fourth year and we are hoping this will be the best school of all. The leader is Mrs. Minnie Harrison, the Primary superintendent.

At a recent business meeting of the church the pastor was extended a unanimous call to serve for a fifth year. He has accepted gratefully and we look forward to a happy and fruitful year.

We rejoice in all the victories gained throughout the Brotherhood and trust the days ahead will be fraught with greater gains for him.

MRS. HOMER A. KENT.

PORTIS, KANSAS

It was the writer's privilege to spend a week with Brother Lowman and his good people, from April 29 to May 6.

We had an enjoyable time together preaching and teaching the blessed Word. Despite the busy season for the rural folks many sacrificed precious minutes to attend the special services.

We found at Portis a congregation who loved the Word and are being fed on Spiritual Bread by their faithful pastor. Even if the farmers had but two crops in about six years we found them loyal to their church in person and gifts.

It's an old adage but still holds true, "You never miss the water till the well runs dry." Too many times when things run smooth and prosperity lingers with us we are prone to forget our duty to our Lord.

We were a bit disappointed the last few days for the fact that it rained and the attendance was somewhat lessened. Nevertheless the interest did not weaken. Our last evening at Portis was one of enjoyment as we surrounded the Lord's tables and washed one another's feet and partook of the bread and wine.

What a blessing we receive from obeying the Lords' commands. We hope that our first acquaintance with the Brethren at Portis may not be our last.

W. H. SCHAFFER.

PORTIS, KANSAS

Poeple talked about Kansas being dry, but ask Dr. Bell; he seems to think differently. Dr. Bell was with us for a week, the last of April. He came in on the mud and had a good week with us, preached a few times and canvassed the rest of the time. Well, I think Bell likes his job but he said never again.

Then the next week Brother W. H. Schaffer, from Hamlin, Kansas, came to us, to help us in a week of meetings. Between the showers and amid some of them he preached each evening. Brother Schaffer is a young man, but loves the old Book and did not shun to declare its message to an interested crowd each night and over Sunday, and then stayed over to assist us in our spring Communion on Monday evening. Roads were bad and we did not have as large an attendance as sometimes, but it was a good service. There were no visible results by confession but the church was strengthened and inspired for larger service. We believe the church's doors are slowly closing up, and that the church dispensation will soon end and the Lord come for his own.

Then on Tuesday, May the 7th, I journeyed back with Brother Schaffer to Hamlin and helped him for a week, then helped them in their spring Communion. Hamlin church is not large and labors under some handicaps. One of the things they need most is an improved and larger building with some Sunday school rooms and a basement. It seemed to me if they would do this, with the splendid leadership of Schaffer and his good wife—both graduates of Ashland College, Hamlin might yet get and hold the lead in that town. Every community needs a whole Gospel church to preach and teach the whole Book.

I had my home with the Schaffers while there, and went out to a big dinner almost every day. Brethren women know how to cook a good old fashioned meal.

Hamlin, go on, keep up the fight. The prize is not at the beginning or the middle of the race but at the end!

Come again, Schaffer, we enjoyed your fellowship and labor.

S. LOWMAN.

NEW LEBANON BRETHREN CHURCH

Probably the outstanding event of the New Lebanon Brethren church which might interest the brotherhood was our twentieth Anniversary and Homecoming Day, held April 21st. It was just twenty years ago this month when the church was organized under the leadership of Brother Martin Shively, then pastor of the Dayton church, with about forty charter members.

So it was very fitting that the church should extend to Brother Shively an invitation to be the speaker of the day. The weather was not what we hoped it might be but it did not mar the enthusiasm of those present so the day was even more than we anticipated. Had it not begun to rain about the time folks were thinking about coming to the service we no doubt would have broken our record attendance. But in spite of the weather we had 290 present for the Sunday school session, with some coming for the 10:30 worship.

Brother Shively brought us three very able messages. In his remarks he pointed out some of the events of the church's history and called the congregation to take another great step forward. We are grateful to him for the splendid part he had in making the day a success.

The afternoon service was given over to the 20th anniversary events. A church history was given by the pastor. This report showed that the church had received nearly 550 members during these twenty years. The present membership stands at 420, with 375 on the active list. An interesting feature of this service was the fact that the original choir that sang on dedication day rendered three or four selections they sang then. Greetings from former pastors and friends were read and experiences of by-gone days were related.

The day was also designated as "Dollar Day." The first definite drive for funds for the proposed enlargement of our present building was launched. All those who contributed a dollar or more were placed on the "First Donor Honor Roll." $435 was thus realized, bringing the amount in the Building Fund up to the $2,700 mark.

So at this service we were not only led to look back over twenty years of progress, but also ahead toward yet further achievements in the interests of the church and the work of our Lord and Master.

A word should be said about the enlargement of the present building. The church voted to enlarge this summer, a building committee was appointed, and an architect secured to draw up plans. These plans are now ready to be submitted to the Building Committee. So the day should not be far distant when the work will begin on the enlargement program.

Beginning with the month of May and continuing throughout the summer months the first half hour of each Sunday evening service has been given over to the different Sunday school classes. They are also asked to print the Bulletin for the month in which they have charge. A prize will be given to the class having the best Bulletin and special recognition given to the class having the best program and largest attendance. So already quite an enthusiasm has been shown. This month has been given over to the Loyal Women's Bible Class, a class composed mostly of the grandmothers of the church and the month has been designated as Mothers' Month.

So we feel that our work is moving along in a splendid way. The attendance has been good, and with finances in splendid shape and with the proposed enlarged building in the near future, there is no reason why the brotherhood cannot expect great things from the New Lebanon Brethren church.
Pray for us. L. V. KING, Pastor.

SECURITY OF THE BELIEVER

Mr. Meyer said that one time when he was pastor at Leicester there was a strike. The working people smashed and ruined homes in their riot. One day they threatened to come into a house where there was a big brother riveting shoes in the attic upstairs and a little fellow down stairs. The little fellow feared they were going to break the house open. He went to the stairs and called his big brother:

"Tom, Tom, they are going to smash this door open! Hurry up and come down."

Tom was a strong, well-built man, and he came down and put his big body against the door and said:

"Now, youngster, you go on with your game. All the rioters in Leicester can't break this door open when brother Tom stands against it."

"And so," said Mr. Meyer, "the Devil often wants to come back into this house of mine, and I am afraid of him and when he comes along and swears he will take me by force, I go to the foot of the ascension ladder and cry:

"Christ, Christ, stronger than the strong man armed, make haste and come down! The Devil is going to get me!"

"And he seems to come," said Mr. Meyer, "like the lightning flash and puts himself against the door of my heart, and all hell can't break the door open."—William E. Biederwolf.

Prayer is the appointed means by which this highest kind of courage is fed. Through prayer our courage renews its youth like the eagle. The heart is invigorated into fresh ambition and endeavor. Its grip upon high ends is established, and it turns to the dull road with a new song. It is not so much that we acquire good spirits as that we obtain deepened communion with the renewing Spirit of God.—J. H. Jowett.

THE MAN WHO ABUSES HIS CHURCH

With few exceptions the person who is the loudest in his criticism of his church is weak in his support of his church. He would be like a fish out of water at prayer meeting, and if the pastor should call on him to pray on Sunday morning he would need first-aid treatment from a Red Cross nurse. Trace these bitter and loud critics one by one and you generally find them "honorary (?) members who know as little about the language of spiritual life as a Zulu knows about Sanskrit. They belong (?) to the church because they want an insurance policy (both covering fire and life) in the insurance company of the New Jerusalem and not because they have consecrated their lives on the altars of the church.

Honest criticism of the church and her workings is a wholesome thing, but that criticism should be done by men and women whose religious lives and loyal service entitle them to be heard. Time-serving, worldly-minded, selfish members who seldom attend church and make no sacrifice for the cause of Christ are not qualified to be official censors of the policy and program of the Church of God. And yet these are often the ones who try to dominate the life of the church and are generally at the front making and unmaking pastors. When such a censor rises up he should be asked what his life has amounted to as a consecrated, devout follower of Jesus Christ and the weight of his words should be measured by that test.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

PSALM ONE HUNDRED THREE

O thou soul and all within me, bless Jehovah,

And forget no more his blessings and his grace

Who forgiveth all thy sins, thy sickness healeth,

Who ransomed thee from sin's enthralling pace.

Who with mercies and with loving kindness crowneth,

Who with good things e'er thy mouth dost satisfy;

So thy youth, renewed, on eagle's wings he beareth,

While his goodness for oppressed ones is nigh.

He hath made his holy ways known unto Moses,

And hath shown his acts to seed of Israel's race;

He is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, Yet for aye, he chideth not, nor shows his face.

He hath not our sinfulness in wrath rewarded,

For his lofty heaven above the earth revealeth

Of his mercy, love, and pity for his children; For he knoweth every thought our frame concealeth.

Like the days of grass, man flourisheth as flowers, And the fleeting winds destroy his dwelling place; But the mercy of the Lord hath no beginning, And no ending hath his most abundant grace.

Unto such as keep his covenant of mercy, And uphold all his Commandments e'en to do them; For his throne hath he prepared within the heavens, And his kingdom ruleth o'er, beneath, and through them.

Bless Jehovah, all ye strong excelling angels, Ye who hearken to obey his sovereign voice; And ye hosts, and ministers that do his pleasure, And his works, and e'en my soul, bless and rejoice.

THE TWO PROCESSIONS

By Eleanor W. F. Bates

The sun shone in the east window and lay across the kitchen table, on which was an array of dishes. Mollie looked at the dishes, and a few tears came, but she wiped them away quickly when she heard a knock at the door.

She opened the door saying, "Oh, Dora, I was just wishing you would come!"

"I came to get you to go to see the procession," said Dora, who was Mollie's dearest friend.

"I can't," said Mollie sadly. "I want to ever so much, but I've got these dishes to do. Just look! See how many there are!"

"I should think there must be four times as many as we had," said Dora with surprise. "But your family is bigger than ours."

"That isn't the only reason," said Mollie. "We had five extra people to breakfast, because the lady across the way was sick, and mother invited them all over here, and then she went back with them to help them a little, and—and—she said I was big enough to wash dishes once in a while alone!"

Mollie could not help sniffing a little, but she bravely stopped a sob, which she was afraid was really going to have its own way, and added, "Of course I've seen the Boy Scouts' procession before, but not since Billy joined, and I do want to see my brother march!"

"Well, they haven't started yet, and maybe, if you let me help, we could get the dishes done before the procession gets by."

"It would be something just to see the tail end of it," sighed Mollie, "but Billy's in the front rank!"

The girls flew to work. Mollie stirred up a big pan of suds and put another of hot water besides the drainer, then handed some towels to Dora.

"This is the glass-towel," she said, "and here is another for the china."

"Oh, how pretty!" said Dora, looking at the towels she held in her hands. "Who marked this?"

"I did, for mother's birthday," said Mollie proudly. "I learned how at sewing school, and she was so surprised!"

The hot water and smooth towels made quick work, and the girls laughed and talked until piles of dishes showed the task finished.

"Now where shall I put them?" asked Dora, some cups in each hand.

"Mother told me to leave them on the dining-room table, because I am not tall enough to put them on the shelves."

They began to carry them carefully into the next room.

"Oh, see this pretty spoon!"

"That's mine," said Mollie.

"And this one?"

"That was Billy's when he was a baby."

"Then they shall lead the dishes," said Dora. "Oh, Mollie, let's make a procession of them! There's a file of knives, they are nice, straight soldiers, and here are lots of forks—they're soldiers too, only in different uniforms."

"And here's father and mother," gleefully continued Mollie, placing two table-spoons to the right and left. "But where's the band?"

"There's the drum," chuckled Dora, putting the little round silver sugar bowl down, "and here are the drumsticks," adding the sugar tongs.

"Well, let's not have any band except a drum corps," and Mollie with much laughter put all the napkin rings right behind the sugar bowl. "There!" she cried. "I don't know how many drums there are in a drum corps, but this is all right for our procession, anyway!"

"And these two little platters just alike shall be ambulances at the rear, in case any soldier is too old or too tired to march very long."

"Yes, but what shall we do for flags?"

"There they are!" and Dora caught up the towel that Mollie had marked, waving it over her head. Mollie took another, and they began marching around the table, singing "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

They laughed so much that they did not at first see a lady come to the dining room door. When they did, she was laughing too.

"This is our procession, mother!" cried Mollie.

"The Boy Scouts' procession is coming down the street," said the lady, "and you and Dora have just time to see it before it turns the corner. Hurry up!"—Zions Herald.

OUR SCHOOL

Of the great words of the English language the word "loyal" stands at the head. God is always looking for such. The business man or any man who runs big business is always on the lookout for someone who can be depended on.

The Brethren church holds a unique place among the denominations of Christendom. She has from her beginning, two hundred years ago, held closer to an exact grammatical construction of the language used in the New Testament than any other denomination, I except none. She started out with the idea that an exact analysis of the language used was better than much theology, so the heritage brought down to us is the denomination which we hold so dear.

We have taken the message given to us by our Master in simple, childlike faith, to believe and practice whatever is taught, though we may not understand all the whys and wherefores that some might be anxious to find out. Every member should be proud to be a member of such an organization. Feeling thus, let us be extremely loyal to every institution of the church and especially to our own school. Let us patronize it and support it in every way possible.

If at all possible let us send our children to it, and by our means contribute to it.

If the Brethren church is to go ahead as it should, it must have an institution which we can trust to give to our young people the teaching that is in accord with what we as a church stand for. If we do not stand by our college and make it a power in the church, then we will lose our golden opportunity to perpetuate our belief and the church will soon lose its individuality and we as a church will go down and God will put it on some other to take our place.

This thing of sending our young people away to other denominational schools will end up like the "Courtship of Miles Standish," when we will stand by and see another win the prize we so much coveted. Let us be boosters for all of our church enterprises, especially our one school of which we can be justly proud.

D. W. EARLY,
Grandview, Washington.

IN THE SHADOW

KERN—Mendel Edgar Kern, son of Brother and Sister Harriet Kern, departed this life at the family home of the Oakville, Indiana, on April 5, 1929, aged 10 years, 1 month and 23 days. Mendel was sick only a few days and his passing was a shock to his parents and schoolmates. He was a bright boy and had a large circle of friends. A touching tribute was read at the funeral by his school teacher. Besides his parents he is survived by a sister and two brothers. The funeral services were held from the Oakville Brethren church by the undersigned.

S. C. HENDERSON.

THOMASON—Alvin Charles Thomason, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Thomason, was born May 14th, 1903, and departed to be with Jesus, February 22d, 1929. Alvin gave his heart to the Lord in his teen age and united with the First Brethren church of Laverne. He was united in marriage with Miss Frances Sherman of Palmdale, January 11th, 1923. Alvin and Francis were both members of the First Brethren church, and active members of the Young Married Folks' Bible Class. Alvin was blessed with a sunny disposition and had a pleasant smile for everyone. He leaves to mourn his loss eight widowed fathers and mother, two brothers and a sister; many other relatives and a host of friends.

The funeral service was conducted by the pastor of the First Brethren church, A. L. Lynn. Several musical numbers were rendered by the choir and the auditorium of the church was crowded to capacity and the beautiful floral tributes were a wonderful testimony to the popularity of a departed friend. The special floral pieces sent by various organizations and friends from a distance, were especially attractive.

A. L. LYNN.

LAPP—Amy Alward Lapp was born June 21, 1847 in Canada, near Niagara Falls, and was a daughter of John and Elizabeth Alward. She was married to Jacob Lapp at Freeport, Ill., January 1, 1871. To this union were born six children, two boys and four girls. She and her husband now deceased, were baptized into the Church of the Brethren at Ames, Iowa, fifty-eight years ago. Later they united with the Brethren church at Salem, Oregon, and she has been a member of that church for thirty-five years. All of her children and grandchildren followed her splendid example and are members of the Brethren church. She passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. E. Bowman, February 26, 1929, aged 82 years, 8 months and 3 days. She is survived by one son, Frank Lapp of Carruthers, Calif., four daughters—Mrs. M. D. Early, Lost Creek, Ky., Mrs. Esther Luther, Mrs. A. E. Bowman and Mrs. T. J. Stoves, all of La Verne. There are 14 grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren, also one sister in the East.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

(This week I am writing upon the Resurrection Body, and of course this subject cannot properly be classed as one of the "Signs of the Times." But it is a sign of the times that the truth of the resurrection of the body is being denied in many places. The entire subject is one of intense interest to the devout Christian.—A. J. McClain).

"THE BODY OF OUR HUMILIATION"

In Philippians 3:21 the Apostle Paul declares that Christ at his coming will "fashion anew the body of our humiliation." It is not "our vile body," as the Authorized Version translates. Acts 8:33 uses the same Greek word in speaking of our Lord's "humiliation." And Luke 1:48 uses the same word in referring to the Virgin Mother's "low estate." The body of the believer is the body of his humiliation, the body of his low estate, but never "our vile body." It is wholly a pagan notion that the human body is something "vile." The Revised Version never did a better thing than in striking the word "vile" from this Philippian passage. The ancient Gnostic philosophers taught that the body was something vile, and the Apostle is opposing the teaching of these very men by showing that the believers' body is to be redeemed and at last made perfect.

True, just now it is "the body of our humiliation;" often weak, infirm, broken, diseased, full of aches and pains, bearing the marks of sin. But it is not a vile worthless thing. fit only to be cast aside when we shall enter upon that higher life with Christ. Some indeed affirm that the body is only a hindrance to the soul, and that at death we shall get rid of it forever. Others say that we shall have bodies in the eternal state, but that these bodies are to be wholly new creations, bearing no relation whatever to the first body. But the Scripture teaches otherwise. The believer will take the "body of his humiliation" up into heaven, only it is to be "changed" and "fashioned anew."

There is no contradiction in First Corinthians 15:37 where the Apostle says, "Thou sowest not the body that shall be." Certainly, the body which goes down into the grave is not the body that shall come forth, in all respects. It is to be changed and fashioned anew. As to appearance and character, it will not be the same body. But as to identity, it will be the same body of our humiliation. The Lord at his coming will "change" our body, but he will not exchange it. He will "fashion anew" our body, but he will not give us a new body.

The writer, for one, thanks God that this is so. Most of us have loved ones on the other side. We believe God utterly when he tells us in the Word that "to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord." We know that this is so, and yet, when the hallowed memories come surging in our hearts we find it impossible to think of these loved ones apart from the "body of their humiliation." How blessed, then, it is to know that the Lord Jesus, when he comes from heaven, will claim these dear bodies, and raise them up, and fashion them anew that they might be conformed to the body of his glory.

How can these things be, the skeptic may ask. According to what law or principle can a body gone down to the dust be raised up and fashioned anew into a glorious temple which is deathless? The answer is—it will not be according to any law or principle that we know. It will be "according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." This is the method of the Bible. It brings us into the presence of a Christ who is over all God blessed forever, and asks us to believe that he is able to raise the dead. I do not offer to explain how the astounding thing shall be done. On this point we are quite as ignorant as were the Christians of eighteen hundred years ago. When the Lord says he will raise our bodies from the dead and conform them to his own glorious Body, we must confess humbly that we do not know how he will do it. But we know him. And that is sufficient. "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able—."

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

36. I would like to ask you where we get the word Bible from. L. P.

The name by which we know the collection of Holy Writings, that is, the Holy Bible, dates from the fifth century A. D. The word "biblia" is the Anglicized form of the Greek word "biblia" a neuter plural noun meaning "small books." The phrase "ta biblia" means "the books." Hence the name denotes a collection of small books into a single volume. Before this designation was used the sacred books were called "The Writings" or "The Scriptures."

37. In a church where there are no elders other than the pastor what course should be pursued in reference to the anointing service, when the sick are explicitly told to call for the elders of the church? Is not every Brethren church obligated to have more than one elder so that this ordinance may be Scripturally observed? H. K.

This is a pertinent question. I can easily indicate what has been the custom in the past. A generation ago there were in almost all congregations of Brethren one or more elders. In which case the instructions of James could be literally complied with. Later there developed the plan of the single and settled pastor. There are even yet many congregations in which there lives an elder not in active service who may be called upon the occasion of the anointing. Where the pastor is the only elder in the church it has become the custom to have one of the deacons assist in the anointing. This is perhaps the prevailing practice of the present day.

However, without raising any controversial question, is it not likely that the Apostolic churches had more than one elder? The present writer so believes. To cite but a single reference we may take Titus 1:5, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge: . . ." So wrote Paul to Titus. Brethren have always been historically Presbyterian in form of government. When the division in the church occurred in the early eighties the "progressive" group in their reorganizationalism swung to an extreme form of Congregationalism. This perhaps accounts for the situation which prevails in many churches today in the matter of having but one elder.

A LIFE LOST

J. Campbell White tells the story of a rich man who was murdered a couple of years ago. The motive was robbery. The murderer supposed that just at that time the rich man had a large amount of money in his personal possession. A daily paper describing the case said: "Fortunately for the deceased, he had deposited the money the day before." All he lost was his life. And that is what many men are losing because they are absorbed in selfish quests and follow no higher vision.

Mr. White quoted some one who said that when a Christian begins to prosper it is always a question whether the kingdom of God is going to gain a fortune or lose a man.

The appalling indifference of many Christians to the tremendous task confronting the church can only be explained on the theory that the god of this world has blinded their eyes. They have been ensnared by the perils of prosperity, and while they are gaining the world they are forfeiting their lives. These are times when every man who claims to be a follower of Christ must stand up and be counted. Whatever the Christian's daily work, he is an enlisted soldier in the army of the Lord. Failure to be loyal just now is reprehensible to the last degree.—The Christian Intelligencer.

"Men are no more capable of understanding and than they were of understanding or appreciating the living Word, when he was amongst them."

You cannot push people up to a higher level of living, you must lift them up; and to lift them up you must first climb up yourself.

A Snob or a Servant, Which?

Snobbery is probably as old as human society, but it has remained for a courageous professor of this year, A. D. 1929, to give it academic approval. Young men of more than ordinary advantages, such as college graduates possess, have always shown a plenty of cockiness and self-conceit, but they have waited until now to be told that such an attitude is an asset and that they should seek to develop it and permit it to grow with the years. Those who were launching out upon the sea of life after having left the halls of learning, have long been counselled to work, to work honestly and hard, to work concentratedly and perseveringly, and thus to win and to achieve, and in their winning and achievement, to make a contribution to the world, but we have come to a day when an educator has the temerity to tell a class of young men graduates: "You must set before yourself a definite plan to be a ruling person. Be superior. Act superior. Talk that way. Think that way . . . I want to preach to you the gospel of being a snob—not allowing yourself to go to the level of the crowd that hasn't had the opportunities you have had." A man who has the daring to preach such a gospel deserves all the notoriety that such nonsense will bring him, and so we are not averse to mentioning his name. Professor Robert E. Rogers of the English department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology thus advised the seniors at their graduation banquet a few days ago. Certainly we may give him credit for originality if not for wisdom, and for knowing how to gain wide-spread publicity if not popular respect.

But such counsel is not sound, and people quite generally know it, and it would be unnecessary to take account of it, were it not for the fact that it follows the line of prevalent human weakness, which needs to be discouraged rather than to be encouraged. People know that snobbery is not attractive, and that it does not make for popularity nor for any real success, even though an eminent professor tells them it is so, but in the practice of life, much snobbery creeps in, especially among young people who have had more than average educational advantages. They do not need to be urged to be snobs, they are inclined to be snobbish enough by nature. They, and all of us, need rather to be reminded that the loftiest social attitude is fellowship and the most fundamental responsibility of life is service. Here is basic truth, and is witnessed to by reason and by revelation.

He who sets himself apart from the crowd as superior to the rest and refuses to mingle with his fellows, created after the same likeness and endowed with the same capacities and powers, brings upon himself the reproach and dislike of his fellows, and by his very conduct shows himself shallow, superficial and unworthy of the average man rather than his superior. It is that fellow-feeling and human sympathy, that concern for others and desire for helpfulness, such as characterized the humble Samaritan, that give to men quality of character and make them respected in the eyes of their fellows. Social aloofness and superiority conduct do not mark one with importance. Merely "putting up a front" does not bring success; there must be something genuine back of it. One may have self-confidence, but he must also possess strength. He may have aggressiveness, but he must also be considerate of others. He may be ambitious, but he must also be sincere and humble, and the qualities are not incompatible. He may put his best foot forward, but it must not be a mere stage play; it must represent a sincere desire to accomplish the best possible service. Cockiness, a display of self-conceit and snobbishness will mar the spirit and cause men to despise the effort.

Consider also Dr. Roger's advice about snobbery in comparison with the teachings and example of the Lord Jesus. Instead of encouraging the superiority attitude, he pronounced blessing upon the "poor in spirit" and the "meek." Instead of urging his students to "seek the leadership of the ruling classes" as Mr. Rogers did, Jesus said, "Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority over them. But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister: and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be the servant of all. For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10: 42-45). Instead of suggesting that they see how much cheap, unearned success they can get away with, Jesus urged service as the chief aim in life, he himself setting the example, saying, "I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke 22:27). And instead of exalting snobbery, he admonished through the Apostle Peter, "Ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

It is not therefore to be snobs and shieks and schemers that we should urge upon our young men who are leaving college halls. The world is not needing men who are disposed to sail through life as easily as possible and to endeavor to get the most for the least, but it is needing men who are ambitious to make the greatest possible contribution to the world, men who are willing to work, and to work hard, honestly and sincerely. It is needing young men who are ready to become true servants of mankind.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Christian Endeavorers, turn to your department this week and read the splendid reports. Others are in hand soon to be published. Those who have not yet reported, should do so promptly.

Brother C. C. Grisso, in a recent communication, says, "I am glad to tell you that my work is going nicely here (Sunnyside, Washington). Had a full house yesterday, which means about 300 people with possibly 50 of them young people."

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the progress of our mission cause in the Argentine. The report of the splendidly attended communion service at Tancacha where all members save one were present, is encouraging. The Catholic opposition to the Gospel cause is still quite pronounced.

Why complain when spiritual gains come hard? Evil does not surrender without a battle. The winning of the world to Christ is no picnic affair. Jesus plainly told his disciples that it would not be. But we have the assurance—and that should be sufficient—that he that is with us is greater than he that is against us.

We are glad to call attention to the organization of a new church at Osceola, near Goshen, Indiana. There were forty-three members present at the organization. We welcome them into our brotherhood and into the columns of the Evangelist. We hope they will soon have the Evangelist going into every home.

Shipshewana Rally Day is July Fourth, and all members of the Indiana district are urged to cooperate in making this a success. Brethren from other districts are welcomed as well. A number of special features are scheduled for that day, among them an address by Dr. Charles A. Bame.

Brother C. D. Whitmer, pastor of the church at Brighton, Indiana, says the people there are keeping steadily at work and pressing forward. He recently organized a Christian Endeavor society, and the young people are proving very faithful. Brother Whitted is giving much time to the Endeavorers, not only of his own church, but of the brotherhood through the Christian Endeavor helps he is writing for The Angelus.

A neat little announcement is just at hand telling us of the arrival in the home of Rev. and Mrs. H. H. Rowsey of Falls City, Nebraska, of another little pastor's assistant. Her name is Harriet Elizabeth, and she reached home on June 2nd, weighing seven and one-half pounds. We extend hearty congratulations to Brother and Sister Rowsey.

Brother R. I. Humbert tells of the successful meetings which he held in cooperation with Brother James S. Cook and his people at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania, where thirty-seven made the good confession at the services, and three others made the confession elsewhere. God was manifestly with these two consecrated servants as they labored together for the salvation of souls.

Rev. Claud Studebaker and family arrived in Pittsburgh last week where Brother Studebaker preached his first sermon on Sunday, June 9th as pastor of the First Brethren church of that city. Before he had taken final leave of Leon, Iowa, his former pastorate, Rev. and Mrs. Miles Taber, who have succeeded to the leadership of the Leon work, came upon the field ready to take up their duties. Brother and Sister Taber recently graduated from Ashland College and are full of hope and enthusiasm for their first work.

The city of Ashland, Ohio, is to be host to the Seventieth Anniversary State Sunday School Convention, on June 18 to 21. The leaders of the Brethren church and of the college have lined up behind this coming event to do their part to make it a success. The theme of the convention is "Complete Christian Living through Religious Education," and a large array of masters in Religious Education have been scheduled as speakers. The Ashland Brethren school will hope to see the other Brethren church schools of the state well represented.

A very urgent appeal has been sent out by the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, for funds to complete the great humanitarian work of salvaging the orphans of the World War and of the depredations and banishments of the days immediately following. Effort is being made to bring this work to a satisfactory conclusion at an early date, but it is stated that $1,040,108 must yet be raised by June 30th of this year, when it is hoped to complete the last quota of fourteen years of campaigning in behalf of what has been called "America's greatest single philanthropy." There is a program of vocational training for the youngest children. Those already outplaced receive personal supervision, counsel, medical care and some night school work. The budget is planned to carry on this program for two years after the campaign closes. If the budget is not raised the work overseas will have to stop abruptly. Children will have to face life alone and unprepared.

The Evangelist office was recently in receipt of a little magazine published by the Information Committee of the Philadelphia Union of Intermediate Christian Endeavor. In the officuary of the union, Brother Robert Crees, who sent us the magazine, has kindly indicated the number of Brethren young people who hold places of responsibility in the organization, and we are glad to note that the Brethren cause is well represented. We congratulate our young people of Philadelphia on the leadership they exercise in this large city union. The little paper carries an editorial about "The ICE Man." We may print it on Christian Endeavor page some time, when space permits, but in the meantime, we want to ask Intermediate Christian Endevorers what they mean when they speak of "ICE?" What Intermediate worker will write us a nice little explanation of "ICE" for publication in our Christian Endeavor department? Some of our readers will appreciate the information.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his canvass of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, for College Endowment funds. The gift of this church was $790.00, which makes the total of the Endowment Fund stand at $209,570.20. Brother W. R. Deeter is the faithful pastor of this church. Dr. Bell places his finger on one of the unsolved problems of our church when he mentions the loss sustained through the moving of members into centers of population where we have no church. Where will we find the solution? Possibly one source of improvement would be the intensive instruction of the obligations of Christian stewardship. New churches cannot be built without money, and we have more men right now than we have places to put them, so that the most urgent phase of the problem would seem to be to get our people to come forward with the funds sufficient to launch a really aggressive Home Mission program. Our Home Board is doing the best it can with the funds at its command.

We are pleased to present to our readers a report of the recent dedication of a new church at Ellet, Ohio, and to supply a picture of the building, as well as the likenesses of pastor and dedication preacher. The Ellet Brethren are justly proud of their new plant, which is quite commodious and substantial. Brother Floyd Sibert, the aggressive pastor, deserves much credit for this splendid achievement. And he has standing right back of him a group of most consecrated and sacrificing people who have given with a generosity that would put many churches to shame. The church has accomplished a great work, not only in the erecting of this new house of worship, but in the addition of new members as well. Brother B. F. Owen, who officiated at the dedication, has been engaged in evangelistic meetings at this church so often and has been such an important figure in the building up of the membership that the pastor wishes to honor him by having his picture appear with the dedication report. Both pastor and evangelist are strongly convinced that Ellet must be put on full time service next year, if the unusually bright opportunity that there exists is to be taken advantage of. And we are of the same mind as they.

A personal communication from Brother L. G. Wood informs us that he has "received one by baptism since last report and the work is moving along very nicely. Our Daily Vacation Bible School was begun May 3rd," he says, "and promises to be the best yet held there. There were eighteen at our prayer meeting last Wednesday night and a good interest was manifest. As our present membership is nearly all new we are studying the principles of Brethrenism, and the members are much pleased with the study. We are expected to increase our Bible school attendance by some summer activities at the close of the D. V. B. S." We are glad for this encouraging word regarding the work at Fort Scott, Kansas, and we especially commend his effort to indoctrinate his people in the principles of Brethrenism. We are of the opinion that most of our churches, even where the membership has had long acquaintance with Brethrenism, would be profited by an occasional re-study of the things that distinguish us as a separate group of the body of Christ. It does good to have our minds refreshed, our convictions reinforced, and our participation in the forms made more meaningful and vital. Besides there are new members being added and young people coming on, who need to be instructed and built up in loyalty to Brethren principles.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER THIS WEEK—

Brother Floyd W. Taber, whose address is 23 bis rue de St. Cloud, Chatillon-s-Bagneux, Seine, France, says: "I would appreciate very much the prayers of the brotherhood for my P. C. N. examinations, which begin June 10th and will probably extend over most of the month. There are three series of examinations; those in laboratory work, in addition to both written and oral examinations on the course of study. These are not the baccalaureate examinations in which I failed last October, and which I expect to attempt again this coming October, but instead a pre-medical examination in physics, chemistry, zoology and botany." Brother Taber says further that less than one-third of the French students succeed in these examinations, though they are somewhat easier than the baccalaureate, and "it is only in the assurance of the Lord's leading and of the prayers of his people that I dare attempt them." He wants your prayers that God may be strength and wisdom unto him.

Brother C. D. Whitmer asks prayer for his work at Brighton, Indiana, where he is serving as pastor.

Brother G. E. Drushal continues his request for prayer that the will of the Lord may be done in the mission work in Kentucky.

Brother C. F. Yoder requests prayer for the mission work in the Argentine.

Divinely Chosen

By Rev. W. I. Duker

(Baccalaureate Sermon Preached before the Graduating Class of Ashland College, June 2, 1929)

Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and who will go for us? Then said I: Here am I; send me.—Isaiah 6:8.

Whatever is to be our task in life, be it either the Gospel ministry or the field of professionalism or business; our preparation and our aim should be the same. No aim or goal that actuates the young minister should in any wise be lacking in the heart of the man who is preparing for any other field of service. We be all servants of the most High God, regardless of the field in which we labor.

This text is found in the sixth chapter of Isaiah, that impressive chapter, wherein we read of the vision of the throne of God and the winged seraphim. These tests are still profitable for teaching, for admonition and instruction in righteousness. Here we see the picture of a soul-burdened prophet, a minister of God whose divine call summoned him to proclaim unpleasant things, burning words of condemnation against existing evils, as well as glorious messages of hope. Here we see him overwhelmed with the vision of Jehovah and the consciousness of his own sinfulness. He hears the heavenly voice enquire with all the pathos of a heavenly tongue: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" He stands in awe and reverence until the seraphim touched his mouth with a live coal from off the altar and then with a boldness which is half humbleness he answers, "Here am I, send me!"

1. Three things are outstanding in the vision of Isaiah. First, may we never forget that no one is ready for the great battle of life, no one is fully prepared to fulfil his divine mission, who has not been given to see the secret place of the most high. No one can preach a holier concept of God than he himself hath seen. No man can preach a greater Christ than he himself has personally known. Wonderful visions of God are not all in the days of yesterday. The holy one of Israel still speaks to men. Let us not perpetuate the error of assuming that ages ago God made the world and established all its movements and all its contents under fixed laws of nature, and then left all things to move onward under the dominion of an unchangeable law. Our present day philosophy, as well as our theology repudiates that concept of nature and of God. The holy one has not withdrawn afar off, but is at all times nearer to us than we think. The ancient theopanies have all been eclipsed by the revelation of God in Christ Jesus reconciling the world unto himself, "and we all with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image."

Dr. Matheson, of Edinburg, affirms that there is not a religion in the world that does not in some way presuppose the doctrine of an incarnation. He insists that it "Pervades the whole circle of thought. It animates the worship of the Brahman, it underlies the creed of the polytheist, it is bound up in the philosophy of the platonist, it is necessary to the belief of the theist, it is the life and the soul of the faith of the Christian." The fundamental idea is that God shows himself to man! May we as we face the tasks and battles of life, court this privilege, yea, may we insist that this vision become an integral part of our knowledge. God talks as familiarly with men today as in the days of Abraham or of Isaiah. Let me quote the language of a saintly minister of Christ: "The Celestial City is full in view; its glories beam upon me, its breezes fan me, its odors are wafted to me, its music strikes upon my ear, and its spirit breathes into my heart. The sun of righteousness has been gradually drawing nearer and nearer, appearing larger and larger, as he approached, and now he fills the whole hemisphere, pouring forth a flood of glory, in which I seem to float like an insect in the beams of the sun; exulting, yet almost trembling, while I gaze on this excessive brightness, and wondering with unutterable wonder why God should deign to shine upon a sinful worm."

This declaration of Edward Payson is comparable with the vision of Isaiah. And like unto these men of God other experiences of many Christian saints might be recorded in great number. Martin Luther, John Bunyon, Richard Baxter, Jonathan Edwards, and Matthew Simpson had visions and revelations of God as potent as those of any Hebrew prophet of the former times. And the Christian revelation possesses a content far in advance of those given to the ancient fathers and prophets. Let no one say that these experiences are only idealistic fancy and expressions of poetic ecstasy. They breathe the same spirit that is apparent in the holiest oracles of God. Listen to Charles Wesley, as he sings:

Long my imprisoned spirit lay
Fast bound in sin and nature's night;
Thine eye diffused a quickening ray;
I woke, the dungeon flamed with light;
My chains fell off, my heart was free,
I rose, went forth and followed thee.

II. The second thing to notice in this divine revelation is the effect of the vision on the human heart. In the case of Isaiah, he was overwhelmed with a sense of his own sinfulness. As he felt keenly his sinfulness, he cried out in deep motion: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips—for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of Hosts." The natural effect of visions like unto this lead us normally to a keen sense of sin. There is nothing more terrible today than our view of sin. All too often we gaze upon some terrible sin without a blush of shame but often rather with a certain sense of allowance. The awfulness of sin, is in many instances, today, almost entirely gone—that is our sense of sin. The sin remains as always—a stench in the nostrils of God. When the people of Israel beheld the majesty of God on the mount, they trembled and stood afar off and said unto Moses: "Speak thou with us, and we will hear, but let not God speak with us, or we die." Manohah felt like terror when he said: "We shall surely die, because we have seen God." Simon Peter showed the same kind of conviction, when on perceiving the supernatural power of Jesus, he fell on his knees and cried out: "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord." Such profound and far reaching conviction of sin is indispensable to the serious and earnest man of God. If we are prepared to recognize sin and its workings, to be ready to fear its terrible consequences and to turn a deaf ear to its pleadings, then it will not be able to thwart us completely in our plans and desires.

It is well for one just starting out in the great battle of life to know that many people to whom he will go, will not receive his message, though it be a message of helpfulness and constructive effort. His work will come to many a heart that is already filled with other voices.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Martin Shively, D.D.

XXII. Elder Jacob C. Cassel

One of the things which impresses me deeply as I write about the leaders of "Yesterday," is the fact that of the twenty about whom I have written, and the larger group about whom I want still to write, only a very few have been dead for as much as twenty years, and yet they seem all but unknown to very many people who do me the honor of reading the few things which I say about them. In their day, they were indeed among the stalwart leaders in the church, and while not a few of them would have scoffed at the statement, the fact is that they were the big men of their day, so far as the Brethren church is concerned. Alas, how fleeting is earthly fame! How soon we are forgotten! How poor are the compensations of life, when motivated by seeking a "place in the sun!" One is fairly safe in judging the future by the past, and so far as he is concerned, he cannot fail to see that if twenty years or even less, all but erase the names of those who have gone, he need not expect anything more for himself. The only avenue of escape from oblivion, so far as men are concerned, lies in having one's name inscribed in the Lamb's Book of Life. God does not forget.

Brother Cassel was born of the finest Tunker stock in the world, for his mother was a great granddaughter of both Peter Becker and Christopher Saur. He was born in Philadelphia May 19, 1849, and became a member of the church of his fathers in 1876. He was an intensely active man, and entered at once into real work for the church and her Head—Jesus Christ, whom he served until the end of his life. He was one of the most wideawake and alert men I have ever known, and both in his business life and his church life, he was always busy and at the fore. No man was more widely employed by his church than was Brother Cassel, for he served actively and faithfully on every board created by the general conference,—Foreign Mission Board, General Mission Board, Publication Board, and College Trustee. If there were other standing committees or boards, he was more or less actively associated with them all, until failing health called a halt, but even then, his interest did not wane until he was called home. And he was not only a member of these boards, but an officer on all of those of which he was a member, because not only his willingness to serve, but more especially his ability to do so, made him the logical choice of his brethren.

Brother Cassel was ordained to the ministry at 47 years of age, and did much preaching and writing, along with his business activities. When the mission was opened in Montreal, Canada, and the time came to get it really on its feet, the Foreign Board, of which he was then a member, sent him there to serve both as pastor and builder. He spent several years there, giving up only when declining health forced such a step. As preacher or writer, he was both fearless and incisive, and those who read his productions, or heard his messages, never suspected that he had but twenty months of training in school, during his whole life. The foundation thus laid was so effectively built upon, that he would have passed anywhere as a well educated man. Such an attainment was only possible as a result of prodigious work, and application, but he surmounted the handicap, and left a record of achievement.

I met Brother Cassel first at the general conference of 1887, where I first met so many of the men about whom I have been writing. He was not a large man, either in height or weight, but what he lacked in size, he more than made up for in his intense earnestness and activity. At that time he was 38 years of age, immaculately garbed, keenly alive to the importance of the meeting, and actively participated in all the discussions. I remember that I was very greatly impressed with him, as I also was with some other men whom I had never seen before. I was only a boy in the ministry, and hardly dared to hope that I would ever be able to count these men among my friends, but such they became and for their death, I feel the poorer, but for the fact that I knew them and loved them, I am surely the richer.

Brother Cassel was in failing health for some years before he was called home, and whatever his original trouble was, it finally culminated in the development of tuberculosis, which brought him to his death. I cannot recall the date of his death, though it must have been at least ten years ago, but I do know that while others have filled the places in which he served, and thus the work has gone on, his going has left a gap in the hearts of those who knew and loved him. His home church,—Philadelphia, First, suffered a great loss, in his death and as a result of it, as did the entire brotherhood, for men of his ability and devotion are not over plentiful at any time. But as I have already said, the work goes on, though the workers fall, for God does not leave himself without witnesses. There are no doubt, times when most of us feel that our places will be hard to fill, and it is a rude shock to us to be told that not only will they be filled, but in a time which seems incredibly short, we shall be all but forgotten by those who shall come after us. The purpose of these papers is to refresh the memories of those who knew and loved the workers now fallen, and to assure those who have newly followed them into places of responsibility, that all the virtues are not limited to the present generation, but that among those whose graves are green with the sod of years, at whose last resting place, moss begins to accumulate on the headstones, there were men and women who did their full share toward making possible the blessings we now enjoy.

Full Salvation—The leaders of our ministry have stopped preaching the Wesleyan doctrine of full salvation for fear that people will regard them as cranks. If we keep it up, we might well wipe out Paul's epistles, Wesley's sermons and our Methodist hymn book.—Bishop J. F. Berry.

Divinely Chosen

There is the young man who has great possessions in his eye, or his ear is ravished with infatuating siren songs. There is the young woman charmed with the fascinations of fashion and display, like the daughters of Zion to whom Isaiah prophesied. There is the ambitious politician ready to barter away his honor for a place of power. There is the radical socialist and the wild anarchist who cry out against all constructive forces and decline to adopt any plans of general helpfulness. And there is the plutocrat and monopolist like those of whom Isaiah spoke, who join house to house, and add field to field, and oppress the hireling in his wages. And there is the pitiable miser, the slave of the covetousness which is idolatry. And along with all these is that countless throng who "walk in the counsel of the ungodly, and stand in the way of sinners, and sit in the seat of the scornful." But the young man or young lady awake to a definite sense of sin and realizing its presence is not unduly disconcerted by its manifold appearance. You have seen the Lord and have been awakened to the awfulness of sin and are ready to meet it upon the battlefield and hold fast to your faith.

III. The third fact to be noticed in connection with Isaiah's call is the touching of his mouth with the live coal from off the altar of Jehovah. One touch of that seraphic fire, and his inner life is transfigured as by an electric flash and he becomes a new creation. This has not been done by education. This has not come as a natural result of any degree of social service rendered. It is the divine gift known as the "new birth." Here then is another great lesson. Each is to work in his own distinctive personality. The coal has touched your mouth, use it as a man of God. Each must know and see for himself, and not for another. He must needs be a man of heavenly vision. He must have in some deep certain way essentially what Paul speaks of when he tells us that his gospel was not received from man but through revelation of Jesus Christ. He must know that God has called him through his grace and revealed his Son in him by a profound experience of his soul. He must know the beatitude of the pure in heart who see the living God. Quite apart from all delusion or self-hallucination, the chosen man of God at holy hours may see God, as did Moses, in some burning bush; like the child Samuel, he may hear him calling in the silence of the night, and giving him a message adapted to make the ears of them that hear it tingle. He may have visions as impressive and abiding as that in which Isaiah saw the seraphim take a live coal from God's altar and touch it to his lips. Paul tells us he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision; but at first he withdrew a while into Arabia, and I imagine him going away to the back of the wilderness in Horeb, where Moses saw the burning bush, and where Elijah had his revelation of the still, small voice. Perhaps it was then and there that he was caught up to the third heaven, and heard unspeakable words (2 Cor. 12-4). All this awaits a man whose mouth has been touched with a live coal from off the altar. What a blessed thing to covet and to possess!

Thus we are shown the blessed privilege of serving our country by serving our God. Into this glorious ideal we see the three essential elements—a vision of the high and holy one, a profound conception of sin, and the cleansing touch and baptism of celestial fire. By such heavenly anointing all natural endowments, all acquirements of knowledge, and all forces whatever, that enter into the texture of personal character are transfigured into so many powers of God. Thus is one caught up into living fellowship with God, and glowing with his baptism of fire as if he were exalted among the seraphim, he will be eager to fly the wide world over, and carry coals of heavenly light and fire to every people.

The Heart's Counsels

By Frank Gehman

"Wherefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will make manifest the counsels of the hearts."—1 Corinthians 4:5.

How straying are the counsels of men's hearts indeed! Every evil act that was ever perpetrated was born in some man's thinking at an inopportune and unfortunate, or else wilfully debauched moment. In a crisis a man does not act contrary to all that has gone on before in his life. Those were troublous times for a truth in Russia when near the conclusion of the world war she was withdrawing her troops from the frontier. Internal conditions made human life cheap. It is said that in a certain city a man associated with some of the existing powers in that place was suspected of having been a soldier. If the suspicion were correct it would prove him an enemy, either hiding under this cover for safety or for a more malign purpose. One day an official determined to ascertain, if possible, whether or not the man was a soldier. The man in question was called to the office upon some pretext. During the comparatively unimportant conversation the official suddenly broke it with the sharply spoken military command, "Attention!" Instantly the man, truly a soldier, came to attention. His identity was revealed. He was successfully and cleverly unmasked in what was to him a crisis moment. He merely acted unconsciously upon his former training and experience. In the same manner each incident of life calling forth a reaction from us reveals something more of our experience or our training, mental and spiritual, which has gone before. Thus the critical and unexpected circumstance may call forth a sudden definite reaction of a nature and type to unmask us. Perhaps heretofore we had cleverly hidden our thought life, the counsels of our hearts which caused this act. We had thought ourselves secure in the citadel of our own mental life. The crisis came. Sudden action was demanded, and we revealed our spiritual and mental training. Mayhap we were chagrined, disappointed with ourselves, but the counsels of our hearts had only been made manifest.

Perchance the occasion were a more happy one. The experiences that had gone before were better, more worthwhile. Our spiritual life was deeper, richer, purer. Our mental training was truer, was more what God desires and what the Scriptures teach us. Again we acted upon the basis of what had gone before in our lives. How different the result, however, this time! In this case there were different heart counsels to be made manifest.

What sort of counsels do our hearts harbor? Will their manifestation be as the latter instance, happy, joyous, uplifting? If so we need not fear the sudden and unannounced critical moment which may beset us any hour of the day. We can look calmly out upon life, possessing our souls in peace, knowing that he whom we have trusted will meet our every need now that we still trust him. But, and shame to us, not even the heart counsels of all professing Christians are so. Many are like the former instance. Even many claiming to follow Christ have coveted and provided a haven for counsels the divulgence of which would shame them. They fear for their fellow-men to see what they cling to, thought the continue them openly in the sight of God. They may be shamed by the fact, yet do not seek to remove their feet from the pathway to certain disillusionment and exposure. They entertain a false pride and maintain a false front. They think to hide from men these counsels which to reveal would be but to condemn. They dread the event that shall manifest their secret things. The outer life of boldness is only a cover to the inner life of uncertain and unnameable fears. They may seem happy without, but there is no joy within.

Thus these two types of men go through life. The one is uncaredful of the day that shall expose the counsels of his heart. He knows that it has counseled therein glory to God and praise to the Son, and these are they that shall be revealed. The other remains fearful of the same moment in his life. He thinks, with dread, that he might reveal what he has nurtured, that he might uncover a former disregard for that which pertains to our Lord and Master.

However, that isn't what Paul is talking about here. He isn't referring to just any day when a crisis may reveal some of the counsels of our hearts. He is talking of no time "before the time, until the Lord come." He is talking, not of times, but of "the time" when the Lord shall come, "Who will make manifest the counsels of the hearts." Friend, if you dread the crisis time in life which reveals some one of the counsels of your heart, what are you going to do when this time comes? It will not be one counsel that will be revealed; all will be made manifest. It will not be a disclosure of one thing to a few witnesses; it will be a manifestation of all to all. It will not be a divulgence hemmed about with hazy uncertainties and partly covered by attempted disguises; it will be clear, certain, manifestly open to view. It will be to our advantage, and much to the glory of God if we think on these things while those counsels are in the making. It will do but little good to think on them after they have passed the stage of execution. We may turn back the hands of the clock, but we cannot turn back the hands of time.

How the thought of that day of manifestations ought to enliven us to finer, richer, purer meditations. Would we dread to have each counsel that has lodged within our hearts this day manifested? If as Christians we answer, "Yes," there is need for a bringing forth of enemies and a slaying of them. What shall be the praise that we shall have from God in that day? Oh! how we ought to draw near to our Lord, to his precious bleeding side, each thought and each motive beneath his control. Some great day there is going to be a manifestation of all the counsels of the hearts. In that day what will matter that the world did not appreciate our better thoughts! We shall receive our praise from One greater than all. In that day what shall matter that the world even derided our most Spirit-filled counsels and chided our attempts to execute them! One smile, one word of praise from him who in that day sits there giving forth praise will outweigh all else. Yes, to please him we should strive. What higher motive can flood the soul, or vibrate the very chords of our beings? None. To please him, to serve him, to praise him, to glorify him—if these are both the components and the seasonings of our heart counsels with what joy and what rapture we shall behold that day. Are you eager for its coming when shall be made manifest the counsels of your heart?

Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

The hope of sinful man is "the love that will not let us go."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

DIFFICULTIES CREATED BY CATHOLIC DEPUTIES AT PRAGUE

The present government of Czecho-Slovakia plans to evade the evils of the Austrian monarchy toward Protestants, and under the Republic to continue permission to have Catholic Clerical deputies in the Parliament at Prague, though it is so Protestant in its tendencies. Unfortunately, there were two priests, Fathers Hlinka and Juriga, who appeared as antagonists in public debate on such significant occasions as to seriously affect the waning reverence for the Roman church, where the Protestant cause is moving with such rapid strides. The Slovak Catholic bishops have been so embarrassed by these hostilities as to lead them to secure an edict from the pope that henceforward there can only be one Clerical delegate in the Parliament to every ten of the laity. Rome is learning from her existence in our own land that the church makes her greatest spiritual advances when detached from political interests and utterly free from secular restrictions and embarrassments. Nothing is more evident than that the Gospels are the sanest of all systems, and that in reality "My kingdom is not of this world." All this experience is most fortunate in its instruction to the rest of the religious world. The Church of England now has bishops in the House of Lords, but the nation is beginning to discover that its hopes do not lie in this alliance, but rather in the entire separation of church and state. Herein will be found their true liberty wherewith Christ has made men free.—The Presbyterian.

THE CRIME WAVE AMONG CHILDREN

A recent survey of a congested section of an East Side area in New York City, where the population approaches the number of 220,000, gave the commission appointed an opportunity to get close to the problem which concerned them. The area, too, was sufficient to protect the inquirers of causes of crime to judge juveniles, conditions for a broad survey, rather than to make general inferences from exceptional cases. Three main causes were found to be specially vicious in their general influence—cheap movies, dirty poolrooms and poor housing. The value of these inquiries and close inspections is a means of stirring the public conscience, by the publication of these bad conditions. Crime among adults is laid to one big cause these days, the cause of prohibition. We all see how utterly absurd the charge is and how very inadequate the application proves, when made to the problem of crime among children. The cheap movie with its portrayal of craft and suggestion of crime is beyond all question a great menace, and the other features mentioned also make their full contribution to the evils under survey.—The Presbyterian.

EXTRATERRITORIALITY IN THE UNITED STATES

A resolution has been introduced in the special session of Congress declaring that persons in the diplomatic service accredited to the United States who provide liquor to their guests will not be acceptable to our government. After the years in which Western nations have been a law unto themselves in respect to their nationals in China, one naturally has a little hesitation about objecting to the exercise of extraterritorial rights in the foreign diplomatic service in the United States. But when the laws of this country are openly and publicly flouted by the wholesale importation of alcoholic liquor and its lavish supply to guests inside and outside of diplomatic buildings, we can at least understand how Japan and Turkey and Siam and China felt while all foreigners residing in those countries insisted on diplomatic immunities and privileges.—The Congregationalist.

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK IN MEXICO

In Mexico the outlook for adjustment of the unsatisfactory relations of the government and the Church has become more hopeful. President Portes Gil stated on May 1st that the government did not desire to persecute any religion and that "the Catholic clergy, when they wish, may renew the exercise of their rites with only one obligation, that they respect the laws of the land as the ministers of other denominations are doing." This was regarded by Archbishop Ruiz, senior of the Mexican Catholic hierarchy, as so conciliatory that he reciprocated by saying that "the Church and her ministers are prepared to cooperate with him in every just and moral effort made for the improvement of the people." President Portes Gil replied on May 7th that "if Archbishop Ruiz should desire to discuss with me the way to bring about cooperation in the moral effort to better the Mexican people which he desires, I shall have no objection to talking with him on the subject."

While this does not settle the controversy or minimize the obstacles, the atmosphere becomes more friendly. And nothing counts like a friendly atmosphere in religious disputes.—The Living Church.

READ THE BIBLE, SAYS HOOVER

In his address at the closing session of the National Federation of Men's Bible classes, which met a few days ago in Baltimore, Maryland, President Hoover gave expression to the following sentiment regarding the reading of the Bible:

"There is no other book so various as the Bible, nor one so full of concentrated wisdom. Whether it be of the law, business, morals or that vision which leads the imagination in the creation of constructive enterprises for the happiness of mankind he who seeks for guidance in any of these things may look inside its covers and find illumination.

"As a nation we are indebted to the Book of books for our national ideals and representative institutions. Their preservation rests in adhering to its principles."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

CHURCH UNION IN SCOTLAND

A wireless dispatch from Edinburgh, dated May 24, and published in the New York Times of the following day, reports scenes of enthusiasm attending the final decision by the general assemblies of the Church of Scotland and of the United Free Church to enter into a union, effective next October, to form a national church to be known as the Church of Scotland. Negotiations to this end have been under way for twenty years and have gained momentum with the conviction of a great majority of Free Churchmen that the conditions that occasioned the original Disruption in 1843 have disappeared, and that by acts of 1921 and 1925 the Church of Scotland freed itself from state control. A minority in the Free Church, however, holds that this is not the case, and, believing the union contrary to the principle of religious equality and the voluntary support of religious ordinances, is likely to duplicate the action of a Presbyterian minority in the movement for union in Canada, maintaining a continuing Free Church. There were, however, only thirty-nine dissentients who represented this anti-union view in the Free Church Assembly, while in the Church of Scotland gathering of seven hundred delegates only three voted against union.—The Congregationalist.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. 1:3, 4.

MONDAY

Bless the Lord.—A man bless God? Not in the ordinary sense of the word, certainly. We understand it, rather, as the equivalent of, "Let us give praise, or thanks, unto God!" These lines are being written on Mother's Day; just as we need to be reminded of the many taken-for-granted things we owe to Mother, so we need to be reminded of the many taken-for-granted things for which we should be praising God. As Moody said, "Forget not ALL his benefits!" Read Psalm 103 very carefully, with this in mind.

TUESDAY

God.—God as a belief is indelibly fixed in the minds of men everywhere. The great tragedy through the ages has been that God himself, because he was unseen, has seemed unreal, an impersonal abstraction. In attempting to make him real, idols were made, but this only resulted in making the thing seen (the idol), more real than the thing typified (God), and idol worship was the result. Standing out from among all other "gods" is the personality of the "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ"—the God made known through the life and teachings of our Lord. John 1:1-17.

WEDNESDAY

Father of our Lord.—Just what is summed up in this expression we may never know; but we do know that such a relationship existed, and that in spite of the Father's great love for his son, he sent his only begotten son to be the propitiation for our sins. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! Read John 3:14-21.

THURSDAY

Spiritual Blessings.—The most ungodly may enjoy temporal blessings while the believer may, or may not. But only the believer himself may cheat himself out of ALL spiritual blessings. Around the Family Altar, it would be well to pause while each one names some spiritual blessing that is ours in Christ Jesus. Spiritual life, instead of spiritual death, is certainly one; for others, read Gal. 5:16-26.

FRIDAY

In Christ.—All blessings are in Christ, for without him we are without hope and without God in the world. But "He that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Read Col. 1:9-29.

SATURDAY

Chosen.—The mind of man can scarcely conceive of it: man, the creature, chosen by the God that made the heavens, and the earth, and all that in them is! No reason for pride or self-conceit, but rather for humility; why? Chosen for a definite purpose, too: "That we should be holy and without blame before him in love." Without him, of course, such a thing would be impossible; this is, then, just one more of the "All spiritual blessings in Christ." Read 1 Cor. 2:9; also, Rom. 8:25-31.

SUNDAY

The Beginning.—"In the beginning," God created the heaven and the earth. But it was even before the beginning, before the foundation of the world, that he had planned these wonderful blessings for them that are the called according to his purpose. As we look forward through the ages of loving kindness that shall be ours in Christ Jesus, our hearts are both humbled and thrilled, to worship and to service. O come, let us worship, and bow down! Read Psalm 139.

How Far Can We Make Education Christian?

What may be done to keep our schools from becoming atheistic?

By Robert C. McQuilken, Dean of Columbia Bible School, Columbia, S. C.

EDUCATION in America is in a ferment. That there is a real crisis facing us in this vital field is the conviction of a large number, if not of nearly all, of our most brilliant and capable educational leaders. In newspapers and magazine, in addresses in every sort of convention, men who take front rank as educationists are boldly saying that we are missing the way, that our whole philosophy of education must be revised, that the multiplied millions being poured into our great institutions are not bringing forth the expected fruit.

Amid the differing viewpoints on what the disease really is, amid the varying solutions proposed, it is a striking fact that there is a practically unanimous voice on one great principle, namely, that the chief end of all true education is the development of character. And there is a fairly unanimous agreement that whatever else our American system of education is producing it is failing today as never before to produce the thing that is its chief glory, true manhood and true womanhood of the highest type.

Thousands of Christian parents are fearful of what their sons and daughters will meet in the colleges, both in classroom and in the social life outside. And well they may be.

The head of one of the finest of our Christian schools for boys, a school that ranks at the top educationally as well as in its Christian atmosphere, within the past year attended two of the most notable of educational gatherings in America. Our greatest men in the field of education and philosophy addressed these meetings, which drew together leaders from all over the country. This Christian educator, himself a Doctor of Philosophy and a practical educator of many years' experience, was amazed at what these brilliant speakers were able to give. He talked personally with them and with other educators attending the conventions to see just what place they gave to Jesus Christ and the Bible. He found they either had no "religion," or gave it no vital place in their program. He summed up the conventions by saying, "They are blind leaders of the blind." And these are our highest, the men who, speaking from the human standpoint, are really controlling the educational destinies of America.

Dangerous Education

Again and again the heads of colleges have conferred together on the moral breakdown among young people, or the turning away from old standards of religion and life. They recognize a critical situation, but they are helpless in coping with it. They are vainly seeking to produce character without supernatural life, or seeking life without Christ, the only author of life.

So-called "religious education" in many colleges, and in special schools of religious education, is rapidly becoming more dangerous than the out-and-out "secular" schools. Ernest Gordon's book, "The Leaven of the Sadducees," has set forth the almost unbelievable situation in the field of religious education, the deliberate campaign backed by millions of dollars to capture the college and educational world for the Modernist view of the Bible. He shows beyond dispute that this view at its best is Unitarianism, and in its true essence is atheism. However, his fearful survey of actual conditions, with but little comment apart from the facts, concludes with a review of the glorious evangelical revival that was the answer to the same movement of unbelief and atheism of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The defeat of present "Modernism" is just as certain.

This present turmoil in education, what many leaders are calling a chaotic condition, presents a glorious opportunity to Christian schools and colleges. We may at once admit that there is no practical possibility, in this age, of an ideal solution. But this does not mean that much may not be done to make education Christian, and to hinder in some measure the movement to make education in America entirely secular and even atheistic. As the distinctively Christian schools and colleges face this opportunity, we may well consider some questions that perhaps few Christian educators have ever frankly and fully faced:

What is real Christian education, or education from the Christian standpoint?

How far is it practicable for Christian schools and colleges to make their education Christian in this age?

Can the American public school system, and State-controlled institutions, be influenced in any degree by these Christian principles?

And first let us view the situation so far as it concerns our present State-controlled education in America.

The most tragic fact today in the really glorious educational system of America is the secularization of education. That sounds a bit technical and a bit tame, so let us put it in other words. We have separated God from any vital share in education. We still allow him a pre-eminent place in the rather contracted and often despised field of "religious education." And that field, we may say in passing, is becoming increasingly recognized and given a high place in educational circles just in proportion as God's voice is hushed and other voices are given the predominant place.

The great Protestant principle of the separation of church and State is a sound necessary principle in this age. But a fatally false interpretation of that principle has resulted in the separation of the State and God. Education has been turned over to the State, and the principle of the separation of the church and State has been invoked to keep God and his Word, Christ and his salvation, out of education. That unbelievers should do this is but to be expected. The tragedy is that Christians have accepted this verdict, and have permitted education to be secularized. They have agreed to the distinction between "education" and "religious education," with the implication that God and the Bible are to have no part in secular "education."

Many Christian leaders believe that the constitutional provision that Congress shall make no law respecting the establishing or supporting of religion means that the Bible should be barred completely from all State-controlled schools, on the ground that it is a religious book. Likewise Christian teachers should say nothing in the classroom that relates in any way to Christian teaching. In a word, education should be "neutral" as to God and the Bible.

It is interesting that in some sections of the country atheists are working toward this end, and in other sections strong evangelical Christian leaders are asking that the Bible be completely barred from all State-controlled institutions.

Fables in Textbooks

There are two facts that those who argue in this way must face. First, it is impossible to be neutral with regard to God. We have already noted the difficulty educators are in when the attempt is made to produce character and to have good morals when God's one way of producing character is barred out by law. One may say that we can teach that two and two are four and be entirely neutral on "religion." But even this simple mathematical fact is not entirely neutral; for its practical application to business affairs at once raises the question of morals in the handling of figures. But in any case education as a whole centers in "life," and no teacher can be neutral on life's relation to the only true God.

The second fact is that, however one may argue for the theoretical possibility of neutral education, we do not have education of that kind in America, and we never have had. Take the matter of textbooks. In high schools and colleges throughout our land textbooks are used that quietly set aside the Bible records as fables. Ancient Histories begin with the story of our animal ancestors as though they were recording sober facts which all accepted as we do the incident of Washington crossing the Delaware. If the keeping of the seventh day is mentioned, the Chaldeans are the originators of it, and so with every fact on which the pseudo-historians differ from the Bible. This is not neutrality.

In State-controlled institutions the most direct teaching against the Bible and Christ is going on in thousands of classrooms. Most of this teaching is blasphemous and is sowing the seeds of moral collapse. Yet its legal right is rarely questioned. On the other hand, in some parts of the country the Bible is being taught in public schools by earnest Christian teachers, using textbooks by honored orthodox Christian leaders. The courses are a regular part of the school schedule, and no one questions them because the community as a whole consists of Protestant believers. We are not here suggesting either of these plans as a wise plan for America. But the illustrations help us to see that "neutrality" regarding God and truth and the Bible is impossible. Education cannot be separated from God, the great Maker and Educator of men. All of it is, in greater or less degree, either for or against him.

Let us look at the matter for a moment from the standpoint of an earnest and zealous Roman Catholic priest. Every now and then one of these priests denounces the American school system as atheistic. Now suppose we temper our religious indignation long enough to ask if we may learn anything from his point of view, wrong as it is in essence. For we need but to look at Spain and South America and any country where Rome has had sway to know what this public school system would produce. But what is his point of view? He believes that God and salvation are the most important things for all human beings. He believes that the truth of God, as he sees it, should be made the center of all education, that the children receive this truth from the first book they open till they leave their postgraduate schools. Now, he sees the truth of God in such a way that fatal error prevails with it. But suppose he did have the truth of God? Is he not right in saying that this is the truth that should lie at the basis of all education? Or is the other view right? What is the other view? We turn our children over to the State, to be trained in English, arithmetic, history, science, and a multitude of subjects, in a word, to be "educated." For half an hour on Sunday we send our children, or allow them to go, to Sunday school to study "religion." What view must the child have of the relative importance of "education" and "religion?" And what place does God have in that "education?"

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

A Psalm of Praise

Scripture Lesson—Psalm 103:1-22.

Printed Text—Psalm 103:1-13.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 107:23-31.

Golden Text—Bless Jehovah, O my soul! Psalm 103:1.

Introductory Note

The Book of Psalms was the great hymn book of the Hebrew people. It is quite customary to ascribe the psalms to David, and it is certain that he did write very many of them, but it is also certain that he did not write all of them. There are many indications that these hymns include the productions of many poets and cover a considerable period of time. The Hebrew classifications of these psalms is as follows:

Book I—Psalms 1 to 41.

Book II—Psalms 42 to 72.

Book III—Psalms 73 to 89.

Book IV—Psalms 90 to 106.

Book V—Psalms 107 to 150.

Comments on the Text

1. Bless, when referring to God, means "to praise, extol, or glorify, as the giver of benefits, with thankful acknowledgment of benefits received." All that is within me. "Not as opposed to outward or lip service, but expressing the desire to enlist . . . in a word, the whole spiritual being, in the same heavenly service." Name. The outward expression which stands for a man.

2. Forget not. This touches the cause of most of the ingratitude of the world.

3. Forgiveth. The first and greatest of all benefits. No one who has sinned against his neighbor can feel comfortable in his presence unless he knows he is truly forgiven. How much more do we feel our sin against our great Father, God. The present tense is used, for it is a continual, ever present forgiveness—as constant as our sins against him. Healeth. "Primarily, at least, of body, though possibly maladies of the soul may be included."

4. Redeemeth. "Delivereth," with a strong implication of cost. From destruction. "From the pit," death and the grave.

5. Satisfieth. Not merely gives necessities, but such as will satisfy the desire. Like the eagle. The older version, which Dr. Moffatt follows here, has "eagle's" perhaps referring to the fable of the eagle renewing his youth by a flight into the sun. As given here, at least, it means "so that in strength and vigor thou art like the eagle, of highest flight and keenest vision."

6. All that are oppressed. This is especially true of all the oppressed among God's people; but it is also true that God is against all oppressors everywhere. His laws and his providence are against oppression, and no oppression succeeds in the long run.

8. Jehovah is merciful and gracious. Those with whom he deals are sinners. However much he favors them they are guilty and need mercy at his hands. Slow to anger. He lingers long, with loving pauses, tarrying by the way to give time for repentance and opportunity for accepting his mercy.

9. He will not always chide. He will cease his punishments as soon as it can be safely done. He infinitely prefers to shower blessings upon them. Neither will he keep his anger forever. He punishes his children, not as enemies to destroy them because they will not turn, but as children, for their correction. And the moment they repent he ceases his correction and enfolds them in his love.

10. He does not base his attitude toward us upon our deserts, whether of punishment or blessing. If he did we should never cease to be punished. We owe him praise and gratitude, therefore, even when his punishments fall heaviest upon us; for we may be sure that they are much lighter than strict justice would require.

11. To them that fear him. It is those who repent of their sins and have faith in him whom he blesses. No blessing comes to those who sin without repenting.

12. As far as the east is from the west. "Fly as far as the wing of imagination can bear you, and if you journey through space eastward you are farther removed from the west with every beat of your wing. If sin be removed so far, then we may be sure that the scent, the trace, the very memory of it, must be entirely gone."

13. Like as a father. "Father" was Christ's word for God, as it was the word of this psalmist and of the prophets. But in the Old Testament, as here, where the thought occurs it is coupled with fear; in the New Testament it is coupled with love. We are the heritors of both. We should love him most intensely and fear to displease him because of that intensity of love. If from all literature, all history, all experience, all poetry, all imagination, we could gather together into one picture the noblest qualities of fatherhood and motherhood, lovingkindness and tender mercies, longsuffering and forgiving love, a care that is wise and gracious, seeing the good more gladly than the evil—we would have some faint vision of what our heavenly Father is.

14-22. The psalmist gives first a reason for God's pity for man: "He knows how we are made, for he made us. Our make and build, our constitution and temperament, our prevailing infirmity and most besetting temptation, he well perceives, for he searches our inmost nature."

And the only way such a psalm can close is with a mighty paean of praise—calling upon all the mighty forces of earth and heaven to aid him, but ending with the appeal to his own soul—in some ways greater than these greatest.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Reports from Christian Endeavor Fields

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT JOHNSTOWN TOWN CHURCH

Dear fellow Endeavorers:

We watch the space allowed for us in the Evangelist each week with interest, and will try to pass along to others a few of the activities of our Society. We do not fail to have our C. E. meetings, no matter what the weather, meetings, etc., which occur on the Sabbath day. Our program committee is very much on the job, and the attendance is fine. During the Thanksgiving and Christmas season, six or seven families were given a large basket overflowing with eatables and in which we placed a copy of the Evangelist for spiritual food. We have given $10.00 to the Kentucky Mission field, and have held many prayer and song services at the homes of members of our church where sickness prevailed and they had been unable to attend services. During the past year we won a bronze trophy through a contest conducted by the Cambria County Brethren C. E. Union. We had the highest average attendance over five other societies. We have one of the finest Junior Endeavor societies under our leadership and are proud to say they have given approximately $25.00 to the church building fund, as well as $5.00 to the Ashland College Endowment Fund. Will be glad to hear of activities of other societies, by which we may also profit.

Yours in his service,
MISS RUBY HORNER, Secretary,
Third Brethren Christian Endeavor Society, Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

FROM SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Dear Endeavorers:

On the first of the year the Endeavorers of Sunnyside church were divided. The younger members reorganized into a Young People's Society with some thirty charter members and the older ones organized into an Alumni Society, in which Bible study is being taken up.

The Young People's Society has been doing splendid work. We have not had one to refuse to lead when called upon. Our average attendance is fifteen or sixteen, and last Sunday (May 12th) we had twenty-four. Herma Grisso was elected as our president. Most of the young people are also engaged in the work of the church.

The Intermediate Society under the leadership of Mrs. Grisso is also doing good work. Their membership is around fifteen or eighteen. They have several who will come into the Young People's Society this fall.

The Juniors also have a separate society and are making advances in the right direction. They do not have a regular superintendent just now.

Corresponding Secretary,

CAMBRIA COUNTY BRETHREN C. E. UNION

Since our last report several events of importance in Christian Endeavor work in Cambria County have become history. Chiefly among these was the week of Bible lectures by Dr. E. J. Pace. Sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Union they were heartily supported. Dr. Pace measured up fully to advance reports proving himself a truly great lecturer in God's work. Several nights the auditorium of the First church was filled and the final Sunday night found the Sunday school rooms open and nearly full.

The seventh quarterly mass meeting of the Union was held in the First Brethren basement auditorium Tuesday evening, May 7, 1929. An interesting program was rendered. Mrs. Albert Custer gave a reading entitled "The Starless Crown," accompanied at the piano by Rita Jones, who later rendered a piano solo, "The Old Refrain." Misses Ora and Margaret Mackall favored with a piano duet.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. Paul F. Mickey, United Brethren minister of Morrellville. He gave a very helpful and inspiring talk on the subject, "Elements of True Success." He is a man wholly in sympathy with the Christian Endeavor Crusaders Movement.

In the tabulation of percentages for the Union award, Moxham was found to be the winner with an average of 93%. Both Moxham and Pike had 100% in attendance at the Rally but Moxham forged ahead with their weekly average. Pike was second and the First church, Third church, Vinco and Conemaugh followed in the order named. Revs. Bowman, Belote and Gingrich were present and took part.

Thelma Custer was in charge of a fine social hour which followed the regular meeting.

Several new phases were stressed by the different representatives which should result in mutual good.

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ," we are looking forward to an advance in Christian Endeavor work in Johnstown and vicinity.

FLOYD BENSHOFF, President.

Argentina, South America

The missions in Argentina have been enjoying a period of several months of beautiful autumn weather. This not only favors attendance at the meetings on the part of those who are interested, but it also takes the indifferent to other places where there is more entertainment for the carnal man. The breaking down of prejudice against the evangelical missions is accompanied by an increasing indifference on the part of the masses.

I preached a few days in Tancacha recently and conducted a communion service April 28th, which was attended by all the members but one who made a mistake in the hour. The faithful there have been praying for some definite things and are getting definite answers.

Following my visit to Tancacha I preached a few days in Almafuerate again. Here a number of new people have become interested. One night twenty-two came over from Tancacha and we had a large street meeting in which Brother Romanoghi preached. The priest was in town this week, but just in passing, as he was on his way to a chapel in the country on the other side of the river where, I am told, he has a great many children. He is rarely called to Almafuerate, because his evil life is well known. But in spite of that he has a group of fanatical women and girls who fight for him in his absence. The public school teachers are included in this number. The church still controls politics enough to make it almost impossible for one not a Catholic to have a position as teacher. These teachers try to oblige the children to go to the church to learn the doctrine which is taught by one of them in the absence of the priest. Those in Almafuerate threaten the children with a whole day of "penitencia" if they miss the doctrine. Often they will unjustly give low grades to our Sunday school children, and are always repeating the vile slanders about the Protestants that they learn from the priests.

While in Almafuerate a relative of one of our families arrived from Spain where he had been a Jesuit preacher. He is a university graduate but says he never had the opportunity to know the Gospel and is now studying it with great interest. He says that in Spain the great majority of the people are not Catholics but because the government is Catholic the people are obliged to pretend at least that they are. That situation seems to prevail in all Catholic countries and presages the time when the ten horns shall hate and destroy the scarlet woman. Let not the United States be deceived. There is a vast difference between some sincere Catholics and the corrupt system which exploits them.

I am to leave Monday for Huinca Renanco and several weeks of preaching on that side of our district. Our Bible coach is still idle for lack of workers. Pray much for us. We need very badly several more able and consecrated workers. C. F. YODER.

IV. Landing at New York

On Board S. S. Anversville,
April 10, 1929.

We have been sailing on the Anversville for 15 days now. Occasionally we get a glimpse of land when we go near the shore. Frequently the sea gulls follow our boat. We went ashore at the Canary Islands where the boat stopped for about 6 hours. We visited the rather strange Spanish town of Tenerife. The traders came aboard with their wares, mostly hand made scarfs, table linens, etc. It was rather amusing to me the way they always asked more than double the price for their things at first and then took what they could get.

At 6 o'clock this morning the boat stopped, the bell tolled and the flag was lowered to half mast. Last evening one of the passengers died and they buried him in the sea. After all I guess it doesn't matter where we are when these souls depart from our bodies, but a burial at sea must seem more cruel to the bereaved than one on land. But when our Lord comes the sea will have to give up her dead and those who are his will go to be with him. There are many sad hearts on this boat and how we wish they knew the only Comfort there is in such sorrows! On our corridor there is a widow who lost her husband just three weeks before we started the trip. She has three small children and seems to be very sad. There is also another widow with a baby. Her husband died only a month ago. She is only a child herself.

Antwerp, Belgium, April 14, 1929.

We arrived here at Antwerp April 12th, after a voyage of 18 days from Matadi. The last day through the English Channel was rough and many had to hang over the rail for good reasons! We were glad when we could touch land again.

On Board S. S. "Olympic"

April 18, 1929.

We sailed on the "Olympic," an English liner, yesterday. The company brought us across the English Channel and to London by rail, paid our hotel expenses in London and brought us to Southampton for the same price it would cost to buy a ticket at Southampton. We went on a sightseeing tour in London but were disappointed not to get to see Westminster Abbey and the British Museum. I would like to have seen David Livingstone's grave.

April 24, 1929.

Last night we remained out in harbor and this morning we sailed into New York harbor, past the Statue of Liberty. How our hearts thrilled to see our beloved homeland once again, and with the anticipation of seeing friends and loved ones once again. Mr. Sheldon's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Inman Conety, met us at the boat and you can imagine that we were happy to see them. If it means so much to return to one's native land and to see one's friends and loved ones again, what will it be when

We had a good service, and the interesting thing to us was the way in which some of our lay members are doing Sunday school work, and keeping the work of the church alive in their home communities. They are doing real laymen service for the church and their Lord. Brother Manuel Davidson and wife attended this service and then walked about two miles to their home, carrying their year-old baby. We wondered how many of our church people would be so much interested in the services as to do that.

The Brown Hardware Co., of Jackson, have donated to the Institute $42.50 worth of paint. It came at a time when needed, and is so much appreciated.

Two very successful Daily Vacation Bible schools have been taught now, one at Krypton, the other at Napfor. Mrs. Srack and Miss Carter conducted the one at Krypton, and Miss Carter and Miss Lucy Mae Ever-sole conducted the one at Napfor. Four more are now arranged for, to be conducted by different workers. This is a fine work, we are sure.

We have been told that the denominations are dropping the high school work in this section, and that to put money into these denominational schools is like throwing it down a rat hole. Two new high schools have been established within the past year now, one in the far corner of Breathitt County, the other just over the county line, by denominations older than we are in this mountain work. Isn't it strange that they cannot see that they are throwing their money "down the rat hole?"

May we please call your attention to the matter of used clothing. This used clothing can be used to good advantage here. It helps in two ways—it helps the Institute some financially, and helps the people who word of truth and preaches it in its purity, showing favor to no man. Such preaching is sure to bring the wrath of the enemy of our souls and he with his faithful wife have had great difficulties. But realizing that their warfare is not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, they have pressed forward with the sword of the Spirit and have won. The people love their pastor and fully realize that in these days when true sincerity is almost vanished from the earth, they are indeed fortunate in having a man who will preach Christ warning every man (what not to do) and teaching every man (what to do) so he can present every man perfect in Christ Jesus (Col. 1:28). In these days of such seeking after favor with man and foolish talking and jesting among the ministry, it was indeed a great privilege for me to be permitted to spend a few weeks in the home of a man after God's own heart.

My charts are what might be termed "positive Fundamental"—I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it has proven to be the power of God unto salvation to many.

The results of the meeting are wholly of the Lord, who has used the pastor of these charges to prepare the hearts of these people and I thank God that he was pleased to give us some visible signs of his working through us.

The invitation was given to whosoever will may come. No methods such as mere signing of cards of coaxing or lining up of groups or classes were resorted to, but 37 responded to the call and came boldly forward. Also a man on the train, another in a hospital and a woman in her garden professed conversion. I also rejoice that so many family altars were started in the homes of these people during the meetings.

Great stress was laid upon the duty and privilege of Christians to be always abound-

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

This church is located in south central Nebraska and is one of the oldest churches in the Mid-West District. They have an attractive church building and a comfortable parsonage.

The church here, like in all small towns, is faced with the problem of losing members and its young people who move to the larger cities and places of larger opportunities.

I am impressed with the tremendous losses of our denomination in membership for reasons mentioned above. I believe that we have at least ten thousand members living in cities and districts where we have no church and that in the last twenty years we have lost as many members in this way as we have in the church today.

We are not dwelling with this problem in any systematic or worthwhile way. We have no means of knowing how many members we have in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Baltimore, Seattle and other places. No provision is made to keep in touch with them, and we have no program or plan for anticipating churches in places where we have large enough groups to organize and open work. This is gross negligence and unless some intelligent, worthwhile effort is made to stop this leak we will continue to lose for no other cause than indifference.

Brother W. R. Deeter is the pastor at Carleton and is putting forth his best efforts to place the work here on its feet. Many discouraging things have come into the work in this place, but I believe there are better days ahead. Brother Deeter gave me every aid and I enjoyed my stay with the church. The total gift from this congregation to the endowment was $790.00.

McKEE AND MARTINSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

Under the leading of the Lord, I was permitted to hold a meeting at McKee and also at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, during the month of May. It was a great joy to meet with these good people and I look forward to the time when our Lord will come and we will meet again to part no more.

Brother James Cook, who is the faithful pastor of these flocks, rightly divides the ing in the work of the Lord. Many hundreds of Gospels of John and some 18,000 tracts were the immediate results of the meeting. We know that if we go forth bearing precious seed we will come again bringing our sheaves with us. One man who owns a garage purchased 1000 to pass out at his place of business; another who runs a feed store purchased 1000 to put in sacks of feed; another who is ticket agent in Altoona, took 1000 and many, many others are putting out the word of God in full confidence that his word will not return unto him void.

Much interest was in evidence in the study of the Bible and I know of no better help than the Scofield Reference Bible. Over $50.00 worth of Scofield Bibles were purchased during the meetings, and others are looking forward to getting one as soon as possible.

True, we had cool weather and lots of rain but the people came as though there were no rain. The meetings at each place closed with a communion service. At McKee the church was full, some standing along the walls. It was pronounced the largest communion service for many years.

May the richest blessings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ abide on these people and their pastor and family, until the trumpet shall sound and our earthly pilgrimage shall cease.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, ELLET, OHIO

"Your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams."

Is the time of visions past? Not so say

Floyd Sibert, Pastor, who has led the Ellet Church to victory.

the members of the First Brethren church of Ellet, for at last their dream has come true.

For five years they worked together, first in a hall, then in the little brick basement on Stettler Avenue. Then came the fulfillment of the prophecy, "your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams" and the church caught a vision of the completed structure of their dreams.

So real was the vision that on September 29, 1928 the members of the Brethren church met in the cozy little basement and formulated plans to make their dream come true. It was here that the Lord poured out his spirit on his people and they decided to build a new brick structure that would seat between four and five hundred people. Within a week's time brick was on the ground and the new building going up. But erecting a new church building which necessitated the removal of the basement roof did not stop the Brethren from going to church. A temporary roof was laid over the sub-floor and like Jeremiah's people who watched while they worked at the wall, the brethren worshipped in the basement while the walls of the building were going up.

The expansion however was not all of material growth for the church and Sunday school seemed to catch a vision of a greater opportunity of serving the Master. So like the Psalmist they "took the wings of the morning" and advanced their Sunday school attendance from 25 to 125 in eighteen months' time. It was because of this growth and the necessary added congestion to the one room basement that the Brethren felt that the time was ripe for advance. So advance they did with a faith in God and their fellow brethren that was undaunted. Since that time they have been annexed to Akron. Thus located as they are in the southeastern part of Akron in a growing section of the Rubber City and within a half mile of the world's greatest airport, the outlook for this church is good.

Space will not permit the individual mention of all who have had a part in making this work possible. Loyalty, sincerity and devotion of earnest-minded Christian men and women blessed of God have made it possible and will cause it to continue to prosper for the Lord. We are much indebted to the architect, Melvin Peck, who so ably assisted us by drawing up the plans for the new building and then donated his entire service to the church and the cause of Christ. Another man who is not a member of the Brethren church gave the bell and so the Lord's work is accomplished. We could do what Jesus said about rendering tribute but after all it is God who sees, understands and gives the worthwhile reward.

The basement was forty by sixty feet in size with a nine foot ceiling. To this was added ten feet in length which gave room for a furnace room and kitchen.

The new building is constructed of rich, red variegated brick with massive arched windows. The corner tower carries a melodious bell that thrills the soul and speaks of heaven. The building is so constructed that it will provide for fifteen separate class rooms, kitchen, toilets and social room. The seating capacity is between four and five hundred and all space was taken on dedication day.

Beautiful new benches of Northern Elm add to the attractiveness of the interior, while the pulpit is adorned with new pulpit furniture. The baptistry in the front of the building instinctively draws one's thoughts to the Master in the Jordan River. The walls of the baptistry are painted to represent a scene on the Jordan and add much to the impressiveness of the baptismal service.

Rev. B. F. Owen, who has held three successful evangelistic meetings for the Ellet Brethren, was called for the dedication service, April 28. In spite of the rainy day the building was filled. The total cost of the building was $16,550. Brother Owen tackled this job with the same earnestness and sincerity with which he preaches and succeeded in raising $8,520, leaving approximately $4,000 not covered by pledges. The total value of the property is placed at $25,000. Brethren from the nearby Dunkard church, Louisville, Canton, Smithville, Rittman and Ashland were visitors for the day and enjoyed the fellowship of the noon hour in the basement with us, and spoke words of tribute and encouragement to the Ellet Brethren.

B. F. Owen, who had charge of the Ellet dedication and has held three successful meetings for the church.

The dedication service was followed with Brother Owen preaching. It seemed that nearly every evening. But "if God be for us, who can be against us?" The meetings closed with eighteen applicants for baptism. Fourteen of these were baptized in the new baptistry and four are awaiting baptism. The Ellet Brethren cherish the memory of Brother Owen as a capable Brethren minister, who fearlessly and relentlessly preaches the whole Gospel message. We give God the praise for the victories and blessings that have come to our church in the past and covet the prayers of the brethren.

BRIGHTON, INDIANA

It has been some time since the Evangelist readers have heard from the Brighton, Indiana church, but we are still at work.

The people in this congregation and in the community are very loyal to the services of the church. Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely under the able leadership of Brother Simon Mutcheler as Superintendent. I must express my appreciation for the very fine bunch of young people who always are at the Sunday school, their class is cared for very ably by Brother Myron Long as teacher.

A few weeks ago we organized a Christian Endeavor Society, for which I am very glad. While the young people here are just like other young people and no doubt are about like we older ones used to be when we were young, they like to have their good times, yet they are willing to work in the church.

Last Sunday evening, June 2nd, we had our spring Communion service, which was well attended, about 50 being present. We had a spiritual uplift and everybody seemed to be well pleased with the service.

Next Sunday evening, June 9th, we are contemplating holding our Children's exercises. This is being well cared for and we are hoping to have a large attendance at this service. All departments of the church are moving along very nicely. I must not forget the W. M. S., which is always at work.

We are not very far from Shipshewana Lake, and we are looking forward to a good time at the various services there this summer, especially the Young People's conference.

Pray for us that we may continue to work for Christ and the church.

C. D. WHITMER, Pastor.

"THOU WILT GUIDE MY FEET"

A professor in the seminary, a man of broad experience and ripe scholarship, used to say to his students repeatedly: "Boys, you will always have in your congregations some who are in need of comfort and assurance. Preach often to those who travel the via dolorosa." That timely bit of counsel was never forgotten.

It would seem very natural to suppose that in the great parish to which the United Presbyterian ministers weekly there are always some homes where the shadows have fallen, where the wounds of life are fresh and deep, where the future seems dark and the path uncertain, where the burdens are heavy, where hearts cry out for a God who knows and cares, and does not forget.

What healing energies would be released, if, amid the shadows and perplexities of life, we could always believe in the heart as we sing in the church:

"And thou wilt guide my feet
By thy own counsel sweet,

Till I, for glory meet,
In glory stand."

One of the finest definitions of the Christian idea of God is that of Dr. William Newton Clarke: "God is the Personal Spirit, perfectly good, who in holy love creates, sustains, and orders all." This statement is as simple as it is comprehensive. To believe that is to acknowledge that our heavenly Father, in holy love, controls and directs the life of every individual child.

There are two aspects of his guiding providence which we are apt to forget, and because we forget them our minds are often filled with doubts, uncertainties, misgivings.

The first of these two obvious facts is that God's guiding hand in life is often unseen and unsuspected. We are unaware, unconscious of it, never dreaming that

"Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,

What man or woman who has traveled down the years and knows the love of God, cannot look into his or her experience of the past and discover how they were providentially led when they least suspected that it was his hand that guided them?

The other plain truth is this: His guidance is just for today. The distant scene is never revealed. Abraham's final destination was not revealed on the day that God told him to leave Chaldea. "He went out not knowing where he went." He had no knowledge of his ultimate goal. He was sure only of direction. Where the road would lead after the next turn, he could not tell. The distant scene he could not see. Under God, one step at a time was enough for him. The entire road from Ur to Canaan was not illumined as with a great searchlight. It never is. Like the headlight of your car, the light of divine providence reveals only that part of the road immediately ahead. The distant stretches will be lighted up little by little as we journey on.

For ourselves there is not in the entire Christian creed a single truth, stated or implied, in which we have a more unshakable confidence than this—that a man's life, if he will have it so, may be under the control of a divine providence. Nor do we know of any conviction so calculated to calm the mind, to steady one's purpose, to enable one to face life unafraid, as that voiced by Hamlet:

"There is a divinity that shapes our ends, Roughhew them how we may."

—The United Presbyterian.

A NEW FRANKLIN STORY

A new Benjamin Franklin anecdote has been found in a 150 year old diary which was kept by the Marquis de Barbe-Marbois, who was sent to this country during the Revolution and who later became secretary of the first French embassy here. The diary is in the form of a series of letters which he wrote to his fiancée, and is amusing and sophisticated. It has just been translated into English. From Baltimore, Maryland, he wrote:

"It is at the inn where we now are that Dr. Franklin arrived one winter's day, covered with snow and half dead with cold. The family and several guests surrounded the fire, and no one inconvenienced himself for the stranger. He sat down near a window as if to rest, and after several moments addressed the innkeeper and asked him if he had oysters.

"Yes, excellent ones."

"Open them and take a dozen to my horse."

"Does he eat them?"

"Just take them and you will see."

"Everybody got up to go and see the horse eat oysters. The children, the strangers, the servants went to the stable to witness such a novelty. The doctor, in their absence, established himself near the fire, in the best place. Very soon they came back to tell him that the horse would not even look at the oysters.

"In that case," Franklin replied, 'bring them to me and give him some oats.'"—Catholic Citizen.

We are told "the elevator to success is not always running." When we must take the long, hard climb up the stairs is when the test of real courage comes in.

get it. Now since the Home Board has limited its support of the work considerably for the coming year it becomes necessary for the management here to get up some money for its support elsewhere, as to drop any part of the work now would greatly cripple things here, and cause a loss of the investment already made. So we are trusting that folks in the church and their friends can send us clothing, i. e., clothing that you have outgrown, or have laid aside and do not choose to wear longer. Will YOU PLEASE SEND IT TO US? If you will drop us a card we will be glad to send you a clothing bag, in which you can put it, and very conveniently ship to the Mission. Three blessings will result, the reward for your gift, the help to the Mission, and the help to the people who get the clothing. We trust that you will not pass this by without attempting to do something along that line. WE THANK YOU.

Will you pray for the management that in no way it may get ahead of the Will of the Lord, but only follow after? Also will you pray that God will raise up the necessary financial support for the work for the coming year? Special prayer is now being held here for these things. Dear Brother and Sister, will you join us in prayer for the same? G. E. DRUSHAL.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE FIRST ALPHABET

An old, old story about the beginning of the alphabet is retold in "Better English Habits," a book written by Blount and Northup, and published by the Wheeler Publishing Company. This is the story.

Long ago there lived in a far-off land a young princess named Europa. She had four brothers and many playmates. One day the youths and maidens were picking flowers in a lovely meadow near the sea. In the same meadow a beautiful white bull was feeding. He was so gentle and so friendly that the maidens wound about his neck and body long garlands of daisies and violets and primroses. After a time Europa said, "I am going to have a ride on the White Bull," and she mounted on his back.

At once the White Bull ran to the sea and began swimming for the distant shore. Europa was frightened. She grasped his horns with one hand and held the other toward her friends, crying for help. They ran after her, but the White Bull was far out on the water and they could hardly hear the screams of Europa. At last the Bull and the maiden disappeared in the distance.

The weeping brothers and playmates went home to tell their parents what had happened. The father and mother of Europa were, of course, in great sorrow. They commanded their eldest son, Cadmus, to go to find his sister. So Cadmus, with several other young men, set out.

They had many strange adventures. Perhaps the most wonderful was the one with a dragon. The monster lived in a cave, near which was a clear spring. When the comrades of Cadmus went to fill their pitchers at the spring, they were slain by the dragon. Cadmus attacked the serpent and slew him with his spear. Then he planted the dragon's teeth in the ground as if they were seeds. Immediately they came up as full-grown men, armed with spears and swords, and began fighting one another. When almost all of them had been killed, Cadmus persuaded them to give up the battle and to become his followers. With these five men he went on, seeking his sister.

But Cadmus could find no trace of Europa, and finally he became very weary of constant travel. He asked a wise man where he might find a home.

"Follow that cow," said the wise man, pointing to a cow that was walking down the road. "Where she lies down, build a city for yourself and your men."

So Cadmus followed the cow. Soon she lay down in the midst of a grassy pasture. Cadmus and his men put down the packs they were carrying on their shoulders, and began building houses to live in. Other men and women came to the same place, and Cadmus was made king of the city, which they called Thebes.

Four daughters and one son were born into the family of Cadmus. Although they lived so long ago and so far away, they were very much like the children of this day in America. They loved to hear their father tell of his journeys and his adventures. Many a time he told them of his childhood with his three brothers and his sister Europa, and of his long search for the lost maiden. And when his own children grew up, they told the same tales to their children.

As Cadmus became very old, he said to himself, "I shall not be here much longer. When I am gone the stories about my parents and brothers and sister and my journeys and adventures will be forgotten. How can I make a record of them?"

After long and careful study, the wise old man invented a system of letters which should represent the sounds of speech. These letters he combined in such a way as to represent spoken words. Then he wrote the tales of his life so that all those who should come after him might know them. And he taught his grandchildren to read the books he had written.

This is the old Greek story of the origin of the alphabet.

What Became of Europa

When the White Bull had crossed the sea, he carried the Princess Europa into a lovely garden, surrounding a splendid palace. Then she discovered that the White Bull was not a bull at all, but the King of that land, who had taken the form of a bull to bring her into his kingdom. She became the Queen and lived there the remainder of her life. She was very happy with the King and her children; but sometimes she was very lonely for her father and mother and her four brothers.

The name Europa was given to that country in honor of Queen Europa.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XIII. A VITAL NEED OF THE HOUR

By A. B. Cover

There is prevalent in the Church today, a mysterious spirit of disloyalty. It manifests itself in various ways, which may be summarized as indifference, faithlessness and rebellion. The call of the world is strong and subtle; indifference opens the door of the soul to its enticing influences. Satanic influence is hammering at those tenets of faith that are life-giving, until the foundations tremble and crumble and souls drift out to the sea of unbelief and eternal darkness. The god of this world enlists his hosts for battle against the Word, which finds its expression too often in "I cannot believe," until the bulwark of open rebellion flames forth, and the "Faith of our Fathers" is trampled in the dust. The spirit of disloyalty challenges the utmost loyalty.

The vital need of the hour in the Brethren Church is loyalty; loyalty to Christ, and loyalty to the church. Too many are satisfied when Christ has been accepted as Savior, thinking that that suffices for time and eternity. True it is, Vicarious Atonement has been made through Christ, which becomes efficacious to us through faith, but let us make Christ Master and Lord through our loyalty. Let us be true to the Word, do what it says and not what we think or somebody else thinks. Be loyal to Jesus Christ by obeying his Word.

The Brethren Church has a distinctive mission. If that mission is true to Christ and his Word, then ought we to be loyal to the church. Do we need to take an apologetic attitude for our practices? We hear masterful addresses at our conferences but little of our distinctive teachings. When a voice is raised for that which was dear to our fathers and the purpose of the foundation of our church, it is silenced as narrow. Loyalty to our church, if she is loyal to Christ and his Word should challenge every member of the church to utmost fidelity to every interest that furthers her mission.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

GET Out of the Way"

The other day a mob of men at one of the New York baseball parks trampled down and injured more or less seriously fifty people, most of them boys. Two of the victims died.

There was no fire, no sudden danger, no reason at all for a mad stampede. Nothing went wrong, except, that it began to rain, the game was called, and the crowd started for home. The gate was narrow, and rather than wait for a moment the crowd simply trampled down those who were ahead, like dumb animals.

It was all so utterly useless. But this is the spirit of the age. People at times seem to be mad. Even when there is no reason for hurry, they snarl, "Get out of the way." And if you don't jump, you get run down.

In the days of Noah, we are told, "the earth was filled with violence." So also, it seems to be in our day. This is another sign of the approaching end. Read our Lord's prophecy in Luke 17:26.

THE Unexpected Guest

While on a week-end fishing trip, President Hoover unexpectedly stopped at a little country church for Sunday morning worship. He was disappointed, we are told, because there was no sermon, but remained for the Sunday school session.

One wonders how many preachers on Sunday morning would be ready for such a distinguished guest. How many would quickly decide to change their sermon? How many would vainly wish they had spent more time and labor in preparation?

Perhaps, as preachers of the Gospel, we forget sometimes that every sermon we preach is delivered in the presence of the One who is infinitely greater than President Hoover. Furthermore, the Holy Spirit is no unexpected Guest. He is always present in the church, beholding the order of our worship. And we know this, or ought to know it. Yet to our shame, it is probably true that most of us would be more concerned about the sermon delivered before the great man of the earth than about our other sermons. If we prepare every message with one supreme purpose of meeting the approval of the Spirit of God, we shall never be ashamed before any man, no matter how great he may be.

THE Curse of Introductory Speeches

The other evening in Los Angeles several thousand people had assembled to hear one of the regional oratorical contests. For the benefit of other thousands, one of the largest Radio stations offered to donate an hour for broadcasting the speeches of the young orators. The program began promptly at eight o'clock, and this is what happened:

First, a representative of a Los Angeles newspaper made a speech introducing the temporary chairman of the meeting. Second, the temporary chairman made a longer speech introducing the permanent chairman. Third, the permanent chairman made a still longer speech telling why the meeting was being held and introducing the first of the orators. By this time over half the broadcasting hour was wasted (there is no other way to describe the speeches), and only two of the young people were heard over the radio.

Why does the average man, when asked to introduce another to an audience, feel that he must make a speech? Perhaps the psychologists can explain the mystery.

The ideal introductory speech was made by an old Quaker. A famous maker of telescopic lenses was the speaker. The chairman arose and said, "Folks, we have John Blank with us tonight. He knows all about telescopes. All right, John, go ahead."

PERHAPS this Explains the Mystery

Mrs. Gadabout had been worrying over the question of where her husband spent his evenings, and one day she found out.

"At last," she said to a friend, "I have found out where my husband has been spending his evenings."

"How interesting," answered the friend, "And how did you find out?"

"It was very simple," said Mrs. Gadabout, "I stayed home one evening last week, and found him there."

Los Angeles, California.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

38. Would you advise every church, large and small, to adopt a constitution and by-laws? If so, would it not be wise to encourage uniformity of procedure so far as possible? How may this be done?

This is a good practical question. Many a church quarrel and many a bitter misunderstanding might have been averted in the past if the churches where these difficulties arise had been guided by a constitution. A constitution and by-laws is simply an orderly way of procedure agreed upon by the members of the congregation. It is a way of doing things. The business of the church, the organization and duties and functions of the various auxiliaries of the church, the officers, that is the various officers of the church, their manner of election, terms of office, duties and qualifications,—such matters as these and many others should be carefully defined. A constitution must never contravene the New Testament. In short, a church has as much or even more need of such an outline of procedure in all its activities as business concerns and corporations.

There is wisdom in having a simple yet comprehensive form of constitution and by-laws for all our Brethren churches. I should strongly counsel that we build up a uniform mode of procedure. This would be most helpful of all to the pastors. When they change pastorates they would be quite well informed by their previous experiences were there more similarity in our administrative activities of the church. This can all be brought about by following a standard form such as is suggested on page 21 of the Brethren Pastor's Complete Handbook. The form there given may be adopted with only the necessary local changes to make it thoroughly practical everywhere. Of course in adopting a constitution, as in organizing a new congregation into a church, all legal requirements of the State in which the church is located must be met. This applies particularly to the Trustees of property, the acquisition and holding of real estate and other property, the borrowing of money and such like items.

39. If a church has no constitution, who should constitute the Official Board of said church and how should such personnel be determined?

This would have to be wholly determined by the action of the church. In some congregations all church officers, that is the pastor, the deacons and trustees and perhaps others constitute such Official Board.

I think the plan of the Ashland church is excellent. Our church has a constitution. It provides that the officers of the church shall be the Moderator, all the Deacons, the Trustees, Recording Secretary, Financial Secretary and Treasurer. These officers with the Sunday School Superintendent, the President of the C. E. Society, President of the W. M. S. and six others elected from the membership of the church shall constitute the Official Board. The minister or pastor is ex-officio a member of the Official Board. This gives us here a working official body of about eighteen or twenty men and women. The essential point is that where a church has no Official Board there are three things necessary in the procedure to avoid misunderstanding and perhaps a church quarrel. These are:

1. The church in a regular business meeting should decide to constitute such an Official Board, and determine what shall be the duties of said Board.

2. The church should at the same time or later determine just who should constitute such Board and how they should be chosen and for what terms of service.

3. After having agreed upon the items just indicated the first Board should be properly elected and installed.

When all this has been done this Board should then only perform such duties as the church may have delegated to it. It should never forget that it is only the servant of the church appointed to do its bidding and never the lord and master of the congregation.

Re-Focusing Attention on the Home

The home has suffered a serious slump in popular interest in recent years. It has been all but lost sight of in our emphasis on outside interests and obligations. Our attention has been focused on social and recreational activities, commercialized amusements and entertainments, educational agencies, community improvement efforts and business men's clubs to such an extent that the home has been practically eclipsed. No one has much time or attention to give to the home and its problems. In fact, circumstances seem to combine to encourage people away from the home, to train them to depend less upon its customary services and fellowships. The home-dwelling person is coming to be looked upon as more or less eccentric and selfish. A man is valued by his community pretty largely by the amount of time he spends away from home. His home is a place to eat and sleep, a sort of a rest-house to which he goes when he is tired, and from which he goes when he wants pleasure or profit. This is the general attitude of the good people of the community as well as of the indifferent, of the leaders and the high-minded as well as of the drifters and the unrefined.

This movement away from the home is a movement in the wrong direction, and the fact is beginning to be apparent. Serious problems are arising from this changed condition. Young people are growing up without any knowledge or appreciation of real home life, and home has lost or is losing those elements which once served as an anchorage for youth and protected them from the destroying forces of life. Today the home has ceased to be a citadel against the allurements and devices of the evil one, and there is little feeling of the need of such protection. The home is little more than a dormitory, a place to put up at, a mere convenience. As the editor of the Western Christian Advocate said some months ago in discussing this theme, "Today the cinema, the automobile, the dance hall, the music symphony, the thousand and one diversions outside the home make their appeal to young life. The home is no longer a joyful retreat to escape from all these. It has become a place for recuperation in order that the young life may again throw itself into the current of the outside life." And in the midst of this current of the outside life young men and young women are being poisoned in mind and ruined in character. And many of them follow on into all sorts of sin, dissipation and immorality. And much of the prevalence of crime among youth is due to this breakdown of the home. And even the bond that holds the home together is being rent asunder and divorces are becoming every-day occurrences in almost every community. In some sections one marriage in ten is annulled, and in others one in seven, and in some even one in three. This is a terrible price to pay for the neglect of the home. Surely the time is at hand for a re-focusing of attention upon it.

There is need of meditating upon and talking over the ideals that make for a harmonious and successful home life. This lack of attention given to the home has caused people to forget how to live together, and many never learned the first principles of home companionship. In the first place marriage itself is looked upon by many people as a mere convenience, a light and trivial agreement that a man and woman may make and break with little consequence. There needs to be a re-enforcement of the time-honored ideals concerning the sanctity and the almost indissoluble bonds of marriage. This is made the more urgent in view of the common effort to gain popularity these days through the advocate of "companionate marriage," and the indifferent attitude developed toward this holy estate through such social heresy. One cannot read the counsels of the New Testament on marriage without being convinced that all the writers are concerned about the great seriousness of the relationship, and that the great uniting principle should be a holy one. Christian marriage is founded on a strong faith in Christ, a truly united life, unfeigned reverence and a love that is so genuine that it is willing to make the supreme sacrifice for the object of its affection. The man and wife who have such a view and attitude toward marriage cannot help having a happy, Christian home, for out of the thoughts of the heart the spirit of the home will be moulded.

That Christian home atmosphere will manifest itself by the presence of certain fine qualities or elements. One is that of mutual consideration, that fine regard for the feelings of others, for their welfare and wishes, that characterizes the real gentleman and the real gentlewoman. Some men have the mistaken notion that it is effeminate to be gentle and to be kindly considerate of their companion's feelings, and so they show themselves gruff and brutish in order to be considered strong and manly. And some women delight in a display of smartness by making certain crudities of their husband the object of public jest and ridicule. Such lack of considerateness is often caused by thoughtlessness, but it is nevertheless the source of much personal sadness and heart-suffering, if not of outward domestic trouble. The time usually comes when such lack of kindness is regretted. Why not seek to avoid it and not have to feel the flush of shame at the last. Dr. Stuart Nye Hutchison says, "Considerateness is the flower we give our loved ones while they live instead of the useless pall we spread over them when they are gone."

That spirit of home love will show itself in cooperation. Dr. Hutchison wrote in The Presbyterian: "Recently I asked some one about a mutual friend whom we knew in college days, a man who has risen to front ranks in his profession. He said, 'Yes, he is married and he has just the wife for him. He plays a lone hand and what he wants is an adjunct and not a helpmeet.' He is playing a lone hand in his home and in his business, and he is welcome to it. But you know and I know that there will come a time when a lone hand will be a lonely hand. God meant husband and wife to be helpmeets. They were to bear one another's burdens. Four hands can do so much better work than two, and four eyes and four ears, and four shoulders can bear so much more easily the load." And besides making the burdens of life easier, cooperation helps to keep their interests united and their love fresh and sacrificial.

And finally, where mutual love reigns there will be the spirit of patience and forgiveness. Things are bound to occur, even with our best efforts, that cause annoyance and irritation. Our human weaknesses are with us, and we cannot escape the fact. But we can cultivate patience, forbearance and forgiveness that will make ready for a new start after every difference occurs. The writer above cited says: "There is no other task that requires so much patience, and long suffering, and forbearance and forgiveness, as the administration of a home where human nature is the element with which we are dealing. This should be the prayer of the home-builder, 'Lord make me patient.'"

Washington Gladden's prayer should be the prayer of every Christian husband and Christian wife; for the patience that is needed can only be had through the teaching and presence of the Lord Jesus.

"Teach me thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong

"In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live."

Lawlessness the Aim of Wets

It was Anti-Saloon League day in our church and a splendid gentleman, a former college professor of more than a quarter of a century of teaching experience and a minister of experience, gave an informing and reason-appealing address. He was not an official of the Anti-Saloon League, but he was well-informed and loyal to the great purpose of the League, nevertheless. Two things stood out with strong emphasis in his address, not new but yet deserving of repeated mention, and that is the reason for this notice. First he stressed the importance of the church continuing its educational program against the liquor traffic. This is the way we got Prohibition, he said. For more than a third of a century the religious forces of the country have been constantly hammering at the saloon and teaching the people and especially the young people the evil effects of strong drink. We have come a long way from the days of Neal Dow until now, but every step has been made by continuous education and agitation. When Prohibition was written into the Constitution the need of education was not passed, as some thought. The task of law observance and enforcement is a part of the problem, and the responsibility rests upon every citizen. That fact was pointed out in an effective way by President Hoover. The building up of a will to obey the law and of a public sentiment that will make law enforcement easy is a matter of education, a long process of education, and the church is responsible for helping to build up such a spirit.

He also pointed out that Prohibition is enforceable and is being enforced far beyond what public opinion seems to indicate. The church must not be discouraged by the wet complexion of the metropolitan press and the wet propaganda in which that press is largely cooperating. It is strange that the press would take such a destructive attitude toward law as some of our great dailies are taking, being as they are the guardians of the people's interests and rights and also the spokesmen of their sentiment. Such an attitude is neither fair nor loyal. Equally questionable of loyalty is the attitude of attorneys who combine to defeat the purpose of the law and of wet propagandists who are trying to bring law enforcement into disrepute in order to win back booze. The supporters of Prohibition must not lose sight of this ignoble aim of the wets to so destroy the morale of the public towards law enforcement and toward Prohibition enforcement in particular that the people will throw up their hands in despair and surrender to a re-establishment of legalized liquor trade.

In a similar strain spoke a fearless woman in Boston, Massachusetts on a recent date. She was Mrs. William Tilton, newly elected president of the Unitarian Temperance Society, and she denounced in unsparing terms the unAmerican and anarchy strategy of the wets. Her words are worthy of a wide reading and we therefore pass them on to our constituency:

"I am here to denounce the strategy of the wets which, if correctly reported in the press, seems to me to be nothing short of subversive. Is it not this—to foment lawlessness and more lawlessness until the American people, the vast countryside, throws up its hands and readmits the old, legalized liquor traffic?"

"That educated men, that women who have had advantages, can be willing to tear the whole house of law observance and law enforcement down about our heads in order to secure free access to drink, is beyond belief. It makes one wonder if a college education is an asset or a liability. If these fomenters of lawlessness had any better plan to offer it would be another matter, but they say themselves they have no really constructive plan, only 'Repeal' and liquor regulation turned back to the States. Can any man doubt but that would mean the return of the saloon?"

"The wets agree it will be a long process to get 36 States. But

---

Sister Emma Aboud writes of a very successful evangelistic campaign which she conducted in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, in a sister church. Fifty adults and a few children were baptized by triune immersion. As a result of this meeting, and the observance of the three-fold communion service, a few have come over to the Brethren faith and a mission has been started.

Some more Christian Endeavor reports are to be found in the Endeavor department—from Harrah, Washington, Milledgeville, Illinois and Elkhart, Indiana. These are fine and inspiring. Now let us have more reports. This is the way to keep interest alive in Christian Endeavor.

Our correspondent from Spokane, Washington, reports a successful Easter Cantata, and a healthy growth of the Sunday school and church, due largely to the special effort of Brother T. H. Broad in behalf of the children, who is wisely taking special pains to make the services interesting to them. We are sorry to learn he must give up his work on account of illness.

The First church of Long Beach, California, has added twenty-six to its membership since the last report. Their new Sunday school building is going forward splendidly. Several specially enjoyed features of their program for the month of May are mentioned. It seems that there are no dull times for this church. Dr. Bauman, their able pastor, is constantly providing them with something of fresh interest and helpfulness, either by his own efforts or those whom he calls to his aid.

Dr. W. S. Bell's canvass of Portis, Kansas, resulted in a gift of $1,566.00 to be added to the College Endowment Fund, which brings the total to $211,736.20. This is a splendid showing for Brother Sylvester Lowman and his loyal people. Brother Bell meets with a situation here again which calls for the reunion of the Dunker forces. Such witnesses against division are to be found all over the country. We, too, pray that the day of this testimony against us may soon be blotted out by a merging of forces.

The College commencement exercises, which President Jacobs reports, brought to a close a very successful school year, and now a banner attendance is had at the Summer School—324 enrollments, and the prospects are for an unusually large attendance at the opening of the regular college year in September. This numerical growth challenges the church for larger quarters, which must come in a few years, or the ministry of our college will be greatly handicapped. Some strong additions to the faculty are announced.

Many of our people are interested in the Winona Lake Bible Conference and have been regular in attendance from year to year. It is often convenient for a goodly number of our ministers to get a part or all of it, since it regularly meets just preceding our national conference. The Bible conference date for this year is August 16 to 25 inclusive. During the last three days the Gideons are to hold a special convention, and among the speakers arranged for the Bible Conference program are Mr. Samuel R. Boggs of Philadelphia and Mr. Will R. Green of Toronto, both former presidents of this great organization.

Word has reached us through Brother W. A. Gearhart, Elder in charge of the Dayton church since the resignation of Dr. W. H. Beachler, that the First church of Dayton has called Rev. R. D. Barnard of Mansfield, Ohio, to be its pastor, and that Brother Barnard has accepted the call. He expects to take up his work in this field about the first of August. Brother Barnard is a young man of splendid qualities and qualifications and his many friends will follow him with confidence and pray as he undertakes this big task. He has done a good work at Mansfield under unfavorable circumstances and Dayton will find him and his good wife worthy of their confidence and support.

Brethren A. L. Lynn and A. B. Cover pay tribute in this issue to the memory of our lately lamented brother, Elder A. C. Hendrickson. We wish to add to what we have previously said, that Brother Hendrickson was a valuable man in any church where he found himself a member and was everywhere a genial and peaceable associate and co-worker. It would be difficult to work up a church quarrel if all church members were as kindly disposed and considerate as was Brother Hendrickson. Yet he was not without convictions. A man of his thoughtfulness would necessarily have convictions, but he also knew how to cooperate with those who disagreed with him. May God bless the memory of his place among us to the good of his many friends and as well of his relatives.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER THIS WEEK—

Sister Emma Aboud requests prayer for her new work at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, also for the work in New York City.

The Old-Fashioned Home

By Rev. Hugh T. Kerr, D.D.

The other morning at family worship—we try to maintain the custom—I came suddenly upon the passage, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right." Thinking it was a good peg upon which to hang an exhortation I said to my eldest lad, "See that. Perhaps I had better read that again." So it was read again with a sort of exceptional emphasis.

Now the Bible always treats us to gracious and glorious surprises and though I knew what was coming the interest stirred on behalf of obedience in youth had, as we say, inhibited my anticipation, and I found myself reading the words "and ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath lest they be discouraged." I would have read on but the voice of a junior said, "See that. Perhaps you better read that again." After we had laughed a little at the touchdown he had made, the verse was repeated and the account squared.

I have thought a good deal about that incident. It has awakened within me a new appreciation of the efficacy of family worship and the value of the Bible as a family textbook of ethics and etiquette. What a wonderful way it has of balancing duties and keeping obligations before young and old! It is the great cleanser of the domestic atmosphere, for there is nothing like old-fashioned family worship to keep unity in a home and to bind all the members together in a common, sacred purpose.

It is admitted on all hands that something is wrong with our modern life. It is too complicated, too individualistic, and sets too fast a pace. Life for both parents and children is full of pitfalls and perplexities and educators and legislators face problems they can not solve. It is easy, of course, to bring an indictment against the young people of our age. In magazines and on lecture platforms it has been done again and again in eloquent terms. We like to hear it. It soothes our spirits as well as calms our fears at least for a time. It has been a pastime of each generation. Oliver Wendell Holmes has a few verses about "Aunt Tabitha" and there we see that fifty or sixty years ago people were thinking as we are thinking and saying what we are saying, "They never did that in Aunt Tabitha's day." If you will go back to the days of Jonathan Edwards you will find the greatest preacher America has produced indicting the youth of his generation. It seems most modern to read these words in 1830:

"He was utterly opposed to everything like unseasonable hours, on the part of young people, in their visiting and amusements; which he regarded as a dangerous step towards corrupting them, and bringing them to ruin. And he thought the excuse offered by many parents, for tolerating this practice in their children—that it is the custom, and the children of other people are allowed thus to practice, and therefore it is difficult, and even impossible, to restrain theirs—was insufficient and frivolous, and manifested a great degree of stupidity, on the supposition that the practice was hurtful and pernicious to their souls."

Our Rallying Cry in These Perplexing Days Should Be Like Unto that of Ancient Israel, "To Your Homes, O America!"

Nevertheless the modern situation is critical enough. We are told on good authority that there are 27,000,000 children and young people, nominally Protestants, who are receiving no religious instruction whatever, that 8,000,000 of these are under ten years of age in Protestant families without any definite church connection. This means that two out of every three among the children and youth who nominally claim to be Protestants are receiving no religious instruction whatever, and are growing up without knowledge of the Bible. What is true in the Protestant world is also true of the children and youth of other faiths. There is alarm both in the Roman Catholic and in the Jewish councils. Not long ago I heard a leading Jewish rabbi speak to a great concourse of Jewish parents bemoaning the fact that the old family and religious sanctions which had made the Hebrew home distinctive were rapidly passing away.

Efforts have been multiplied to remedy this condition. The literature on religious education is becoming a formidable library. Each new book has a new remedy. Societies are springing up and organizations effected to meet the situation. The National Reform Association and the Klu Klux Klan want the Bible restored to our tax-supported institutions. Social reformers call upon us to recognize changing conditions and one of the leading social workers of our country tells us that "our democracy is making inroads upon the family and a claim is being advanced which in a certain sense is larger than the family claim." The churches are introducing new methods such as Daily Vacation Bible schools, organizing schools of religious education, and appointing directors of religious education, and yet the problem is unsolved.

The key to the situation is in our hands. If religion is to live it must have its roots in the home. Speaking last year to the students of St. Andrew's University, Scotland, Sir James M. Barrie said:

"Mighty are the Universities of Scotland, and they will prevail. But even in your highest exultations never forget that they are not four, but five. The greatest of them is the poor, proud homes you come out to, which said so long ago: 'There shall be education in this land.'"

The home is first and primary. It was established before the college, and the Magna Charta of the home was written into the Hebrew legislation in these words: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The words are very definite, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." The duty of religious instruction belongs to parents and can not be delegated to others.

In a recent discussion concerning this problem Dr. Robert F. Horton said these strong and searching words:

"No greater disservice was ever done to religion than that officious undertaking of the church to relieve the parents of their primary duties. The church has no power to impart a true religion to infants and little children. By claiming that she had such a power, first at the font and then in the schools, she weakened the responsibility of those to whom that power necessarily appertains. Her function may be to inculcate in parents the parental duty of teaching their children, and even to instruct parents in the best methods of performing their task. She should be instant in season and out of season in reminding every father that he is by the very nature of the case compelled to teach his child from day to day the laws of the spiritual life, the claims of the Christian Gospel, the way by which the claims are to be recognized and the laws are to be obeyed.

"If the church succeeds in rousing the father to a sense of his duty, she has succeeded with the child. But if she has relieved the father of his duty, she has injured not only the child but the father also. Amid the idle clamor that has filled the air in recent times about the religious education of the children, this primary truth has seldom or never been heard."

We are always beginning the task too late. We are learning that we have made a mistake and our workers in the realm of religion are pushing back out of the high school into the public school, and perhaps after a while there will be a tidal wave of public opinion that will break down the indifference and carelessness and the tragic neglect of parents. In one of the first and best books on the subject of religious education Dr. Horace Bushnell said: "Let every Christian father and mother understand when their child is three years old that they have done more than half of all that they will ever do for his character."

This is the key to the situation. It is too late to begin religious education even in the public school. Responsibility must be fixed where it belongs and it belongs primarily to the parents. Let everything be done supplementary to the home that can be done.

Let the Bible be put in the public schools, let religious directors, schools of religious education, and Daily Vacation Bible schools be multiplied and be made efficient, but let it be understood that all these things are supplemental, and let fathers and mothers act on the principle that unless they themselves teach their children religion and the principles of the Christian faith by which they are to live, their children will grow up pagan and not Christian.

When parents feel this responsibility and come to the conclusion that unless they teach their children the fact of the Bible they will go without it, then and then only will we see the dawn. The fault lies not at the door of youth but at the door of parents who are too busy, who are unwilling to make sacrifices, who are out every night, who are busy here and there with many engagements. The training of children is the most costly of all tasks and requires sacrifices that many today are unwilling to assume. Something else is needed to make a home than the things which money can buy.

"One rubber plant can never make a home;

One day did not suffice for building Rome.
One gas-log and a cat
Can't civilize a flat.
No! Something more is needed for a home."

The "something more" that is needed is the recognition of responsibility to God for the religious education of childhood and youth.

Some of us who have been brought up in an old-fashioned home know that the sacrifice pays. It roots the coming generation in reverence, obligation, and simplicity. The mother of Phillips Brooks is forgotten but the world does not forget her son. We know very little about the mother of John Ruskin except what he has told us, and it is to the effect that she established his soul in life and taught him familiarity with the Bible, to which he attributed the simplicity of his own inimitable literary style.

"The growing wood of the world," says George Eliot, "is partly dependent on unhistoric acts; and that things are not so ill with you and me as they might have been, is half owing to the number who lived faithfully a hidden life, and rest in unvisited tombs."

The rallying cry of the Hebrew people in days of danger was, "To your tents, O Israel!" The rallying cry in these perplexing and formative days which are upon us must be like unto it, "To your homes, O America!"—Christian Herald.

Transgressing God's Law

By Thomas Gibson

"The way of the transgressor is hard." In the Revised Version, the word "hard" is rendered "treacherous." It is treacherous, because it will deceive one; it will undermine one; it will betray one. God never makes any mistakes in his declarations. Millions of people in all ages have learned, many of them to their eternal sorrow, that "the way of the transgressor is hard, is treacherous!"

Ancient Israel learned it to their bitter sorrow. God, through his prophet Nehemiah, told Israel, "if ye transgress my law, I will scatter you abroad." How literally the divine prediction has been fulfilled! They were scattered all over the world. They have no country. They were carried into Egyptian and Babylonian captivity because of their transgressions. In Egypt, they were oppressed and burdened by hard taskmasters. In Babylon, they wept by the rivers of Babylon; they hung their harps on the willows, and refused to sing a song of Zion. They learned that "The way of the transgressor is hard, is treacherous!"

The Lord, through the prophet Samuel, told King Saul to "go and utterly destroy the Amalekites,"—that people who hindered the progress of Israel on their journey towards Canaan. God does not forget things. "He is slow to wrath," but eventually he metes out judgment "to all impenitent evildoers." Saul made war against the Amalekites, but he just partly obeyed the command. He took the best of the oxen and the sheep as spoils of war. He returned, and greeted Samuel with these words: "Blessed be thou of the Lord; thy servant has performed the command of the Lord." But the old prophet could not be deceived, and he said, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" Saul said he had saved the best of the oxen and of the sheep to make sacrifice to God. But he lied. He confessed it afterwards. He feared the people, rather than fearing and obeying God. But, alas, too late. Saul was about to go away when Samuel sternly said to him,

"Saul, stay and I will tell you what the Lord said to me this night." Samuel did not fear the King, any more than "Moses feared the wrath of Pharaoh when, by faith, he forsook Egypt." But how did Samuel know it was the Lord that had spoken to him? Because he was in touch with God. His life was in harmony and in unison with God's divine will. He was in communication with God. "And because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, the Lord has rejected thee from beng king." And so Saul was dethroned. He lost his crown. He lost his kingship; and ultimately he lost his life because he just partly obeyed the command of the Lord. "The way of the transgressor is hard, is treacherous!"

Oh, how dangerous it is to obey just partly the commandments of Christ. Peter was threatened with excommunication because he refused to obey the Lord Jesus. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

Again, Jeroboam, that wicked king, when he came to the throne, perverted and changed the true worship of Jehovah God. "He set up an altar in Bethel, and one in Dan. And he compelled the people to worship the golden calf." God stood for it for a while, but eventually his patience (humanly speaking) became exhausted. "The Lord sent one of his prophets to Bethel, to cry against the altar of Jeroboam, "because of the idolatrous worship that was offered on it. As the prophet cried against the altar, Jeroboam put forth his hand to do the prophet bodily injury. And in a moment of time, his hand became withered, so that he could not draw it back again. He was then in a sorry plight, and begged the prophet to have his God restore his hand again. How often men and women, when they are in trouble, beg for God to have mercy on them. But after deliverance comes, they forget all about God. Asa Keyes, the convicted District Attorney of Los Angeles, is beginning to learn that "The way of the transgressor is hard, is treacherous." During the short time that he has been incarcerated in the City prison, the papers state that "his health has been greatly impaired." And so he is pleading for his liberty. It is a strange and new environment for Asa Keyes, as he is deprived of the frequent banquets he had with his fellow companions in crime.

"The way of the transgressor is hard, is treacherous." Let us evade it; let us shun it as we would a deadly serpent.

A Sunday Sleeper

By Lester V. King

TEXT: And there sat in the window a certain young man named Eutychus, borne down, with deep sleep; and as Paul discoursed yet longer, being borne down by his sleep he fell down from the third story, and was taken up dead.—Acts 20:9.

We have recorded in the 20th chapter of Acts a very interesting event in the life of the Apostle Paul. Before you go further turn to your Bible and read the story of "A Sunday Sleeper," named Eutychus. You will find it in Acts 20:6-12.

Many of the events recorded in this story are true in congregations of today. A minister usually has three classes of people to sit in his congregation. Those who listen attentively; those who give little attention to his message; and those who sleep during the entire sermon. This is a famous sleep, this sleep of Eutychus.

There may have been very good reasons why Eutychus slept on this occasion. There are also reasons why he should not have slept. We want to examine these and then speak of a sleep that is far more serious, and a sleep that is far too prevalent today.

In excusing Eutychus we find first of all that he was listening to a very, very long sermon. "Paul continued his speech until midnight." "And as Paul was LONG preaching." Ah, the sermon was too long for this young lad. No doubt he held on as long as he could. He tried his best to keep awake. But gradually and finally sleep got the best of him and he dozed away. He may even have snored and thus attracted the attention of those near him, thus interrupting their attention to the speaker.

I need not give you illustrations of sleepers in churches today. No doubt you have all been amused by this habit in your own congregations. But what is the lesson for us here and to whom does it apply? A child was once asked by her Sunday school teacher what the story of Eutychus taught. The child replied: "Preachers should not preach too long sermons." This is indeed an unusual truth to get from the Bible. The first truth is therefore for the preacher.

"Paul continued his speech until midnight." Probably he had a very good reason to do so. He was spending only one day in Troas. It was the place from which he received his Macedonian call. So he had a peculiar affection for the city. No doubt he told of his missionary journeys and the wonderful way in which God was blessing the Word. In fact, Paul just could scarcely bring his message to a close, he was full of it. He was inspired to speak, and so he continued long. It may be that he suggested stopping at several points but his interested audience cried: "Don't stop, Paul. Go on. Tell us more." But the sermon was too long for this young man and he fell asleep.

There are really two kinds of Sunday sleepers. This fellow Eutychus is a picture of one type, the kind that go to sleep at church. This fellow had good reasons. But that does not excuse folks today. However tired they may be, or tedious the sermon, they have no excuse when the sermon is only one-half hour in length.

But a more serious sleep is that kind of sleep that keeps one from Sunday services. Big, strong men, sleeping in bed Sunday morning until dinner! The Lord's Day was given as a day of rest. But sleeping in bed Sunday mornings is not rest. There is more rest gained by spending one hour in God's house than four hours rolling and tossing in bed until the good wife has dinner prepared.

There is also another reason why Eutychus went to sleep. The room was poorly ventilated. The early Church did not have splendid, modern churches as we find today in many localities. It was in an upper room, probably three stories up. And the house was full. Every seat was occupied, and men had to sit on the window sills because of the crowd. No wonder Paul was inspired to preach so long. Give a preacher a full and crowded house and he will preach a much better sermon.

This full house, in spite of the difficulties suggested, reveals to us that this congregation had warm, loving hearts. They were eager to hear the Gospel. When the heart is hungry for the Gospel no excuse will suffice, none is needed.

If men were only hungry for the Word, there would be no trouble to fill every church house in the land on the Lord's Day. Today with the best of ventilation; lights that are restful to the eye; seats with backs for rest, and in many places even cushioned pews; and yet men go to sleep.

If the first lesson applies to the preacher we have here a truth for the janitor or trustees of the church. Had the windows been opened at the right place Eutychus would never have fallen to the ground. Windows should be opened from the top. In many of our churches today the air is stifling and no wonder folks go to sleep. "There were many lights burning in the chamber." The already limited oxygen would be still more exhausted by the lights.

No wonder folks fall asleep! No wonder children become restless! During the week they have been breathing the oxygen from God's free air and then on Sundays they are often placed in a stuffy, poorly ventilated room. No wonder they become restless. Men do not always go to sleep for lack of grace. Sometimes it is simply a lack of oxygen. Oxygen is as necessary to the physical life as grace is to the spiritual. And the physical is necessary to the enjoyment of the spiritual. So it is the duty of church ushers to keep the air as sweet and fresh as possible.

But in spite of this man's excuses he is still to blame. First of all, this sleeper under the Gospel was a young man. Had he been old and life nearly spent it would have been different. But he was young, full of vigor, life and strength. Strange that the sleeper of this crowd was a man in the flush of youth!

Again, the youth was listening to a very good preacher. He was sitting under the voice of the Apostle Paul, the chiefest of Apostles. He was listening to the greatest spirit that ever lived. He must not have realized the personality of the speaker. Had Nero been giving one of his orations he might have been very attentive. After all, it usually depends upon a man's interest. We infer that Eutyclus was the only one who fell asleep. The sermon must have interested the rest of the crowd. Usually in every sermon we find that some in the congregation have been helped. We ask, then, why do some enjoy the message while others do not? The answer is simply this: It all depends upon the thing that is of interest to you.

But may I point out to you a more serious sleep than the sleep of Eutyclus. Not all folks are to be rebuked for sleeping at church for there may be a good reason. There is something more serious than physical sleep. I am thinking of spiritual sleep, the attitude many take to spiritual things. The moral man is a spiritual sleeper. The man in sin is a sleeper, lying in repose in his sin. They are asleep, as the children of the night. The preacher tries to awaken them. But they sleep on. Providence tries to arouse them. Bereavement, sickness, misfortune, impending death comes, but they sleep on. It appears that nothing can awaken them. Some cannot be aroused until like Eutyclus they fall out the window and land on the hard pavement below and are picked up as dead. Some God just has to let go, let them fall down and down until they reach the bottom of sin and face death in that state. Some never awaken until they strike the hard pavement that Satan has laid for them.

There is a story told of a man who seemed to awaken out of his sleep, went out through streets into the country, and he did not awaken until his bare feet touched the cold water in the stream. There are souls just like that. They never awaken until the cold waters of death stare them in the face. Sometimes they awaken but too late. Sometime they do not awaken.

But may I remind you that there is a possibility of being awakened from the sleep of sin. Eutyclus was picked up as dead and it took a miracle to bring him back to life. And so it is with the sinner. Only the miracle of Divine grace and love can restore such a sin-sick soul. How many men there have been who have been picked up as dead, dead in sin, yet through grace they have been restored to spiritual life.

So God can restore you. But why wait until apparent death faces you? Why not give him your life of strength and power? Why not give him your youth? Why wait till the cold waters of death face you and then run the risk of not awakening?

WISCONSIN JOINS NULLIFIERS

Wisconsin, May 29, disposed of its prohibition enforcement laws when Governor Walter J. Kohler signed the Grobbschmidt dry repeal bill, leaving the state with no other dry law than the federal prohibition act. That would not be serious if state and municipal officers would proceed against violators of the federal laws, but that is just what they are getting ready not to do. In effect, it is the assertion of the right to ignore any part of the federal constitution which is not acceptable to the expressed majority of the citizens of a state.—The Presbyterian Advance.

FAITH TRIUMPHANT OVER FEAR

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman is not one of those who believes that things are going from bad to worse. With resolute faith he holds that "the best is yet to be." In spite of shifting standards of morality, which to many seem to be dooming our so-called "civilization," Dr. Cadman writes in answer to a recent query:

"The people of North America and of Europe are slowly, yet surely, recovering from the mental and moral depression accentuated by the World War. They already show a marked impatience with the petty prattle of exotic homilists, the impurities circulated by conscienceless publishers, the perfidy of politics and the putridity of certain schools of writers. A Quaker can still command the Presidency of the United States and the grandson of a Methodist preacher the premiership of the British empire. The cleansing and simplification of personal, national and international life steadily gather momentum, and we are scarcely aware of their might until it is revealed in achievements which bewilder the foolish and hearten the wise."—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE CRY OF THE GREEKS

"Sirs, we would see Jesus," they said to the Disciples.

This was the cry of the Greeks long ago. It is the cry of the world today—"rich man, poor man, beggarman, thief." "We would see Jesus" is the universal importunate request. Not the preacher, nor the cynical modern philosopher, not the brilliant twentieth-century theological critic, not the scholarly debater—but Jesus. We, all of us, would see him.

During Lent this year a great scholar, Rev. Pinard de la Boulaye, occupied the pulpit of Notre Dame. He filled that huge place for ten consecutive Sundays with an amazing congregation. Passionately he gave testimony on the Man of Nazareth.

A brilliant and critical newspaper correspondent, writing to the New York Times remarks, "The effect of this Lenten program is noticeable on the life of Paris. The writer confesses that he has been absorbed in it. Profound stirrings of the human soul which recognize as by instinct that in the personality of Jesus lies one of the most significant factors of human evolution are at the base of it all. To many thinking people this subject is nothing less than the keystone of spiritual experience." The writer goes on to say that it is impossible to follow the literary movement on the life of Jesus; that books, articles, and addresses almost beyond numbering have come upon the world as a veritable deluge.

He is not mistaken. He has touched the pulse of life itself. Now, in the midst of an inexorable materialism, men, women, and children of every race and condition are lifting the cry of the Greeks. Jesus is today, as forever, the one and only answer to the questing soul. He, himself, is for the individual and for society the only solution for the problem of existence and the only sufficient Savior.

Forever life's ultimatum is Christ or chaos. "Sirs, we would see Jesus."—D. A. P. in Christian Herald.

"THE HOLY WAR AGAINST ATHEISM"

This was the caption taken for his annual report by the general secretary of the American Tract Society. In it he noted that the Atheistic Associations are "working hand in hand with those who handle the vast amount of Russian propaganda which is sent to our shores, in which God and Christ are ridiculed and cartooned in blasphemous fashion." As part of its plan to fight atheism the Society is seeking contributions to publish "Pilgrim's Progress" and similar books in foreign languages. The Society is continuing the campaign for Bunyan Tercentenary Fund, as the Executive Committee decided after raising about $15,000 for immediate use that a Permanent Fund of $50,000 should be provided to keep Bunyan's books in English and foreign languages in print, as these books are most effective, especially in reaching the foreigners.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

MARSHAL FENG RENOUNCES CHRISTIANITY

For five years General Feng Yu-Hsiang—China warlord has been referred to in the American press as the "Christian" General—with Christian always in quotation marks. And for five years devout missionaries, who have followed Feng's work, have seen his efforts to educate, evangelize, clean up his own army, have believed in his sincerity. But Feng, apparently, has left his faith. His northern territory fringes, too closely, that of Soviet Russia. He has been disillusioned, perhaps, or victimized. At any rate he declared, a few weeks ago, to a Chinese Christian preacher: "I am no longer a Christian general. I have no God and no Christ." He has dismissed his chaplains, given up the religious services in his army.—Christian Herald.

in the meantime, the strategy seems to be to go into the wet States and repeal State enforcement codes, thus demoralizing State and local police forces and giving us precisely the liquor and night-club anarchy we have in New York. In my State I should look, under repeal of our State Enforcement Code, for a riot of road-houses of bad intent, immoral hotels and demoralized youth, poison liquor flowing in oceans undammed, and open saloons.

"To what end must this orgy of lawlessness and calamity be piled high? Is it that a Congressman or two may vote 'No' on national appropriations, whittling down prohibition appropriations so low that lawlessness may riot in every state, and decent people throw up their hands and readmit the old, legalized liquor traffic? I stigmatize this as a dangerous uncivilized, un-American campaign directed against mothers and little children, against public safety, against liberty in law. To foment lawlessness until the 'damnable affliction' of the saloon is back seems to me what it would amount to. If men want repeal there is an orderly way to get it, but to do it by demoralizing police forces and fomenting liquor anarchy is so scandalous that I believe the Unitarian Temperance Society should call on every law-abiding organization in the country to fight this subversive campaign."

"Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: That in the dispensation of the fulness of time he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him." Eph. 1:9, 10.

MONDAY

Made Known.—God not only loves us, but he hath made it known! He hath made it known by the gift of his Son; by the witness of his Spirit; by the testimony of nature, and by all his wonderful works to the children of men. How all men everywhere ought to praise him—not merely for his matchless love, but because HE HATH MADE IT KNOWN. In so doing, he has proved that we are no longer servants, but friends! Read Psalm 98.

TUESDAY

The Mystery.—The poet Burns, speaking of human traits and failings, said that the great mystery was the "moving why they do it." So with our heavenly Father: we KNOW that he loves us, for he has abundantly proved it. But WHY? "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" Truly here is a great mystery which has puzzled more than human minds (see 1 Pet. 1:12). What a blessed privilege is ours! Read the entire chapter of 1 Peter.

WEDNESDAY

Unto Us.—In the office where I am at present employed, there are people of many nations: a former Russian general, an Austrian, German, Hungarian, Czechoslovakian, Korean, Swede, Mexican—and what not! Yet every one of us may, if we wish, read: "Having made known unto US!" And the man who wrote this wonderful message was a Jew, a citizen of the Roman Empire, writing to the Grecians at Ephesus! Praise God that we ALL have the privilege of saying: "He hath made known unto US." Acts 17:22-31.

THURSDAY

Will, Pleasure, Purpose.—What marvelous things are included in such words as these! Truly eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor has the mind of man been able to conceive ALL that they include. For example, in order that we might be reconciled to him and that he might be enabled to receive us unto himself, "IT PLEASED the Lord to bruise HIM!" Read the rest of Isaiah 53, and ponder well some of the other things included in God's plan and purpose for us all.

FRIDAY

Fulness of Times.—God has his plan, but in a sense his plan may be said to depend upon human times and circumstances. It was in the fulness of time that Jesus was born—that is at the time when the affairs of men were ripe for him to accomplish his mission. Whether this particular reference is to the gathering together of all in him, through faith in his first advent to take away sin; or to his coming again, we do not know. In either case, may we, our Father, endeavor to make full the time for thy coming again, when thou shalt gather us all unto thyself! 1 Thess. 4:13-18.

SATURDAY

In Christ.—In him we live, and move, and have our being; without him was nothing made that is made; all things were created by him and for him. In him is our very existence: little wonder that we read (1 John 5:12): "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Col. 2:6-17.

SUNDAY

In Heaven, and on Earth.—How this phrase reminds us of our Lord's prayer! We have been meditating upon the unsearchable riches of his will for us: May each one, this Lord's day, be so yielded unto thee that "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Matt. 6:9-15.—T. C. L.

How Far Can We Make Education Christian?

What may be done to keep our schools from becoming atheistic?

By Robert C. McQuilken, Dean of Columbia Bible School, Columbia, S. C.

What Makes a College Christian?

The Catholic church is fatally wrong in its view that the church should control the State, and therefore control education by the dogmatism of an outward authority, supported by the power of the State. That way lies stagnation, for it is putting fallible human leaders in the place of God, who alone should exercise such authority.

But though the church should not control the State, Christians are citizens of their State as well as members of the church. As citizens we may and we should do all that is possible in putting truth at the heart of our educational system.

But let us turn now to the question of education in Christian schools and colleges, which are not limited by State control. What constitutes a real Christian college, and what is the ideal which our Christian institutions should hold before them?

Here is a college with a Christian president. Does that make the college Christian? We ask, What of the other teachers? Here is a college where all the teachers are Christian. Does that make it Christian? Here is a college where nothing contrary to God's Word is taught, and where only the orthodox teachings recognized by true Christians as the fundamentals of the faith are accepted as the truth revealed in the Bible. Does that make the college Christian? We ask what place Christ and the Bible have. That question goes to the heart of it. Most "Christian colleges" have a Bible course as a prominent part of the curriculum. In many cases it is the most unpopular course with the students, even the Christian students. There are reasons for that. But in other cases the Bible courses are popular and form an important feature of the training.

But let us settle it at once that adding Bible courses does not make a truly Christian college. We cannot add God to anything. He must have the central place, and control all. The great defect of the courses of many of our Christian colleges is that the courses themselves are secular.

Take one illustration. The God of the universe who controls the stars, and who also controls every event of human history, came as a man and lived on this earth. The Lord Jesus, our God and Savior, is then the center of human history. Indeed no human history has any scientific meaning apart from him. Not only so, but God supernaturally directed the history of all nations, putting one nation in the center. Moreover he gave us an inspired record of his dealings with that nation and all nations, and a prophetic foreview of what he would do in the future with all nations. What have we done with God's view of history? Let us speak from the scientific viewpoint for a moment, not from the "religious" viewpoint. If these are facts, what is the scientific way to deal with history, all history, past, present, and future, the history of all peoples? The answer is obvious. It would be not only unscientific but unbelievable folly for men to turn away from God's explanation of history and from himself as the central figure of history.

Yet this is what we have done. We have calmly relegated God to a field called "religion," and have left the Lord Jesus Christ and God's history from Genesis to Revelation completely out of our scientific teaching of "history." Some of our most noted history textbooks used in Christian colleges have been written by militant atheists who have been wise enough to keep any militant atheism out of their textbooks.

The solemn fact we would here call to the attention of Christian educators is that we Christians have accepted that view of the situation, and we are running our colleges on the basis of secular courses in which the Lord of glory is kept on the fringes. The amazing thing is not that we have students who do not give God the central place in their lives. It is all of God's grace that we have so many students who give God a central place in spite of the fact that the whole educational training is saturating mind and heart with a false view of the universe.

A Christian college, therefore, is one whose courses are Christian, in which every subject is taught with God at the center, in which every subject is made to glorify God, in which the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ takes its place as the greatest of all facts of history.

But there is something else essential to a Christian college. We have secularized not only the courses in our colleges. American college life is secularized. Students interested in "religion" have their Y. M. C. A. or Y. W. C. A. activities. These usually constitute a small minority of the student body, except as the "Y" will minimize Christ and enter into the spirit of the college world. In Christian colleges the "Y" activities are usually very strong. But the Christian Association is one among many activities; the athletics, the social life, the dramatic and music and literary circles in nearly every case overshadow it. And these circles are secular in spirit. In a Bible school there is social life and recreation, but the central activity is soul-winning, and every student is expected to make the heart of his life the knowing of Christ and making him known. Surely we cannot expect that from a "secular" Christian college? But is not that the New Testament norm of life? Have not even our Christian colleges taken their norm of life from this present age, which lies in the evil one, and not from the New Testament?

There is a great deal of talk today about the new viewpoint of college students, and many will tell us that this extreme Christian ideal of life is the very ideal that young college students will not follow. But the so-called student viewpoint is, in nearly every case, the viewpoint of their leaders. One of the great facts about children and young people is that they can be led; and will follow their teachers. God has planned it so, with the view that Christ who is the Truth should be persistently presented to young people in every relationship of life.

God has not changed, and human beings have not changed, from the time when he himself said: "Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6:4-9).

If this view that God gives of the way young people should be educated appears to be impracticable in our modern life, let us clearly face the ominous fact that some view has to prevail. And the view that is capturing education today is the antithesis of the Christian view. This is not to be wondered at. The tragic fact for us to consider is that Christians are leaving the field free for that other view. What is it? One of the leading educators of the country expressed it to the writer in this way: "The fundamental principle that underlies the educational system of America is the principle that there is no such thing as absolute knowledge in any field of study."

"Doctor," I asked, "if God had given a revelation to men concerning life and their relation to him, that would be absolute knowledge, would it not?"

"Undoubtedly," was the answer.

"Then, Doctor, you say that you do not believe in teaching 'religion' in connection with the public school system. But you have religion in it; only it is a religion that teaches that the Christian faith is an impossibility."

This educator was not an atheist, but a modernistic Christian, one who classed himself a "liberal in religion."

If we should attempt to have a truly Christian college, with Christ at the center of all the courses and at the center of the college life, there are two dangers.

There is the danger of which the Catholic church is the outstanding example,—the curtailment of real liberty in education and life, a binding by false authority that would plunge the world into the same stagnation that every land controlled by Rome has suffered. Protestant institutions are not free from the same danger of false dogmatism.

On the other side, there is the danger of a mushy sentimentalism, an absence of the virility and facing of the rugged facts of life that our secular colleges often have in eminent degree.

But let it be remembered that these and all such dangers are the result, not of putting Christ in the center, but of a false interpretation of Christ. Because he has been misrepresented by his friends is no reason why education should be turned over to those who would interpret it as atheists.

What are we actually doing in America to make education Christian in schools not controlled by the State? There are colleges that are seeking earnestly to give genuinely Christian education. The remarkable series of articles in the Times in April and May, 1928, on Andrew Murray told of the reaching after this ideal in South Africa. And in America we have colleges with the same ideal. In the field of elementary and secondary education there is the movement of the Christian schools running parallel with our public school system, and supported not by the churches but by Christian citizens. Catherine F. Vos, in an article entitled, "Can Education Be Both Sec-

Review: Prophets and Kings of Judah Decline

Devotional Reading—Psalm 130:1-8.

Golden Text—I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.—Jeremiah 31:3.

A Brief Historical Review

We are half-way through a six-months' course on Prophetic Teaching and Leadership of Judah. The aim of the course is as follows: "To lead the students in discovering and appreciating how God, through prophets and other leaders, gave help and guidance to the people of Judah, in order that the students may come to see the hand of God in their own lives and in all human affairs."

In carrying out the above aim we followed the history of the declining years of the kingdom of Judah, from the ministry of Isaiah to the Babylonian captivity. In reviewing this lesson, a chronological sketch of the events in Judah will be desirable.

Hezekiah, a strong king who recognized his responsibility for the intellectual culture and religious loyalty of his people, came to the throne about 719 B. C. and continued in power until about 690. The siege of Samaria and the overthrow of the kingdom of Israel had taken place only a few years before. The Assyrians, who sometimes were called "the foe from the north," were threatening the kingdom of Judah. Merodach-Baladan, of Babylon, attempted to organize a coalition against Assyria and Hezekiah seized the opportunity to rebel against Assyria which now held Judah as a vassal state. Hezekiah allied himself with Egypt, but in 701 B. C. Sennacherib made his famous invasion of Palestine. Isaiah and Micah protested against the rebellion of Hezekiah and by a remarkable deliverance Jerusalem escaped destruction at the hands of Sennacherib. Intrigues with Egypt and other near-by countries continued even to the days of Zedekiah.

Manasseh, Hezekiah's son and successor, came to the throne as a boy. His cooperation was enlisted by the anti-prophetic party and Hezekiah's reformation was arrested. Manasseh reigned from about 690 or 695 to about 641 B. C., when he was succeeded by Amon, his son, who reigned only two years and was assassinated by some of his courtiers.

Amon's son and successor, Josiah, was a king of high character and ability in whose reign a strong reform policy was instituted. During the reign of Josiah and his immediate successors there were several prophets whose work is not considered in these lessons, including Zephaniah, Habakkuk, Nahum, Huldah, and Uriah. Josiah reigned from about 638 or 639 to 609 B. C., when he was slain in battle.

Josiah's reform was too late to arrest the downward progress of the nation. His son, Jehoahaz, who succeeded him, reigned only three months as a vassal of Egypt.

Jehoiakim, a brother of Jehoahaz, was an impetuous king who ruled Judah with a strong hand but failed to see the international dangers indicated by the prophets.

Both Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim reigned as vassals of Egypt until Babylon became the supreme power. The failure of Judah to render tribute to Babylon resulted in the invasion of the country by Nebuchadnezzar.

Jehoiakim reigned from about 609 B. C. to about 587. He was succeeded by his son Jehoiachin, who reigned only three months and was taken captive at the fall of Jerusalem.

When Jerusalem fell and the first deportation of her citizens occurred, Zedekiah was placed on the throne by Nebuchadnezzar. In spite of Jeremiah's warnings, he soon rebelled against Babylon and thus brought on the siege and destruction of Jerusalem. The temple was destroyed and Zedekiah was taken prisoner. His sons were executed and he himself made blind. A large proportion of the population of Jerusalem were taken to Babylon.

The dates given above cannot be made accurate. However, we can judge within a year or two in most cases. There seems little doubt that the fall of Jerusalem and the captivity of Jehoiachin occurred in 597 B. C. and that the destruction of Jerusalem occurred in 586.—E. Leigh Mudge in Church School Journal.

Review Methods

A true-false test or a multiple-choice test may be developed by a class committee. The statements should be mimeographed and corrected after the test has been made.

A debate might serve the purpose of a review in an adult class, on the comparative service of Isaiah and Jeremiah to the nation and the world.

If the course has been followed historically the blackboard might be used to list the names and dates of kings and prophets, and the outstanding events and crises described as you come to them.

A topical method would be to discuss the main teachings of the two great prophets of this period, referring to the national crises out of which these messages came and the implications of their teachings for modern life. Perhaps this might stimulate a wider study of Judah's history and our own, as well.

Since the quarter's lessons center around Isaiah and Jeremiah, and since history largely consists of the work of great personalities, the careers of these two prophets might be studied successively from the points of politics, reforms, and religious teachings. Committees might be appointed in advance to bring in five-minute reports. The six reports would then take up at least half of the hour.—Church School Journal.

This form of review is a memory drill in the form of a brisk contest. The teacher is umpire and keeps the record. Each scholar in turn thinks of some person studied about during the Quarter, and names some fact concerning him. From this fact the class will, if possible, name him; but if they cannot, the scholar scores one point, and gives an additional fact. He will continue to give facts until the character is discovered or he has told all he knows regarding him; and each fact that does not result in discovery counts one point.

It is a rule of this drill that, though the same character may be used more than once, no fact may be repeated.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Kings and Prophets

Kings of Judah—Uzziah, died 736 B. C.; Jotham, reigned 736-34; Ahaz, 734-727; Hezekiah, 727-697; Manasseh, 697-642; Amon, 642-640; Josiah, 640-608; Jehoahaz, 608; Jehoiakim, 608-597; Jehoiachin, 597; Zedekiah, 597-86.

Prophets—Isaiah, prophesied 736-697 B. C.; Micah, 736-700; Jeremiah, 626-586; Zephaniah, 620-606; Nahum, 612; Ezekiel, 595ff; Obadiah, 587.

The foregoing dates may vary somewhat with different authorities. They are accurate enough, however, to give a clearer understanding of the relation of kings and prophets. Draw brackets from Isaiah and Jeremiah to cover the period of contemporary kings: Isaiah prophesying from the death of Uzziah through the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; Jeremiah prophesying from the time of Josiah through the reigns of Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah.—C. ## Reports from Christian Endeavor Fields

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY OF ELKHART, INDIANA

The Christian Endeavor Society of Elkhart had no report in the Evangelist for a number of months, but nevertheless the society has been working.

There are, at the present, about 32 members and most of them are active in the Christian Endeavor work.

We have our regular Sunday evening meetings which are led by our most active members. At each meeting nearly everyone has a part in either scripture reading, questions or discussions, which all helps in creating a lively interest and in developing leadership.

During the past year our society has done some benevolent work, and has tried to make other people happy by our doings, which in the end, is one of the best ways of spreading Christ's word.

Sunday evening, April 21, we had our annual election of officers, the officers to take their office May 1st. Esther Holdeman was elected president.

The social part of our program is not neglected. We have our "parties," "weiner roasts," etc. These social contacts help to keep up both the interest and spirit of our work.

MISS LENA NICHOLAS,
Secretary.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT HARRAH, WASHINGTON

Dear Christian Endeavor Workers:

It may be of interest to other societies to know what we are doing in the Brethren Christian Endeavor at Harrah, Washington. We organized a little over a year ago with eighteen active members in the Senior society. Since then there have been sixteen active members and four associate members added. We have a real interesting Junior department with Mrs. Gould as leader. One thing that has been a real help is the Bible reading band. Last September sixteen of the members started to read the Bible through in a year and it has created an interest in Bible reading. At our last business meeting they decided to accept all ten of the Brethren Union Christian Endeavor goals substituting the King's Business for the Christian Endeavor World in goal six.

We have been a little handicapped by not having a regular pastor to help us along in this work but are anxiously awaiting the soon arrival of Brother Kinzie and family.

Yours in the Lord's work,
MRS. CHARLES FAW,
Corresponding Secretary.

MILLEDGEVILLE SOCIETY, ILLINOIS

A Christian Endeavor Society was organized in Milledgeville, Illinois a number of years ago and has been holding regular meetings ever since that time. We consider that the Christian Endeavor work has been of great service to our church, especially in the part it has played by open discussions, prayers, etc., in training the young people of the congregation for work in the church proper. Under the present leadership of our pastor's wife, Mrs. George E. Cone, the society has progressed in a very commendable manner. The average attendance at our Sunday evening studies is about twenty-two young people. A study hour which is attended only by a group of young people who are anxious to exchange their ideas on the subjects discussed is naturally enjoyable.

Recently, a hearty invitation was extended to the congregation of the church to attend a special program given by members of the Endeavor. There were over forty present. A feature of this program, which included several musical numbers by Endeavor talent, was a pageant entitled, "With One Consent." This program was enjoyed so much that the pastor invited the Endeavorers to present it during the Sunday morning church service a few weeks later.

It is one of our aims to have at least one social meeting a month. Recently, this was in the form of a hike, which was much enjoyed. Our society tries to do its part for the national work, of course, and this year pledged ten dollars to the National Fund.

An attempt has been made to organize a Junior Endeavor, but has not been successful up to the present time. However, a number of Juniors are beginning to attend our Senior Endeavor meetings and it may soon be possible to organize a joint society with the Juniors.

The young people of our church take much interest in Christian Endeavor which has proven itself to be a valuable organization in the church.

WILMA M. SCHELL.

So you see Djen Tung's knowledge of play had to do mostly with petty gambling.

His companion, seeing Djen Tungs' ignorance of a playground, began at once to explain. "This is a swing. See, you get in it and go high, high up in the air. These are rings to swing on." And in a second he was hanging by his knees. Then running to the sliding-board he quickly mounted the steps and zip! he slid down at Djen Tung's feet.

The boy from the cotton mills looked at him, his mouth open from sheer amazement.

"Where did these strange things come from?"

"Oh," answered Tseo Mei, "from our foreign teacher, Brown Sein-sen (Mr. Brown). This is the way American children play." He caught up a basketball and threw it expertly in the basket.

"But come and see our boys' workshop."

They went through a little side gate in the woven bamboo fence. Djen Tung stopped to exclaim over some frisky goldfish swimming in a large water gong, a beehive buzzing with activity, several flowering potted plants, all under the care of the children. Oh, what a wonderful place! The tired droop was gone from his shoulders, his eyes sparkled.

Pushing back a sliding door, Tseo Mei stepped aside so that Djen Tung might have a full view of the long carpenter tables, the tools, and all that went to make the workshop so dear to boy hearts. But what took the lad's attention the most was the cupboard in one corner filled with gaily colored animals.

"What are these? Where did they come from?" asked Djen Tung.

His companion answered proudly: "They are toy animals which we have made ourselves. See, we sawed them out of this kind of wood, then planed and painted them. We sell them to buy more wood."

"Ay-yah!" was all Djen Tung could say. "Ay-yah, look at that lao-er (tiger)." Very gently he picked up the ferocious looking tiger. "If I could only learn to make a beautiful tiger like this."

"Then," said Tseo Mei, eagerly seizing his opportunity, "come to school here. How glad Brown Sein-sen will be to have you." Djen Tung shook his head. "No, there is no time and no money for me to go to school."

"Yes, but our school, it is a mission school and you need but very little money," quickly answered Tseo Mei.

Djen looked at him patiently. The lad was old beyond his fourteen years. "You don't understand. My father is sick. My brothers and sisters are many. Even though I work in the great mill many long hours each day in order to make money to send them, still very often their rice bowls are empty. I must work and send them money. I cannot stop to study or to make beautiful tigers like that."

Tseo Mei understood but was not convinced. He would talk to Brown Sein-sen.

"Come and see our study room." He led Djen Tung into what was once a chapel, now converted into a school for week days, crowded with desks, and a chapel for Sunday. "Here is where we learn to read and write and many other things. See the long red scroll over there, those are my characters. And can you ever learn to read these letters. They hang up the best one."

"foreign words?" asked Djen Tung in awed amazement.

"Oh, yes, surely. I can read some of them now."

MISSIONS

Djen Tung

By Florence Boston Decker

Djen Tung was a country lad. It had only been six months ago that he had left his village home, his "native place" and that of his forefathers, and had come to this whirling, rushing, clamorous city of Shanghai. How homesick he had been! How he had longed for the quiet green of the rice fields, the grey-thatched huts and the familiar faces of his childhood. As he walked along the pavement he was jostled by the crowd of millworkers ebbing around him, some hurrying to the night shift, others homeward bound. He did not seem aware of them, for he was many "li" away, walking the narrow paths between the rice and cotton fields. He drew a deep breath. There were no whirling wheels there, no shrieking whistles, no rushing trams and speeding autos. One could stop and talk and sleep or work when one wished to.

Suddenly Djen Tung stopped. He always stopped at this particular place both morning and evening, to and from the great cotton mill. His face brightened. He straightened his drooping shoulders. This was the place he wished to go—to school. He had passed and repassed this same entrance many times before it meant anything to him. Then one day he looked a long, long time at the large characters on the board by the door and finally read, "Community Center." Just then a boy near his own age came through the gate at the right of the building, and Djen Tung screwing up his courage, asked:

"What is the meaning of this name 'Community Center'?" The boy looked him over, saw his intense interest, his country-looking trousers and jacket of coarsest blue cotton, the white fuzz sticking to his short black hair, indicative of a cotton millworker, and replied:

"Come, come inside and I'll show you better than I can tell you."

They entered a yard, the ground of which was beaten hard from the constant tread of children's feet in play.

"This is the girls' playground."

Djen Tung stared. "A playground? And what thing is a playground?" In his village the boys played but few games and mostly those in which one used dun-dee (copper cents). Sometimes he was happy, for then he had won many dun-dee, but at other times he was sad, for then he had lost the precious few his father had given him.

They turned and went out in the fast approaching twilight.

"See that building," said Tseo Mei, "that is our hospital to care for those who get hurt in the big mills. Both foreign and Chinese doctors look after the sick people and get them well."

"It is all very fine and strange and wonderful," said Djen Tung. Then he added wistfully, "Maybe some day I can come to this community center."

"Well, you stop by and see us, anyhow," and Tseo Mei waved his hand as Djen Tung went back to the crowded streets.

And so it was that Djen Tung felt a thrill of happiness as well as intense longing each time he passed the community center. Each week he sent the greater part of his pitifully small earnings home, saving out just enough to keep body and soul together.

Then one burning, hot day as he sat before the whirling, strange machinery something happened. A terrible, crushing pain in his right hand. Then the merciful dark came down and blotted out Djen Tung's suffering.

The next he knew he was lying in a cool, strange bed, very clean, with white covers on it. Slowly he opened his eyes. Where was he? How hot and tired he had been bending over the noisy machine! His right hand was throbbing, throbbing. He looked down at his side. His hand was swathed in bandages. He turned his head. Sitting by his bed was Tseo Mei, the kind friend who had showed him the community center.

"Yes, Djen Tung, you have come to the community center hospital. You were hurt in the mill, and a friend brought you quickly here in a rickshaw. Doctor Shen has operated on your hand. Before long you will be well. Now go to sleep." But Tseo Mei did not tell him a part of his forefinger was gone, gone forever!

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

So much has happened around commencement, that I can only record the most important events.

The week of commencement was very enjoyable and the weather was fine. Brother Duker of our Elkhart church preached the Baccalaureate sermon, June 2. It was most acceptable. The other commencement events followed,—class address by Dean Wm. Smyser, of Ohio Wesleyan, farewell chapel, Class breakfast, and finally the Class day, held in the new gymnasium.

At the farewell chapel, the following scholarships were announced. John Lichty junior scholarship, Ralph Richards of Nankin; John C. Myers senior scholarship, divided between Betty Junk, Washington, C. H., and Glenn Workman, Danville; Ira C. Wilcox Seminary Award, Floyd Shiery, Iowa.

Many friends and parents were here for the commencement events. Forty-seven received the bachelor's degree, and in the two year education there were 23. This summer there will be about 50 more of these latter.

The Summer School

We have often talked about the time when we would have 300 students of Freshman rank or above. That time has arrived. The enrollment now is 324. Our chapel seats about 200. What do we do with the rest? Well, you guess how we get along with the cramped conditions. The enrollment this fall will be large, as it seems now. The program of expansion which we have announced, has been spread far and wide and is having its effect.

Faculty

Professors Miller, Garber, Mason, Haun, Monroe, DeLozier, and Stuckey are teaching in the Summer School. Professor Black is at the University of Michigan, Mrs. Leslie

PORTIS, KANSAS

Eastern people little realize the distance these Western churches are apart. The churches in Western Kansas and Nebraska are a day's journey from each other and only a few of them. The church at Portis I am glad to say is in a fine working condition, intensely interested in the whole church program, sympathetic and willing to give aid in the general interests of our work.

Brother S. A. Lowman is the pastor. It was a pleasure to be with Brother Lowman and his wife, as they were formerly members of the church when I was in Dayton and while there he was called to the ministry.

We have a very comfortable church building and parsonage in Portis, well located and in good condition. Here, like many places I have visited, the Dunkard fraternity is represented by two churches, where there should be only one. What a travesty for people with the same ideals, holding the same tenets of faith occupying a field that is hardly large enough for one, struggling, and often with feeling, trying at the expense of the other to build its own work. There was a time that the difference was so great that two organizations were justifiable, but the only difference today, is, that the Progressive wing has become the conservative, at least in theology.

Let us hope the day is not far distant that the 90% of us that had no part in those things that led to a division, will have enough of the Christ Spirit and love for the eternal Word of God to work together in these days of apostasy and preserve the faith of our fathers and cease to be a stumbling block to many. The Dunkard Fraternity is bound by its literal interpretation of John thirteen and the Great Commission to stand loyal to all the claims and teachings of Christ and the infallibility of God's Word. The most illogical and contradictory thing that could ever happen, would be for this people to be led into the wiles and errors of modernism.

My stay in Portis was enjoyed and the members responded in a fine way to the College appeal. Their total gift was $1,566.00 is in Chicago University, Professor Puterbaugh at Northwestern University, Professor Anspach at Michigan University, Professor Horne at Ohio State University. We have added to our faculty the following: Dr. Raymond Bixler, M. A., Columbia, Ph.D., Ohio State, History; Dr. Roy R. Ullman, M. A., Ohio State, Ph.D., University of Michigan, Education; Dr. Earl Otto, M. A., and Ph. D., University of Cincinnati, Chemistry; Miss Florence Beall, M. A., Columbia; Ph. D. prepared, University of Michigan, Associate in Education. One more to be employed, in Sociology and Economics.

This will bring to our school several new men and it is ardently hoped that they will fall in with our way of life and contribute to our advancement. I am glad to announce that thus far, the men secured are of exemplary habits, they do not use tobacco and that is saying something when one has passed through a great university.

I recently received $500 for books for the library, from a man not connected with the church. I hope this and other things will serve to stimulate giving by our own people.

The students have scattered to their respective homes. Parents are doubtless glad, but one misses the familiar faces here.

It may be of interest to know that Ashland College has been admitted to the Ohio Athletic Conference, which means that first year men can not play in any intercollegiate athletic contest.

The new catalogues are being mailed. They are quite creditable and represent a great deal of work in revising the course in order to make them conform to North Central Standards. It takes about 500 in order to send one to each college in the United States.

Many other events have transpired but I can not record them all now. If the finances keep up as I expect, we will be able to meet our increased obligations next year. Everyone owing the school, ought to make it a point to pay at the appointed time.

Dr. Bell is in from the West and has gone to the Maryland-Virginia Conference. He will stay for a few weeks and complete his canvass in that district. He and the school richly deserve the cordial treatment which he everywhere receives.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

NEWS FROM LONG BEACH

Since our last report to the Evangelist there have been twenty-six added to our church, twenty-three were baptized and three received by letter.

The new Sunday school building is progressing nicely.

During the month of May we enjoyed three wonderful treats. First, was a fine musical program rendered by our choir and its able leader, Brother Richert. Also the Men's Glee Club of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles gave us a beautiful program of sacred music, which was a great inspiration to all who heard.

Second, Dr. Lewis Chafer of Dallas, Texas, gave us five days of intensive Bible study. In his address on "Heaven" he gave us his own definition of eternal life. "Experiencing everything that ever was or ever will be, all at once."

Third, was the coming of Superintendent and Mrs. Taylor of the Pacific Garden Mission of Chicago and Evangelist Harry Von Bruch. They pictured in song and sermon the wonderful work they are doing in bringing the Bread of Life to a starving world. Our pastor, Brother Bauman, will begin

June 13 a series of Bible studies on "The Sky Scroll and Its Message," a study more in detail of the fact that God has made the very stars to tell the story of the Gospel. —Genesis 1:14.

The summer Daily Vacation Bible School of our Sunday school begins June 17. Each year we have very satisfying results from these schools where the Word is hid in the hearts of many children.

Yours in his Service,
H. F. LORENZ, Church Reporter.

NEW YORK CITY

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Greetings from the Big City. It has been our desire for a couple of months to write you the news but owing to the added cares time indeed was precious.

We want to thank our heavenly Father for his care over us in every way, we surely have gone through the "fiery furnace"

JEALOUSY

*Jealousy is an awful thing
When gnawing at the heart,
Many a life's been blighted
By its poisonous dart.*

*It is a green-eyed monster
With eyes that see awry,
Human faults are magnified
When jealousy's in the eye.*

*Friendships are torn asunder,
This sin man's soul doth blight,
A jealous eye so magnifies
That reason's out of sight.*

*Oh, how the heart does suffer
When jealousy's seated there,
And how the clouds do gather
To spoil what once was fair.*

*Oh, how the mind's tormented
And how it writhes in pain,
When reason's void of sunshine
And bears this jealous stain.*

—Harry Troupe Brewer.

but thank God, One like unto the form of the Son of God was with us.

The revival held this spring did not help us as we expected. The field here is a most difficult one. We trust in the near future another meeting might be still more helpful.

Through the services we held at Allentown we received a call to another church at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, by friends formed almost six years ago.

The pastor of that church was conducting services almost four weeks without a break. God gave us grace with the people and at once people came forward. I believe I was there almost ten days and in that time several were baptized by triune immersion by the writer. Then again we received a second call when the meetings lasted over three weeks, and God again gave much grace in spite of the enemy and his strong forces in the same church. More were baptized by triune immersion, in all about fifty adults and a few children were obedient to the faith. Some were baptized at our Allentown church, others at a colored Baptist church and the rest in the open stream.

At the close of the campaign we had a Love Feast, including the Feet Washing and the Lord's Supper celebration, which was held at another denomination, a split off from the one in which the services were held. God opened the door. This was done because no water was to be had at the other church, not even a drop. I do not know how they sprinkle people. Perhaps not with "water."

The pastor was kindly disposed and amended everything; of course I was a Brethren in all I preached.

There were about fifty people at the table—which was one table only. A former member of our church and Brother and Sister Schaffer of Allentown were with us and added a victory to the never-to-be-forgotten night.

It was storming from early evening till after ten when we were finished. All expressed a real blessing, also some a great desire to continue thus doing. Whereupon a family taking the lead began to do so, as a result many who first expressed this desire backed out as their pastor too went back on his promise to follow if God so lead.

But the family who first spoke of being thus led to follow the Lord have taken their open stand in spite of terrible persecutions and the result is a store or "Hall" has opened at Broadway, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

It is open every night. I go there each week for a couple of days and every other Sunday. When I am not there the different members take charge.

Brethren, please pray much for the new work and workers as well as members, also for us here and may God bless all "struggling work and needy places and people."

When any of you are in or near either place please let us see and hear you.

Yours in his service for souls and the Gospel of his dear Son, which is still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

NEWS FROM SPOKANE

We are rather late in reporting about our Easter program but we feel that it was a program that will never be forgotten.

Our church has never put on anything of its kind before and if it were not for having with us Edgar Broad, we may not have had it this year either. It was a cantata consisting of 22 voices, soprano, alto, tenor and bass. The solo parts were taken by our own members, Edna Grimsurd, Mrs. Roy Ross and Edgar Broad.

It was put on on the evening of March 31 and was presented before a fairly large crowd.

One of the reasons for our Sunday school and church growing as it has in the past year, we believe, is because of the interest our pastor, T. H. Broad, has been taking, especially in the children of the church. One Sunday each month, the morning service is given over to the children, where a program is prepared and talent used from the young children of the church. It has not only brought the children to the services but also the parents of the many taking part and the old enjoy the Children's Day program as well as the young.

We are indeed sorry that our pastor's health will not permit him to be with us much longer and we only hope that the climate where he settles will permit him to go on with his work.

OBITUARY A. C. HENDRICKSON

Andrew C. Hendrickson was born in Shelby County, Iowa, April 19, 1878. When he was four years of age his parents moved to Trent, South Dakota where they lived on a farm for a number of years. He was only a lad of about 15 years of age when he took a course in telegraphy and from then on was active in the business world, first as a telegraph operator, later as a merchant and lumberman.

In January, 1902, he united with the Brethren church and worshipped at the Union church at Trent, which was then under the leadership of Rev. Eli Hoover. On June of the same year he was married to Edith E. Hoover and resided at Trent, South Dakota until the fall of 1907 when he felt a desire for a Christian education and decided to attend Ashland College. The family then moved to Ashland, Ohio and he took up his school work there. For fifteen years he was connected with the College at Ashland, first as a student, later as a teacher and Bursar and finally up until the time of his death he served on the Board of Trustees. During all these years he wove himself into the hearts of students and teachers, always working for the interest of his Alma Mater and its Christian activity.

He was ordained to the ministry in the year 1911, and while still a student served the church at Fair Haven, Ohio, also the one at Mansfield, Ohio.

In the fall of 1922 the family came to Long Beach, California, where they lived for a year and a half and in the summer of 1924 moved to Ontario, California where Mr. Hendrickson had been engaged in the contracting and building business. He was taken suddenly ill on January 31 of this year, and after a ten weeks' illness the Lord called him home, April 13, 1929, aged 50 years, 11 months and 24 days.

Brother Hendrickson leaves a wife and four daughters—Mrs. H. C. Smith of Ashland, Ohio; Miss Dorcas, Miriam and Helen at home; a father, H. Hendrickson of Long Beach, his mother having preceded him to the Great Beyond several years ago; three brothers—Henry, Chris and Rene, all living in South Dakota and Iowa; two sisters—Mrs. E. R. Loucks, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota and Miss Lillian of Long Beach.

The church at La Verne and the brotherhood have sustained a great loss in the passing of A. C. Hendrickson.

We shall miss his faithful and efficient teaching in the Sunday school, his wise counsel in our business meetings and his Christlike fellowship which we cherished very much.

Our heartfelt sympathies go out to Sister Hendrickson and family in this their sore bereavement. We commit them to the God of all Consolation.

The funeral service was held in the La Verne Brethren church. The sermon was preached by Pastor, A. L. Lynn, assisted by Brethren L. S. Bauman, A. V. Kimmell, A. B. Cover and John Lienhard.

A. C. HENDRICKSON—AN APPRECIATION

In the passing of Andrew C. Hendrickson, the church has lost a faithful servant, the community a loyal citizen and the family a devoted husband and father. The writer knew him through college days as well as in later days. In our acquaintance-ship, we knew him but to love him and to cherish his friendship. During the days we shared in college life, his usual smile encouraged many a weary fellow-student and that he was loved by all students and faculty was evidenced by his popularity. He was a member of the La Verne church at the time of his sudden death where he was teacher of the Women's Bible Class and a member of the official board. He was interested in the best accomplishment of his congregation and loyally supported the work. His interest extended to all the activities of the church in general and thus the church lost a faithful servant. He was keenly alive to the needs and opportunities of the community in which he lived. He did not need to solicit work in his business as work solicited him. The same integrity, loyalty and honesty that characterized him as a student expressed the success of his business career. At the time of his death he was engaged in building the enlarged Second Long Beach church largely as a measure of his love for the Brethren Faith and not for remuneration in dollars and cents. As a father and husband he exemplified an ideal life. His smile radiated the home circle and carried that sunshine of good cheer which makes life happy. During the years that we knew him, he ruled his home with that kindness that characterizes a real man. The world has been made better because he lived and lives have been enriched by contact with him. The impression that shall live on in his memory is, that evenness of temperament that he always portrayed and Christian virtues he exemplified.

Elder A. C. Hendrickson

Djen Tung

As the days passed Djen Tung was able to go around the center. He listened to the droning sound that came from the study hall as the boys read their lessons, their voices rising and falling in the varied intonations dear to Chinese hearts. He never tired watching the boys in the workshop or the ball games at recess, soccer, and basketball. How his fingers itched to try the clay modeling one of the classes was doing. The drills and setting-up exercises, the Boy Scout meetings—surely this was a wonderful school. His father had taught him to write his name and a few other characters. There was no school in his native village, and only a few of the village fathers could read and write.

Tomorrow he must leave it all and go back to the great cotton mill. His head throbbed at the thought, and he looked down at the vivid red scars and at the stump which was all that was left of the forefinger.

Just then a friendly hand was put on his shoulder. He turned to look up into the kind face of Brown Sein-sen.

"Why, Djen Tung, you do look mournful! What is the trouble?"

Djen Tung swallowed. "Tomorrow I must return and eat more bitterness at the great cotton mill. I—I want to stay here and go to school, but I must leave and make money for my parents."

"How much do you make?" inquired Mr. Brown.

"Some days I get twenty cents (about eight cents in U. S. currency), other days only twelve," replied Djen Tung.

"How would you like to help in the hospital kitchen a part of each day, get your rice and bed and twenty cents a day? Then the rest of the time you are free to go to school."

He looked at the boy. Then suddenly Mr. Brown retired behind his handkerchief for a prolonged nose blowing. The joy that shone in Djen Tung's face seemed too great in proportion to the simple offer.

"Now, I shall make my name come true. Do you know, Brown Sein-sen, what 'Djen Tung' means?"

Mr. Brown shook his head.

"'Djen Tung' means 'Develop the East.' So with education, I, Djen Tung, though only a poor country boy—some day I will help develop our China." He looked down at the stump which had been his forefinger. "I have lost it, but I have found this," and his gesture took in the entire community center.—World Neighbors.

How Far Can We Make Education Christian?

ular and Christian?" in the Times for August 2, 1924, told the story of the remarkable system of Christian schools that for forty years have been carried on in fourteen states by Hollanders of the Christian Reformed faith; and the problem of Christian education was discussed by Mark Fak-kema, the General Secretary of the National Union of Christian Schools, Chicago, in the Times for August 6, 1927, under the title, "Our Educational Dilemma." This movement for the establishing of distinctively Christian schools, meeting the educational standards of the State but having no support from taxation, is one great evidence of the protest against the secularizing of the American school system. If this should prove the only solution of the problem (for the present age), it would mean that we hand over the public school system to those who would make it entirely secular and virtually atheistic. But in many sections of the country the Christian citizens are in such large majorities that there is abundant opportunity to influence the public schools along sound Christian lines. The practical methods of doing this will become far clearer to Christian leaders when our Christian colleges see some of these fallacies of "neutral," "secularized" education, and boldly strike out for real Christian education.

May our Christian schools accept the challenge of putting Christ and his supernatural revival power at the center of education, in the same way that we individual Christians seek to make him the center of our own lives. It will be found that this apparently hardest way, this high and seemingly impossible ideal, is not alone the easiest road to the goal, but the only safe road. For it is the road of him who is the Truth.—S. S. Times.

JACK'S GOOD NAME

"And I can't do anything for him—not one single thing," Jack shook his head mournfully as he arrived at this sorrowful conclusion. "I can't go and see him because I haven't got the time. I can't send him fruit and books and things, like well-offs does when their folks has to go to the hospital, because I haven't got the money. I can't earn a cent more'n mother and the young ones need. No help for Billy from me."

Billy was an orphan boy, younger than Jack. He had recently moved in to Jack's neighborhood. Going on an errand, he had fallen from a street car and broken his leg.

Jack was office boy in a place which made large demands on his time, and, indeed, on every other thing which might be said to belong with a growing boy. His studies were many, and his master exacting. But it never occurred to Jack to question the reasonableness or otherwise of anything which was required of him. He was nothing more than a good, plodding boy, having very fixed notions on the subject of his duty, which notions were expressed in few words: "I'm going to do the best I can."

There came a day when Jack stood face to face with a hard question. Taking a moment on his way home to run in and see how Billy was getting along, he found him with a cloud over his usually cheerful face.

"What's the matter, Billy?"

"They've been telling me"—Billy shook his head despairingly—"that I won't get well till no telling when, unless I go away from here."

"Whew, Billy!" said Jack.

"The folks here are telling me of a real nice place where I could go for twenty-five dollars, where I'd get good treatment and stay as long as I needed. They think that's awful cheap, but twenty-five dollars is a lot of money."

"It is that!"

"So I'll be back near you the beginning of the week, and then I'll be with you evenings. And"—hopefully—"I guess I'll get well without any twenty-five dollars."

Jack talked about it with his mother. "I wish the poor boy could go," she said. "It might be the settling of his health for years to come."

"But how can he?" said Jack in a discouraged tone.

"If it could be paid a dollar at a time," she said, half questionably. "You might be able to put by a dollar a week for it."

"I don't see how you will spare it mother."

"We might pinch a little closer."

After a little more talk Jack made his plans. He went next morning to his employer and asked if he could advance the twenty-five dollars, deducting a dollar each week from his pay until the amount was made up.

Mr. Strong looked keenly at the boy as, with much hesitation, he pressed his request, telling of Billy and his needs. "How do I really know you'll work it out?" asked Mr. Strong. "You can't give me any security, can you?"

"No sir," and Jack dropped his head.

"You might, you know, leave me before the twenty-five weeks were up."

"I'd promise not to," said Jack earnestly; "but I haven't a thing to give you for security."

Mr. Strong's manner changed as he went on: "Your promise will be enough. I'd take your word, Jack, for more than twenty-five dollars. You have worked for me a good while, and I know what you are. Your good name makes your promise all the security I want." As Jack was turning away, his face crimson with gratification at the kind words, Mr. Strong added: "I'll speak more about it tomorrow."

"If—if" Jack strove to stammer out his thanks—"if there's a thing more about the place that I can do that—I don't do, I'd be glad, sir—"

"There isn't," said Mr. Strong kindly. "You are honest and faithful in everything. Such a reputation is a valuable thing to start on in life."

Mr. Strong, on going home that evening, spoke to his grown-up daughter: "Bertha, haven't you something to do with some of these fresh-air businesses?"

"Yes, father; you have given me money for them."

"Where they send poor little lads into the country and feed them up and brace them up and return them as good as new?"

"Exactly," said Bertha, smiling.

"Well, I have a boy for you—one for whom I want a top seat."

So Billy went out to one of the places provided by some of the Master's faithful who strive to follow in his footsteps in showing loving kindness to his little ones. Jack's heart gave a great bound when he learned that Miss Bertha Strong was to see to Billy's outing, for surely it must be something better than could be afforded by anyone else. Looking into his pay envelope at the end of the week, he turned back with it to Mr. Strong. "You have given a dollar too much, sir. There's the expense for Billy, you remember."

"I remember; but that goes on the account of your good name. There's nothing more to pay. And there will be a vacancy in the office next door by the time Billy comes back; if he is your kind of a boy, he can have the place."—Ex.

IN THE SHADOW

BERKHIMER—Hettie S. Otta Berkheimer was born at Osterburg, Bedford County, Pennsylvania, January 18, 1852 and departed this life at her home in Salsmills on the morning of April 29, 1929, aged 77 years, 3 months and eleven days.

Her husband, Daniel Berkheimer, a veteran of the Civil War, preceded her to the better world about nine years ago. The deceased was a daughter of Barbara and Malinda Otta. Early in life she became a Christian and united with the Brethren church of New Enterprise and remained a loyal worker to the end. Realizing her end was near, she asked to be anointed according to James the 5th chapter. She then was reconciled and ready to meet her Savior.

She was always in attendance at church and Sunday school when health permitted, having received a certificate for regular attendance at Sunday school in the past year. She is survived by one son and four daughters—Park O. Berkheimer and Mrs. Della Brumbaugh of Salsmills, Mrs. Ella Craig, Mrs. Maude Romey and Mrs. Arizona Millinger of McKeesport, Pa.; fifteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren; also two brothers—Wilson of Altoona and Harry of Osterburg, Pa.

Mrs. Berkheimer was a kind and sympathizing mother, a devoted Christian and a highly esteemed neighbor and citizen. She lived a greater part of her married life in Salsmills. Funeral services were held in the church of the Brethren near her home in the village, conducted by her pastor, Rev. Elmer Keck, assisted by Rev. D. T. Detweiler, who preached in able funeral sermon and who was acquainted with the deceased for many years. Interment was made in the cemetery near the village.

ELMER KECK.

EPPLEY—Mary Pauline Mauk, daughter of Benjamin and Melinda Mauk, was born in Bedford County, Penna., June 23, 1890. She was married to Howard B. Eppley, June 29, 1918. To this union twin daughters, Irene and Norene were born. On Sunday, April 21, 1929, the spirit of Mrs. Eppley took its flight to be with her mother, leaving a sorrowing husband, the twin daughters, her mother, and two sisters to adjust themselves to a life from which her personal counsel and companionship will be missing. Suffered fever coupled with pneumonia caused her demise, and because of the laws requirement, immediate burial was necessary, and on Monday afternoon, April 22, brief funeral services were conducted at the family home in Johnstown, Penna., by the undersigned.

Mrs. Eppley was a young woman of very likable character, and her going out from her home brought severe grief to the hearts of her loved ones. The work of rearing her motherless daughters will be conscientiously carried on by the husband and the maternal and paternal grandmothers, both of whom make their home with the bereaved husband. Mrs. Eppley was a member of the Lutheran church and a sincere believer. The obsequies were conducted by the undersigned at the old home of the husband's family, and by the husband's request. This notice would have appeared sooner but the nature of the disease causing the death made it inconvenient to secure the facts for earlier insertion in the paper. Her husband and family go to the sorrowing loved ones. God's grace will suffice for this and all trials of life.

DYVOLL BELOTE.

LEATHERMAN—Maria C. Tressel Leatherman, daughter of David and Marguerite Tressel, was born August 13, 1858 and died October 6, 1928, aged 72 years, 1 month and 23 days. She was married to Luther Leatherman in 1879, and to this union 10 children were born—Rev. N. Victor Leatherman of South Bend, Ind., being one of the sons. Funeral services were held in the Diamond Mill Old Order Dunkard church near Troutwood, Ohio. Funeral sermon delivered by Rev. N. Kinsey, of Clayton, O., assisted by W. R. Dieter, then of West Alexandria, O.

W. R. DIETER.

TEDROW—Samantha Harriet Tedrow was born in 1854 in Rockwood, Pa., and passed away December 11, 1928, at the home of her daughter, in Manchester, in Lincoln, Nehr., aged 74 years, 1 month and 15 days.

Funeral services were in charge of the writer at the Brethren church in Carleton, Nehr.

W. R. DIETER.

BEAVERS—Ralph Beavers, son of J. W. and Ellen Beavers, was born in Decatur County, Iowa, February 11, 1889, and departed this life at his home near Carleton, Nehr., May 23, 1929, at the age of 40 years, 3 months and 10 days.

He was married to Cora Hughes on June 22, 1904, and to this union 11 children were born, all of whom are living. He and his wife became members of the Brethren church during the revival campaign held by Rev. F. G. Coleman some 25 years ago.

Funeral services held at the home May 23, 1929, and burial at Davenport Cemetery, the undersigned officiating.

W. R. DIETER.

FRANK—John H. Frank, son of Samuel and Harriett Frank, was born in Somerset, Pa., June 7, 1852, and departed this life, February 23, 1929, at the age of 76 years, 8 months and 16 days. His were husband years, in that he were well spent. Honesty, uprightness and kindness formed a good mixture in all he did or said, thus his life counted for much, and he could rightly be called "fennec John."

He was a pioneer in the state, and was a charter member of the Beaver city, Nebraska, Brethren church, later transferring his membership to Carleton, where he kept it for over a quarter of a century.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

W. R. DIETER.

XIV. SOME PROBLEMS FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE

By Dr. J. Allen Miller, Dean of Ashland Seminary

With the General Conference only two months distant it will be worth our while to consider some urgent and practical problems of our church life that demand attention. We have been too slow to learn the great and imperative need of wise and consistent planning of our work. Too many times we have gone on without any definite plans at all and the end was disappointment and loss. There is no need in this brief article to cite specific instances. Let me rather direct the attention of the thoughtful reader to some of the present insistent problems that will if squarely faced and solved tremendously further our interests as a Church and add strength for all future years.

Dr. J. Allen Miller

Conservation

It was my privilege a few years ago to call the attention of the Conference to the need of conserving our numbers. It was passed over with scarce a thought. With centers of Brethren activity, large and strong as well as weak and struggling, numbering scarcely two hundred, we are necessarily tremendously handicapped in the matter of conserving our own membership. For men will change places of residence for many reasons. When members move into communities where we have no congregation, all too frequently we lose them. We have been adding over two thousand members by baptism per year for forty years. Where are they? Making the fullest possible allowance for natural losses our membership ought to be far larger than it is. We have certainly thousands of members who have been lost and whom we might have saved had we planned wisely to care for them. At this very writing we have other hundreds, I believe, perhaps thousands, who are isolated from the Church and whom we shall lose if we do not care for them. WE MUST CERTAINLY MAKE SOME PROVISION TO SAVE OUR OWN EVERYWHERE.

Supervision

Many of the churches we now have are too weak to live long and pay the price unless they are given help. We may as well face this problem first as last. If we face it and make possible the conservation of groups we have we shall be wholly the gainers. I mean that congregations needing leadership where there is none locally must be given that leadership by the brotherhood as a whole. It is not so much supervision or money that is needed as wise counsel and leadership which many of our smaller congregations call for and must have. We should have a man who could act as a sort of general superintendent, who would go to all the needy congregations of the brotherhood and render every assistance possible.

The Big Brother Church

This is the matter of caring for the weaker congregations pastorally through the ministry of the nearby or nearest strong church. About two months ago I came into direct contact with a church that is thus cared for. The fact is the plan to which I here call attention is called here in Ohio the Mansfield plan. The city of Mansfield, Ohio has two strong Congregational churches. The pastors and officials of these two congregations have undertaken to save at least five struggling Congregational churches that are located in country or small town communities within reach of the center—Mansfield—by supplying pastoral leadership and services on a week day evening or Sunday afternoon. The small congregations maintain their separate organizations, meet their own local expenses, conduct their own Sunday schools and, in short, are fully functioning as churches in their respective communities. They are living streams of power to the great central churches. CAN WE BE WISE ENOUGH AND BIG ENOUGH TO PLAN AS EFFECTIVELY?

HOW can a Murderer Die Three Times?

A California judge, not long ago, faced a very peculiar problem. A young man, under trial in his court, was charged with abusing and killing three young boys. The jury found him guilty on each of the three charges. Now the law requires that the death penalty be inflicted for each murder. Therefore, the judge solemnly imposed upon the prisoner the following sentence:

"You are to be hanged by the neck until you are dead, in execution of the judgment on the first count; you are to be hanged by the neck until dead, in execution of the second count; and you are to be hanged by the neck until dead, in execution of the third account."

No better example than this could be given to demonstrate the inadequacy of human justice. The murderer deserves to pay the death penalty three times. But he has only one life to give. When he has been hanged once, he is beyond the power of all human courts. This very inadequacy of human justice should compel us to believe in judgment and punishment beyond the grave. Divine justice, over there, will not be cheated. It will be meted out by a Judge who is infallible, and from whose judgments there will be no escape.

"All have sinned." Let us not forget that. But thanks be to God, the soul which takes refuge in Jesus Christ shall never be brought into judgment for sin. The infinite Son of God paid the penalty for our sins, a penalty which we never could have satisfied by an eternity of suffering.

THE Progress of "Peace"

Senator Borah, staunch advocate of peace, is pessimistic about the present outlook. He finds that "for the last ten years, while talking of disarmament and peace, while professing to want peace, there have been fastened upon the world the heaviest military establishments in all history."

He says further that "there are more men under arms at the present time than at the beginning of the World War. ... The Versailles Treaty was a continuation of the war. It has been waged just as it was waged prior to November 11, 1918, but waged in a way scarcely less deadly in its effects upon millions of human beings."

Senator Borah should know. He is Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

A Growing Disease

Morbus Sabbaticus attacks the patient suddenly every Sunday; no symptoms are felt on Saturday night; the patient sleeps well, wakes feeling well; eats a hearty breakfast; but about church time the attack comes on and continues until services are over for the morning. Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he feels much better and is able to take a walk, talk about politics and read the Sunday papers; he eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He retires early, sleeps well and wakes up Monday morning refreshed and able to go to work, and does not have any symptoms of the disease until the following Sunday. The peculiar features are as follows:

1. It always attacks members of the church.
2. It never makes its appearance except on Sunday and prayer meeting night.
3. The symptoms vary, but it never interferes with the sleep or appetite.
4. It never lasts more than twenty-four hours.
5. It generally attacks the head of the family.
6. It is contagious.
7. No physician is ever called.
8. It always proves fatal in the end to the soul.
9. No remedy is known for it except prayer.
10. Christ is the only antidote.
11. It is becoming fearfully prevalent and is sweeping thousands every year prematurely to destruction.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Galatians 6:7.—Rev. George E. Muran, in Schuyler Co. Herald, Iowa.

IN THE SHADOW OF THE ROCK

*O shadow in a sultry land!
We gather to thy breast,
Whose love, enfolding like the night,
Brings quietude and rest;
Glimpse of the fairer life to be,
In foretaste here possessed.*

*That which the garish day has lost,
The twilight vigil brings;
While softer the vesper bell
Its silver cadence rings—
The sense of an immortal trust,
The brush of angel wings.*

—C. M. Packard.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

40. Is it proper and right for a minister to say things about his members from the pulpit which he would not say to them personally?

This question in almost the same form has been answered before. No. It is never right and a fair minded, spirit-filled minister will never do so. I call it cowardly in addition. It puts self-respecting men and women who sit in the congregation in most embarrassing situations and gives those accused no fair opportunity to set themselves right even if they are in the wrong. MINISTERS HAVE A HIGHER CALLING, AND TO DO OR SAY ANYTHING WHICH THE HOLY SPIRIT WOULD NOT INSPIRE IS BENEATH THEIR DIGNITY.

41. What is meant by the term "righteousness of God" as found in Romans 3:21?

"But now apart from the law a righteousness of God hath been manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ unto all them that believe. ..." So reads the above verse.

To fully understand the passage we must have in mind the argument of St. Paul. He states his great thesis, or proposition to be proved, in chapter 1:17. The righteous shall live by faith. Then he proceeds to show that the righteousness of God is revealed in the Gospel.

The argument then takes on a sustained and progressive course supported by experience and the Word of God, that is the Old Testament Natural religion has failed in its purposes, that is, to bring men to God and give them peace and reconciliation. They found no justification but instead went progressively into sin and wickedness until given up by God. Should the Jew boast of his superior spiritual attainments over his Gentile brother? How can he? He too has failed to attain to the standing of approval before God. He rested in works of the law. And so, to be very brief, Paul concludes all under the condemnation of sin. Is there then no way of escape? Is there no help from God? Can no man find justification and live? To these questions Paul boldly replies that God has made known his righteousness. This new type of righteousness is independent of any legal system, is made possible by the propitiatory sacrifices of Christ, and is appropriated by faith in Christ. It wholly encompasses man's need and it stands attested by both the law and the prophets. I quote from Brother McClain in his Outline of the Epistle, "The question in this section (3:21-8:29) will be 'How does God save sinners?' And the answer will be 'in Christ Jesus.' He will deal first with Justification—how the believer is declared righteous in Christ (3:21-5:21); second, with Sanctification—how the believer is kept securely in Christ (8:1-39). The foundation of all is the 'righteousness of God,' and the principle by which this righteousness may be received is 'faith.'"

"The righteousness of God" accordingly means essentially God's righteousness. Then as the direct outcome of the manifestation of that righteousness in the death of Christ and by virtue of the believer's faith in that death God's righteousness is bestowed upon him, the believer, and God is declared to be just or righteous, as well as the justifier of all who come to him through faith."

Obedience to Law, or Loyalty Sunday

Obedience to law is the present outstanding issue before the American people, according to a recent statement by President Hoover, and leaders in every walk of life have been saying the same thing. We are in the midst of a period of lawlessness that is disturbing the minds of even the most hopeful and optimistic. It seems to be contagious, and is spreading at an alarming rate among youths and adults, men and women, high and low, rich and poor, learned and unlearned. This lawless spirit shows itself especially virulent in regard to Prohibition, but it is by no means confined to that phase of law. It has affected the attitude of many people toward all law. Mr. Hoover says: "A surprising number of our people, otherwise of responsibility to the community, have drifted into the extraordinary notion that laws are made for those who choose to obey them." Therefore he considers "the enforcement and obedience to the laws of the United States, . . . the dominant issue" before us, and has taken occasion to urge the duty upon the American public in one of the soundest statements that has come from a President in many years. The Baptist is absolutely right when it says this appeal is "unanswerable on any established ground of sound morals or of political science," and the vast majority of the people will recognize the reasonableness of it.

"I would not see our freedom less," says Mr. Hoover, "but self-government implies that those who govern themselves shall not only make their own laws, but shall also obey them. We have repudiated the rights of others to rule us; then we must rule ourselves. The alternative is anarchy." There is no logic that can refute that argument, and by implication at least, those who ignore or refuse to obey the laws which the majority of the people have enacted are declaring themselves in favor of anarchy. It is utter folly to talk about liberty apart from obedience to law; it is law and its observance that makes liberty possible. Law must not be ignored either by private citizen or by public official. Says the President, "Law should be observed and must be enforced until it is repealed by the proper processes of our democracy. The duty to enforce the law rests upon every public official, and the duty to obey it rests upon every citizen." The duty of enforcement and the duty of obedience stand side by side; they are inseparable and both are essential to liberty.

But the duty of obedience to law for the Christian citizen is founded not merely on civil considerations, but upon religious as well. It is a divine injunction authorized by the inspired Word of God. "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. . . . For so is the will of God, that by well-doing ye should put to silence the ignorance of foolish men; as free, and not using your freedom for a cloak of wickedness, but as bondservants of God" (1 Peter 2:13, 15, 16). The Christian man or woman least of all citizens has any excuse for ignoring or disobeying the law. He may not feel the force of the civil law, in fact, he may have a sense of freedom from it. If so, it is not because he is at liberty to disobey or disregard it, but because he is subject to a higher law that by its very nature involves the right conduct that the lesser law seeks to compel. The professed Christian who would claim freedom from the law on the ground of having a higher citizenship and at the same time would violate or fail to live in conformity to the law, would be merely using his freedom as a cloak of wickedness, as the Apostle Peter suggests.

President Hoover continues: "No individual has the right to determine what law shall be obeyed and what shall not be enforced. If a law is wrong, its rigid enforcement is the surest guarantee of its repeal. If it is right, its enforcement is the quickest method of compelling respect for it. I have seen statements published within a few days encouraging citizens to defy a law because that particular journal did not approve of the law itself. I leave comment on such an attitude to any citizen with a sense of public responsibility." Such an attitude is unpatriotic, and unChristian, and yet there are many people who are giving themselves to it. It needs to be told to such persons plainly that they are working against orderly government. To quote the statement of a certain metropolitan daily, "They are stabbing civilization in the back." And to use the words of the immortal Lincoln, every such violator of law "tramples upon the blood of his father."

That cannot be the attitude of Christian people, and especially not of those who are members of the Dunker fraternity whose outstanding plea is that of obedience. We have stood through the years for obedience to the whole Word of God and against the right of any individual or group to decide what part or parts of that Word shall be obeyed. And consistency requires that the laws of man shall be obeyed with that same spirit and thoroughness.

Let us preach and teach obedience in Sunday school and in church. Let us join the President in calling for a new pledge and emphasis of loyalty. Sunday, June 30th is suggested as Loyalty Sunday. Let us join in the effort to "uphold the laws and to outlaw the lawbreakers."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Christian Endeavor society of the First church of Philadelphia reports its work this week. A most commendable characteristic of this society is its interest in mission work, both locally and beyond its city borders. Let us hear from other societies. The space is yours if you will use it.

Dr. Bell's report this week comes from Beaver City, Nebraska, where Brother E. S. Flora is pastor. The gift from this church to the Permanent Endowment Fund of Ashland College was $335.00, which makes the total of the Fund to stand at $212,071.20. Brother Bell remarks that this church has suffered much loss in recent years, but if they continue to battle bravely there is much hope that we shall have here again a "good, strong, aggressive church."

The National Statistician, Brother George E. Cone, says the statistical reports are over-due, and he is anxious to have them forthcoming, so that the records may be complete. And what he points out is true, the advantage is to the local church as well as to the brotherhood to have the very best report possible. It makes us somewhat ashamed of ourselves when we must give to the world a smaller representation of our numbers than we really deserve. Let's report; every one!

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the progress of the mission work in the Argentine. During a brief meeting at Huinca Renanco, where Brother Sickel and Brother Zeche are in charge, there were ten conversions registered. At the Christian Alliance mission at Pico he held a meeting which resulted in twenty-five conversions. The testimony which a Christian grocer at this place made in the face of a destructive speech by an anarchist is refreshing for the courage it reveals and the faith it demonstrates.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, reports good progress in his field, and tells of the largely attended and enthusiastic district conference recently held in his church and the splendid impression made by the conference on the local church and community. Dr. Bell's visit was appreciated and the congregation did its bit for the cause he represents. Brother Ankrum looks forward to his seventh year with these people with high hopes and believes the prospect of the field is big.

Prof. and Mrs. Alva J. McClain are "on the road," as Brother McClain writes in the news department. The immediate objective was Bellingham, Washington, where he was scheduled to give a series of lectures before the State Christian Endeavor convention, and later he is to address the Northwest Brethren conference at Spokane. But there seems to be play as well as work on the schedule, for he admits of taking along the "old fishin' pole." We wish them a pleasant vacation ere they return to Long Beach for the Southern California Conference.

Dr. Florence Gribble tells of a conference of the missionaries that was held early in April. These conferences are a source of mutual inspiration as well as a clearing house of ideas and methods and a time of counselling on the business connected with the mission work. The story of the poor, half-crazed woman who escaped from the Yaloke mission hospital and the sad fate that befell her constitutes a challenge to easy-going, indifferent American Christians to bestir themselves with zeal and consecration to save such as she. It is not the will of God that one of these should perish, "but men are slow and late."

Dean J. Allen Miller calls our attention to the fact that Ashland Seminary is publishing a new catalogue which will soon be ready for mailing. It is planned that more attention shall be given to seminary work at Ashland and it is urged that the churches shall send their young men of finest qualifications to be trained for the work of the ministry of the Brethren church. Next year three teachers will give practically their entire time to the Seminary. The only exception is that Dean Miller will share his classes in philosophy with students in the college, but every seminary student also must take these courses, and the work of Professors Monroe and Stuckey will be wholly confined to the seminary.

Dr. Charles A. Bame spent a few days in attendance at the Church of the Brethren conference held at North Manchester, Indiana, June 12 to 19, and informs us that he found a very fine and fraternal spirit prevailing among the delegates, and that there was a new and decided interest being manifested among our larger Dunker group in the reunion of our forces. He said they had a very strong program and the attendance was very large. His attendance at this convention was something like an attendance at a huge family reunion, inasmuch as he spent a goodly portion of his public ministry in this church and was well acquainted with many of their leaders.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us an installment of College news, in which the total enrollment of the Summer School is given at 335, which is above capacity. The increasing standing of the college is doubtless having the effect of making Ashland more and more attractive as a teacher's college. An important observation made by Dr. Jacobs is that Educational Day offerings are coming in slowly. Surely this cannot be an indication that our people have treated this appeal lightly. We can scarcely think of anything that would be more hurtful to the future of our denomination than that our churches should fail to give their best possible support at this time. If any have not taken an offering that represents their best, it is not too late to make it so. And when taken, send it in promptly to Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio.

A most interesting and happy romance was recently culminated in Ashland College faculty circles. We had intended to announce it in last week's paper, but in some way we inadvertently omitted it from our notes. On the eighth of June Professor Melvin A. Stuckey, head of the Religious Department of Ashland Seminary, and Miss Anna Barbara Brauer, head of the Music department of Ashland College, were united in marriage and they are now at home on College Hill. Brother Stuckey is well known throughout the brotherhood, he having spent two years as traveling secretary of the National Sunday School Association, during which time he visited practically every school in the brotherhood. For two years he has been proving himself a successful teacher in the Seminary. Miss Brauer is an accomplished musician, having studied under some of the best musicians of America and also having done work abroad. She has proven herself a popular teacher of music and has built up a strong piano department in Ashland College. We congratulate these talented young people and bespeak for them the good wishes of the Evangelist family.

Shipshewana is commanding a growing interest not only among Indiana churches but among churches of neighboring districts. Fourth of July is to be their first big day. Among the speakers for that day is Dr. Charles A. Bame. The young people's training camp program continues from July 7th to 14th and the Bible Conference program from July 14th to the 21st. Dr. J. Allen

Miller is scheduled to appear from day to day on the Bible Conference program and his work is worth going a long distance to enjoy. Shipshewana Lake is certainly a growing concern and one of which Brethren people can be proud, and one to which they may well give their hearty support. The enthusiasm of the young people for the camp activities is especially noteworthy. We have heard of several young people from Ohio who are planning to go, and many churches outside of Indiana may well back this institution by sending their young people. Aside from the personal benefits to be derived from training and social contacts, attendance at this camp will help to build in the young people a spirit of denominational pride because of the fact that they are being provided with what the young people of other churches have.

The Conference at North Manchester

The Evangelist office has been receiving the Conference Daily published to carry the messages, transactions and other news of the large annual conference Church of the Brethren recently convened at North Manchester, Indiana, back to the home membership of that church. Elder John R. Snyder, pastor of the Church of the Brethren at Tyrone, Pennsylvania, is the experienced and efficient editor, and to him we are doubtless indebted for this complimentary copy. It is a splendid way of enlarging and popularizing the influence of their Annual Meeting and of bringing the blessings of such a great gathering to the vast numbers who were unable to attend.

Perusing the reports and messages that were sent out from day to day we were impressed with the high spiritual tone and strong character of the conference. The thinking and leadership of the church seems to be in constructive ways, and commendable effort is being made to stir the rank and file of their membership with the tremendous task and opportunity that this day offers to a people with such a whole Gospel and vital message as the Dunker people champion. We noticed that one of our own men, Prof. J. Raymond Schutz, pastor of our church at North Manchester and member of the faculty of Manchester College, gave the address of welcome at the opening of the conference. The daily records that Brother Schutz "abounded in good humor as he dilated on the meaning of conference in North Manchester" and displayed a "mastery of the background of the Brethren." An outstanding visiting speaker at the conference was Frederick J. Libby, a prominent Quaker and executive secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War. Scanning the program, we were impressed with the prominent place given to college men and to educational leaders in the church. In the last two decades this church has gone forward in a remarkable way in matters of education and have produced a leadership that reflects credit upon the church.

Sunday, June 16th, was a big day, both in attendance and in the quality of the program. The throng of people on the grounds was variously estimated at from 15,000 to 35,000, but it is likely that a fairer estimate is from 20,000 to 22,000. There were at least three separate preaching services conducted in the morning to accommodate the crowds, one of which was the tabernacle tent, where 7,000 worshippers were assembled, and were addressed by Dr. C. C. Ellis, vice-president of Juniata College. In addition to the other features of the day, the Sunday evening program closed with an address by Mr. Libby, outstanding leader in the work for world peace.

Dr. H. K. Ober was elected moderator, and the 1930 conference will go to the eastern section. We congratulate our sister church on the success and the forward look of their annual gathering and wish for them the utmost of courage, and faithfulness and aggressiveness in carrying forward the great work that they have envisioned.

PRAYER REQUESTS THIS WEEK—

Pray for the mission work in French Equatorial Africa.

Brother Freeman Ankrum of Oak Hill, West Virginia, wishes "to be remembered as we continue to sow and reap in this corner of the vineyard."

Dr. C. F. Yoder of Argentina says: "Pray for us," which request he prefaced with the statement: "If it were not that the Lord is great we would be but a ripple struggling against the waves of sin."

Was Jesus a Pacifist?

By Miles Taber

Was Jesus a pacifist? To answer this question, we must know who a pacifist is. And to know who a pacifist is, we must understand the nature of war. Dr. Sherwood Eddy has well defined war as "a means of attempting to settle international or civil disputes, by armed military forces through the organized destruction of life and property, in which each side seeks to impose its will upon the other by force." The significant fact which is recognized in this definition is that war is a means or method of accomplishing certain ends. Consequently, war as a means is not to be confused with any holy ends or high ideals which it is proposed to gain by war. Democracy, liberty, civilization and Christianity and all ideals worth fighting for, but the question is, What method shall we use? What weapons shall we wield?

With this definition of war before us, it is easy to define a pacifist. He is one who refuses to sanction war as a method. He believes that war is fundamentally wrong and that it should never be engaged in, regardless of the causes of the conflict. Was Jesus, then, a pacifist? Jesus' answer to this question should be our answer. He is still our final authority. With Peter we must say, "We must obey God rather than men."

Jesus did not specifically denounce war. He preached against many sins, but war is not among them. But this is merely negative evidence. There were other practices existing in Jesus' day, which we regard as wrong today, which he did not denounce. But one can hardly say that he approved of everything which he did not preach against. Apply the same test to your pastor and see the absurdity of such a belief. Jesus did not preach against polygamy, and a group of his pretended followers have thereby justified the practice. He did not specifically denounce slavery, and Southern preachers waxed eloquent in civil war days justifying the traffic. So Jesus did not specifically denounce war, and many Christians have seized the fact to justify that means of settling international and civil disputes. But the argument is as fallacious in one case as in the others.

Although Jesus did not specifically denounce war, he did lay down certain general principles which are incompatible with war. These principles are parallel to those which finally led the enlightened Christian conscience to condemn polygamy and slavery. The first of them is love, love which includes our enemies in its scope. And Jesus was not speaking of fantastic, hypothetical enemies when he said, "Love your enemies", but he referred to real flesh and blood enemies. He meant those who hate us and persecute us. He meant the English of '76, the southerners of '61 and the Germans and Austrians of '17. This love should be manifested in prayer on their behalf.

This love is to be patterned after God's love for men, and is the basis and sign of sonship. "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you; that ye may be the sons of your Father who is in heaven" is the way Jesus puts it. A son resembles his father. God, the Father, is love. That love embraces the whole world which was in rebellion against him—his enemies. Sons of God will manifest the same love. It is the distinguishing mark of Christians.

That this God-given spirit of love is incompatible with the spirit of war hardly needs proof. Imagine a soldier before the battle with his heart filled with love for the men who will face him in the trenches! Imagine him praying to his heavenly Father that their lives may be spared so that they may return to their families! Imagine him rising from his knees at the sound of the bugle to enter the battle! What kind of a soldier would he be? The answer is, he would not be a soldier at all in any real sense of the word. Hatred of the enemy is essential to successful warfare. If it is lacking, it is manufactured by the War Department. It must be there. Hate is essential to war. Love is essential to Christianity. Hate and love are mutually exclusive. Love, then, is the first principle of Jesus which is incompatible with war.

Non-resistance is a second principle taught by Jesus which cannot be harmonized with war. He said "Resist not him that is evil." But did not James say, "Resist the devil"? Yes, and there is no contradiction. James is speaking of spiritual resistance of a spiritual enemy. Jesus is speaking of carnal resistance of a carnal enemy. James recommends using the armor of God of which Paul speaks, in the struggle of the soul. Jesus condemns using the armor of men in physical struggle. Our weapons are spiritual, our enemy is spiritual and our warfare is spiritual. But Jesus said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." If Jesus' kingdom is of this world his servants will fight: if it is not of this world they will not fight; he said "My kingdom is not of this world."

The failure of the disciples to fight for Jesus is not due to any lack of willingness on their part. Peter was starting a revolution when he struck off the ear of Malchus with his sword. But Jesus quickly put a stop to the affair by rebuking Peter and healing Malchus. If ever there was a righteous cause in which a sword might be lifted, it was the cause of Peter. He was defending the Son of Man from death at the hands of sinful, jealous, hypocritical Jews. But Jesus on that night forever renounced that method of accomplishing worthy and righteous ends. Not only was Peter's a righteous cause, it was a war of defense. His was not a policy of aggression. He was defending the Person of Jesus. But Jesus condemned military defense. Non-resistance was always his policy and his doctrine, and non-resistance is incompatible with war, even war for defense.

The third principle laid down by Jesus which is contrary to war is justice. The Golden Rule is justice. It simply teaches us to do to others what we think it would be right and just for them to do to us. And justice is incompatible with war. How wide of the mark are those who attempt to justify war on the ground of justice! War never decides right; it always decides might. Might does not make right; might makes victory, and victory ignores right. No student of history could maintain that victory has always belonged to the side in the right. To do so would be to justify the ruthless aggressions of Alexander, Caesar and Napoleon, to say nothing of the partitions of Poland and European conquests in Africa. War has failed as a method of getting justice. It may determine military strength, but it cannot settle questions of right and wrong.

Right here let us dispel the notion that the functions of the soldier and policeman are similar. The soldier has been called the international policeman. Nothing could be more untrue. In the first place, military men have a profound dislike for police duty. If the entire army and navy were put to work enforcing prohibition it might help solve that problem, but they resent every effort to force the task upon them. Then in the second place, the policeman deals with those who are guilty; the soldier destroys the innocent, often freeing the guilty. The ten million men who lost their lives in the war cannot be blamed for causing the war or the evils which lead to it. Neither can the twenty million wounded men be charged with responsibility. Those who were responsible are either still living in comfort, or were allowed to finish their lives in peace. Then again, the policeman acts under certain definite laws, while war is the acme of lawlessness. Can anyone claim that war is successful in bringing justice? Jesus believed in justice; could he sanction this harbinger of injustice? Love, non-resistance, justice—these three ideals of Jesus make war impossible for those who accept them.

We are told by some that war is wrong, but necessary. But Jesus did not teach us to do wrong no matter how much good might result from it. Judas did wrong in betraying his Lord, yet that betrayal led to the crucifixion which was necessary to the redemption of mankind. But that worthy result does not justify the heinous crime of Iscariot. So if war is wrong, it is wrong to take any part in it, regardless of the benefits which may come from it.

In some quarters we are told that a man is not a man if he will not protect his home and family from violence. Yet a man may give his life in war for such protection and still leave the home unprotected. In other words, war is an uncertain means of protection. But the Christian has a certain protection which never fails, in the Person of his Savior. No, that does not mean that the pacifist who trusts God for protection will never see his home destroyed. Neither is it true that the Christian who trusts God to protect his home from cyclones, earthquakes and disease will never suffer under these afflictions. But it does mean that no harm of any kind can come to the man who trusts in God, using only Christian weapons, except that affliction is the will of God. In the garden Jesus said to Peter, "Put up the sword into the sheath: the cup which the Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" He refused to accept military defense, and accepted the cross which followed as the will of the Father for him. At another time he said to his disciples, "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Let there be less fear of those soldiers who can kill only the body, and more fear of that enemy who inspires us to disobey the teachings of our Lord.

A View from the Distant Hills

By S. C. Henderson

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him.—1 Corinthians 2:9.

Human eyes and ears are eager to see and to hear. Like children, we are all eyes and ears. It is the old delusion; the new pastime, sights and sounds, scenes and music. From the crush on Broadway to the bright scenes on Main Street there are nightly crowds of folks wanting to see and to hear. Seeing and hearing is the lure of the globe trotter and the gypsy automobilist. The wise old preacher in Ecclesiastes observed, "The eyes are never tired of seeing nor the ears of hearing."

Man is not satisfied to use merely his eyes and ears with which nature has endowed him. He has put an extension to his eye and brought down the heavens through the telescope and made himself a neighbor to the distant stars. He uses another instrument called the microscope by which he can focus his vision on a new world, smaller and more fairy-like than Gulliver ever dreamed of. There he finds his most deadly enemies and friendly allies. With a new ear, he holds conversation with friends across continents and even across the sea. His radio picks music from the air and with the phonograph, he treasures up the speaker's voice for future generations. The other day television became a reality.

But in spite of all these, Paul says, "ye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." There are sights and sounds yet ahead upon the distant hills. There are sweeter melodies than the masters have ever dreamed, and beauty more glorious than any artist-eye has ever perceived.

It is impossible for us to forecast the wonders yet to be. Away back in the thirteenth century, almost seven hundred years ago, there lived Roger Bacon, a wise man for his day. His words seem prophetic when he said:

"The time will come when machines for navigation will be made without rowers—great ships can be guided with one pilot on river or sea more swiftly than if they were full of oarsmen. Likewise vehicles are possible which without draught animals can be propelled with incredible speed. Likewise flying-machines are possible in the middle of which a man may sit using some ingenious device by which artificial wings will beat the air like those of a flying bird. Also machines although small, can lift moreover unlimited weights, than which in emergency nothing is more useful."

The poet muses the things that men have done is the earnest of what they still may do. What Einstein's latest theory may have in store for the future remains unseen to us, but the world need not be surprised at any stupendous undreamed development.

And yet there are natural things far beyond our ken. I will not say that we will never be able to see with artificial eyes "The flowers grow, or hear with artificial ears, the music of the spheres." Man has a great unheard and unseen realm ahead. The poet said truly:

"There's music in the sighing reed;
There's music in the gushing rill;
There's music in all things, if man had ears to hear."

We have our limitations in sight and sound. Knowing what the telescope, the microscope, the X-rays, television, the radio have revealed to us, we can expect only more mysteries beyond.

Yet Paul says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." Great as are all those things that man has done, yet man has only used the powers at hand—God's laws—God's materials, God's co-workers. Man never works alone. And what more can we expect? An old veteran, who had fought in many wars in far away India was telling of his hairbreadth escapes. His hearers all gasped, "How wonderful!" Then the old man said, "All that is nothing compared with what I still expect to see." His auditors were surprised. He was an old infirm man. The vigor of youth was gone. Out of curiosity someone ventured to ask the old man what he meant. They expected to hear some whim of an aged man. Then the old man arose with fire in his eye and replied, "What I mean is the first five minutes after death." What it may be we cannot know. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for those that love him." Human language is inadequate to express it. Paul said that in his vision of the seventh heaven he caught sight of things that were unlawful to utter. The best we humans can do is to describe the glories of heaven in terms of the beggary language of man. There are no earthly terms to adequately portray it. The poet's language fails. Jesus simply said, "In my Father's house are many mansions. John speaks in human terms about the New Jerusalem. Yet as mortal men we speak of that we do know and bear witness of that we have seen. The Lord said to Nicodemus, "If I tell you of earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?"

What is more beautiful than the springtime? The unfolding life on a certain day fills our hearts with rapture. I have in memory just such a day, when I strolled out on one of the hills overlooking the Missouri. Just as far as eye could reach over the hills were the trees laden with apple blossoms. Scenes like this the poet said "Flash on the inward eye." Yet in spite of all the inspiring scenes of life and melodies of music, heaven will contain infinitely more. Paul says, "It has not entered the heart of man." We may let imagination run riot. We may fancy day dreams, build air-castles to the highest altitude, and adorn them with all possible gilt and splendor, and yet the Apostle Paul says, "It has not entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him."

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be." That does not place a barrier of limitation upon us. It suggests the possibility of far greater and finer attainment. The organist may lose the Lost Chord yet in heaven's grand Amen it shall be recovered. Old Thomas Gray mused in the Village Church Yard on the latent talents prematurely buried there with no hope of fruition on earth. But our text suggests the possibilities for "the mute and inglorious Miltons" to complete their unfinished tasks.

I read somewhere the statement: "This present age is blinded by the excess of light. We cannot adjust our eyes in a moment to new conditions." That may account for much of our human disturbances. Jesus told his disciples he had many things for them but they could not bear them now. But the eyes of faith cannot be blinded. Hope can find music on a harp with a single string. Hope reconstructs desolation into beauty. Hope takes the blasted, blighted ambitions and brings forth fruit. Tennyson in "In Memoriam" begins with those beautiful, immortal lines:

"Strong Son of God, Immortal Love,
By faith and faith alone, embrace.
Believing where we cannot prove."

It was from that faith the poet found consolation in his grief. The look from the distant hills may be inadequate. Christina G. Rossetti puts her dreams of heaven into verse:

"I saw the gate called beautiful,
And looked, but scarce could look within.
I saw the golden streets begin,
And outskirts of the grassy pool.
O harps, O crown of plenteous stars,
O green palm branches, many-leaved—
Eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard, Nor heart conceived."—

Law-abiding Vision

By Dr. Charles F. Yoder

(Dedicated to President Hoover)

Where there is no vision
There the people perish,
But blessed they who ever
God's law obey and cherish.
Since the fall of Adam
Who sought the present pleasure
And lost divine communion,
Sin robs our precious treasure.

In the days of Noah
The people had no vision.
Their long and loving warning
They scouted in derision,
But in the flood of waters
They learned that God in Heaven
Will deal with those who trample
The laws that he has given.

The beastly men of Sodom
Insisted on their freedom,
But learned in fire and brimstone
The end of sensual Edom.
The Israelites full often,
Because they lost their vision,
Were given up to bondage
And slaughter and oppression.

The empire of the Caesars,
Like all before and after,
Went swiftly down to ruin

When law was theme for laughter.
And shall our precious freedom
To build a sober nation
Be changed to godless license
By men of baser station?

Shall we forget the vision
Of him who died to save us?
Forget the righteous kingdom
The Lord of glory gave us?
Shall we forget our fathers
Who crossed the stormy waters
To gain a Christian freedom
For us their sons and daughters?

Shall alien foes and traitors,
Who lack all sense of duty,
Drag down our flag of freedom
And raise their flag of booty?
No! while the blood of martyrs
Runs hot in veins of heroes
There shall be faithful Christians
To conquer brutish Neroes.

Who sees the holy city
Descending out of Heaven
Must build into his conduct
The vision God has given.
For where there is no vision
There the people perish,
But blessed they who ever
God's law obey and cherish.

America for Me

By Henry Van Dyke

'Tis fine to see the Old World, and travel up and down
Among the famous palaces and cities of renown,
To admire the crumbly castles and the statues of the kings,—
But now I think I've had enough of antiquated things.

So it's home again, and home again, America for me!
My heart is turning home again, and there I long to be,
In the land of youth and freedom beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight and the flag is full of stars.

Oh, London is a man's town, there's power in the air;
And Paris is a woman's town, with flowers in her hair;
And it's sweet to dream in Venice and it's great to study
Rome;
But when it comes to living there is no place like home.

I like the German firwoods, in green battalions drilled;
I like the gardens of Versailles with flashing fountains filled;
But, oh, to take your hand, my dear, and ramble for a day
In the friendly western woodland where Nature has her way!

I know that Europe's wonderful, yet something seems to lack:
The Past is too much with her, and the people looking back.

But the glory of the Present is to make the Future free,—
We love our land for what she is and what she is to be.

Oh, it's home again, and home again, America for me!

I want a ship that's westward bound to plough the rolling sea,
To the blessed Land of Rdom Enough beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight and the flag is full of stars.

The Paradox

Prepare for war! and still desire peace!
Vile hypocrites, we stand before the bar
And trick ourselves with slothful mockery.
By stooping low we hope to reach a star.

Sunk deep in muck of weapons, newly made,
We strive to hide the semblance of our shame,
And in high-sounding phrases e'er repeat,
"We would have peace—eternal peace our claim."

Unless within our hearts is born a faith
That casts aside our doubts forevermore,
Unless we take each nation at its word;
The future must be cursed by endless war!

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

TRYING TO STRANGLE THE CHURCH

It is rather enlightening to follow the efforts of the soviet government as it seeks to strangle the church in Russia. A new law has been passed of which much is expected. But first, let us see how past efforts have worked out. The authority that we are following says that from 1921 to 1925 the soviet sought to weaken the church, which was the orthodox church, by two methods. First, it sought to divide the orthodox church by encouraging the so-called "living church." Certainly it seemed it would weaken the orthodox church to promote its division. And second, to make sure that the dividing up process would go as far as possible, various sects were given considerable freedom. That is, Baptists, Methodists and Lutherans were allowed a rather free hand. Humanly speaking, it would seem that dividing the orthodox church and allowing the growth of sects would about end the usefulness of the Christian church in Russia. But what are the facts? First, the various sects, especially the Baptists, have grown to an alarming extent—that is, from the soviet viewpoint. The sects that were to weaken the orthodox church have themselves become so strong that the soviet leaders are frightened. Secondly, to make matters worse, the orthodox church has learned much as to improved methods from the growing sects and has consequently begun to revive by the renewal of powers from within! Thus, in place of a moribund state church to deal with, the soviet government now has not only succeeded in reviving this institution, but stimulated the growth of a number of vigorous sects. With the last state much worse for the soviets than at first, the new move contemplates forcing the churches to limit their activities to spiritual ministry. Thus, if the church had any tendency to stray from its fundamental task, the soviet government proposes to wreck the church by making it do what it is really expected to do! It looks like it was going to take wiser heads than the soviets have yet produced to harm the church, for soviet leaders have not yet learned, that under normal conditions, the more they persecute the church the more it will revive and grow.—The Gospel Messenger.

INDIA

A measure of self-government was given India in 1919. Certain reforms followed. There is much political unrest, and probably will be until given full autonomy. Is India capable of self-government? Existing conditions seem to indicate that she is not. Her social conditions which are not dependent on political status are a serious burden even more so than her political. Note the following taken from the editorial page of the Christian Herald:

"Sixty million of the nation's population are said to be among the untouchable classes. A report just published reveals that there are now 8,500,000 wives and 3,000,000 husbands under fifteen years of age; 110,000 husbands and 218,000 wives under five years of age; 575,000 husbands and 2,016,000 wives between five and ten years of age. There are, also, 400,000 Indian girl widows below fifteen, and of these 15,000 are baby widows under five years and 102,000 between five and ten years."

A reform in this field is imperative if India is ever to attain a place among the leading nations of the world.—The Free Methodist.

BAPTISTS' SELF-CRITICISM

British Baptist ministers have recently gone through an interesting process of self-analysis and self-criticism. In order to show their appreciation of the completion of the ministerial superannuation fund of £300,000, the rank and file set about inquiring in a spirit of delightful open-mindedness and frankness what was their shortcoming and how they could best increase their efficiency. For this purpose they appointed a Commission, and its report has just been presented at the annual assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. It specified the main causes of ministerial inefficiency as tactlessness, want of pugnacity; defective self-discipline, evidenced, among other things, by a disregard of personal appearance; the nursing of grievances; lack of mental honesty, tending to bring the pulpit into contempt; sheer laziness and restlessness. The secretary of the Union, the Rev. M. E. Aubrey, explains that the report in no way reflects on the good work of Baptist ministers generally. "I believe," he says, "I am justified in saying that the efficiency of the Baptist ministers has never, in the whole history of the church, stood so high as it stands today. But that is no reason why we should be content to stay where we are. The ministers themselves are anxious to improve, and this plan of appointing a commission to report to them on their own shortcomings seems to me a healthy sign, and a plan which other denominations might adopt with advantage."—Albert Dawson in Reformed Church Messenger.

RESTRICTIONS ON RELIGION REMOVED BY RUSSIA

Removal of constitutional restrictions on religious practices is soon to be proposed to the Soviet congress; Alexei I. Rykoff, president of the Council of People's Commissioners, told delegates to the congress they would soon be invited to vote on such amendment to the constitution.

The decrees fighting religion had proved to bring harm as well as benefit, he said. The amendment to the constitution would provide for the separation of church and state, church and schools, and granting all citizens the right to religious practice as well as anti-religious propaganda. It appeared from the speech of the president that the Soviet was not to abandon its attempt to discredit religions, but simply to proceed along different lines by, in effect, removing the stimulus of persecution. "The fight on religion," he said, "can succeed only if linked with mass progress and with deep penetration into the masses of scientific knowledge and culture." The Soviet Congress is fighting a losing battle. Persecution will purify the religion of Russia, awaken heroism in the people, and what is the real power, God will help his people. All the nations of earth combined could not suppress the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ.—The Christian-Evangelist.

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

"Which is the earnest of our inheritance unto the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory. Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him." Eph. 1:14-17.

MONDAY

The Earnest.—"Something given in advance as an assurance of good faith." The Spirit has been given us according to the promise. It is thus, in itself, an earnest, or proof, that other promises will also be fulfilled. But more than this, the "Spirit beareth witness with our spirit," giving additional assurance. If the foretaste is so sweet and blessed, how gracious must be the thing foreshadowed! Let us praise him for this earnest of our inheritance. 2 Cor. 5:1-10.

TUESDAY

The Redemption.—To redeem is to buy back: exactly what Christ did for us when he bought us back with his own blood. Having bought us, he has constantly watched over his possessions, to see that no man takes them out of his hand, but the time is not yet ready for him to take physical possession of that which he has purchased. When he does, at his coming, then will the entire plan of redemption be completed, and we will receive our inheritance. Little wonder that the whole creation groaneth together, longing for that day! 1 Thes. 4.

WEDNESDAY

The Purchased Possession.—Read 1 Cor. 6:14-20. Help us, O Father, to realize anew that we are not our own, but have been bought with a costly price; that we no longer have a right to live as pleasing ourselves, except as we are pleased when we please thee. As thou didst gladly offer thy life that we might live (it is written in the Book of the Law, "Lo, I come to do thy will"), so may we with gladness yield unto thee our all—truly, but a reasonable service.

THURSDAY

Love unto All.—The one external proof that we have passed from death unto life is that we love all the brethren. We cannot lay down our lives for him, as he did for us; he neither needs nor wants it. But we can lay down our lives in loving service for our brethren, his other children. "More love to thee, O Christ, More love to thee!" 1 John 3.

FRIDAY

In My Prayers.—His prayers were unceasing on behalf of these Christians! We hardly think these were idle words, and we find the same statement in Paul's letters to other churches and individuals. Little wonder that Paul counted his prayers as one of the labors of his life. God grant that thy children today may be as concerned about the spiritual welfare of others, and may cry unto thee for them without ceasing! 1 Tim. 2:1-8.

SATURDAY

Spirit of Wisdom.—How we need wisdom each moment, in these days of perplexing problems! We would not disparage the efforts of men to understand and solve these problems, but we do know that true wisdom is from God, and that without his aid we may not hope for right solutions. May we have the spirit of the young King Solomon, in this respect! 1 Kings 3:5-15.

SUNDAY

Revelation.—Revelation is the knowledge of him!—this was Paul's prayer for the Ephesian Christians. Through the many services held throughout the week this day, may men obtain a greater revelation in the knowledge of thee! John 16:1-13.—T. C. L.

Teaching Bible Truth Through Chemistry

By Ruby Almond

FOREWORD

These talks are deliberately sketchy. Material cut, fitted, and decorated, awaiting only a mechanic to serve it is an insult to any intelligent Christian worker,—and that despite the fact that “we haven’t time to be intelligent.” One of our paramount obligations is creative effort. The faculty of originality comes only to those who practice it.

The germ thought in these messages should be allowed to grow in the fertile soil of a consecrated life. One should digest the ideas, expand them, change them, add or subtract whole paragraphs; in a word, construct a talk that is part and parcel of oneself. What follows is prepared for no particular age, for age is not the determining factor in addressing an audience. What fascinates the child will rarely fail to interest his elders. The author has found these messages by actual experiment to do both, and to hold attention when nothing else could do so.

The chemical illustrations have been chosen not because they are convenient or because they are cheap. They are neither; but they are striking. The actual chemistry involved has no significance whatever. We shall assign to ordinary chemical changes meanings they never possessed; for there is no inherent connection between the experimental display and the spiritual lesson. The only object is to catch the eye and to focus the attention so sharply that truths may be indelibly impressed upon the mind. What is learned with great interest and attention is not lost, but will reappear in later days to determine conduct.

Part of the heritage of childhood should be a goodly foundation in sound Scripture. Our little ones can absorb doctrine when it is wisely presented. We lean too much to story telling and run the no uncertain risk of having our adolescent youth classify our moral lessons with fairy tales and nursery rhymes. Speak up to the child, not down, for he may be nearer God than you. The child may not get all you say; no more does the adult, probably less. Apportion your time accordingly,—hours of preparation for the young, minutes for the old.

The teaching of our little ones is a sacred opportunity. If we mutilate our teaching, we rob them of the Bible. We do even more; we rob the Bible of them. Mere knowledge about the Bible may damn them. Our purpose is to lead the little ones so that the winsome sweetness and the utmost fairness of the Word of God may capture their souls, and bring them to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Chemical Notes

The purchase of chemicals for these tests would come rather high, because much more than is needed would have to be bought. There are, however, few churches who do not boast, among their members, doctors, nurses, pharmacists, laboratory technicians, or teachers of chemistry. All such are themselves, or have associates who are, closely allied with some laboratory, and every one who has ever worked in a chemical laboratory knows that quantities of material must be thrown away each year. Standard reagents deteriorate so that they cannot be used for the purpose they were intended. Yet those chemicals are perfectly good for any experiment described in these articles unless specific mention is made to the contrary. Again, once a bottle of some substances is opened, slight changes occur, rendering the material unfit for exact chemical work. Laboratories are only too glad to give away chemicals that otherwise would be thrown down the sink. In the event that the particular substance you seek cannot be supplied by these laboratories, they will be able to advise you of the nearest and cheapest chemical house from which you may purchase small quantities.

The following notes will undoubtedly be found useful:

1. A precipitate is a solid formed in solution when two clear solutions are mixed.
2. Sodium hydroxide is also called sodium hydrate, caustic soda, or soda lye. Where sodium hydroxide is to be used, potassium hydroxide may be substituted. The latter is also known as potassium hydrate, caustic potash, and potash lye.
3. The common name for hydrochloric acid is muriatic acid.
4. Sulphuric acid is also known as oil of vitriol.
5. It is well-nigh impossible to obtain bichloride of mercury from a druggist without prescription. A dealer in photographic supplies will usually sell it without question. In all cases the solution must be colorless, not tinted blue.
6. Solutions are neutral, acid, or alkaline. By neutral we mean neither acid nor alkaline. Pure water is such. Tap water is frequently alkaline and distilled water very slightly acid, but this varies with the source of the water. An indicator is a substance that shows one color with an acid and another color with an alkali. The indicators mentioned in these articles are: alizarin, congo red, phenol red, phenolphthalein, thymol blue, and Topfer's. Most indicators are expensive. Substances found around the house that are alkaline include, lye, Washing soda, baking soda, ammonia water, and borax. If you desire to use these in place of sodium hydroxide, try them out. No definite statement as to whether they will work or not can be made, since they often contain impurities that would interfere with some of the desired changes. They will, however, work just as well in many cases, but the writer does not include them in the directions because the experiment as outlined is bound to work with the chemicals listed, whereas it might fail to do so with some brands of household chemicals and not with others.
7. Silver nitrate stains the skin a brown-black, which does not appear for some hours or even days. These stains can be removed by painting them with tincture of iodine and then washing with strong ammonia water and warm tap water. Repeat if necessary.

INSIDE OUT

Required: Three tumblers: (1) containing water colored orange with red; (2) containing a few drops of any acid (colorless vinegar will be satisfactory), this glass must appear to be clean and empty; (3) perfectly clean and empty.

Alternative: Tumbler one contains a weak acid and a few drops of phenolphthalein solution; this is colorless. Tumbler two contains a few drops of strong sodium hydroxide solution. The acid is neutralized by this and the phenolphthalein turns a red-pink. Tumbler three is clean.

Gist of the Message: “There were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, inasmuch that they trode one upon another” in their attempt to see and hear the Lord Jesus. The Master was speaking to his disciples, and had you been in the crowd that day you might have been close enough to hear him say, “There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.” (Luke 12: 1, 2). He was emphasizing the fact that you cannot very long be one thing inside and another outside. Your private and secret habits become natural. If you always entertain sweet, kind thoughts, you can never say nasty words. If you swear under your breath, you will some day swear out loud. You will be sorry that you were heard. You will say, “I didn’t mean it.” But you certainly did because you don’t say those things until you think them. If you do not think such words yourself, do not stand around where other people are thinking them out loud or you will find yourself using them when you do not want to. Boys and girls, watch the little things you do when you are by yourself or at home—things you would not do if your friends were there. We should have no “company manners” if we always behaved our best. “Company manners” are not natural. What is unnatural is never pleasing. If you should invite me to have dinner with you and I found you very careful to behave just right, I should know that you were “putting it on” for me. If you want people to think that you can speak correctly, then you must watch your words when you are “off duty” as it were. If you use a great deal of slang and silly phrases every day, your words will get all jumbled up when you try to talk decently. If you want the folks to think that you are good, you must be good (pour some of the solution one into tumbler three; no change will occur), good inside, good outside. If you are crooked in the heart and mind, you will give yourself away sooner or later. (Pour some of the orange solution from tumbler one into tumbler two; it will turn a navy blue.) Boys and girls, remember this, whatever you do secretly time and again becomes a habit. Habits become natural to you so that you do the thing without thinking and without meaning to.

PLUS LOVE

Required: A tumbler containing a solution of sodium hydroxide (any strength except very weak), a medicine dropper, and a very little of a ten percent solution of copper sulphate.

Gist of the Message: There are some folks who do not read the Bible because they say it is hard to understand. There are hard places in the Bible but there are many more that are perfectly clear. If you read those first and obey their teachings, you will be surprised how plain the difficult places become. In 1 John 4:20 we find one of the plainest verses in the whole Bible, "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." There is no need for any explanation; this verse is so clear.

God weighs everything you do. His scales are different from any we have. A little thing that we do well, a little thing plus love is magnified and used by God. Just a little drop, as it were (hold up the medicine dropper with a little of the copper sulphate in it), becomes something great. (Add one or two drops, more if desirable, of the sulphate solution to the glass of hydroxide. A dense, sky blue precipitate results.) Boys and girls, you can only do little things, but if they are done with love, they will be great in God's sight.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

The Story of Ezekiel

Scripture Lesson—Ezek. 1:1-3; 2:1 to 3:27; 8:1-4; 11:22-25; 24:15-24; 33:30-33.

Printed Text—Ezek. 3:4-11; 24:15-18.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 121.

Golden Text—As I live, saith the Lord Jehovah, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live.—Ezek. 33:11.

Introductory Note

Ezekiel's name means "God strengthens." He was a priest, the son of Buzi, probably a family name. He was also one of the greatest of the prophets. He was probably 30 years old when he began to prophesy (Ezek. 1:1), for the priests entered upon their ministry in that year (Num. 4:3). That would make the date of his birth in Josiah's reign, about the time Jeremiah began to prophesy. He was born in Palestine, and taken away to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar in the second deportation, about B. C. 597. His home in exile was "by the river Chebar" which may have been one of the great irrigating ditches upon which many of the exiles were set to work. In the fifth year of his exile he saw the "visions of God, which constituted his call to the work of a prophet. The rest of the chapter describes the form of these visions.

There were three separate deportations of captives from Judea to Babylon.

In the first, B. C. 605, Daniel and his companions were captives.

In the second, B. C. 597, Ezekiel and many princes, officers, elders, and leading citizens were taken captive to Babylon.

In the third deportation, B. C. 586, eleven years later, the city and the temple were destroyed and burned, and the principal citizens carried to Babylon.

Ezekiel Pleads Repentance

It was during these eleven years that the first half of Ezekiel's prophecies, chapters 1 to 24, was written, in the four years just before the final siege of Jerusalem, while there was still opportunity for the nation to repent and be saved from destruction. During this period Ezekiel used every possible means of influencing the Jews to turn to God and be saved. He urged, he pleaded, he set forth their danger in alarming terms, he showed the love of God for them, how he pleaded with them. "Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." Then he held up before them, in the most terrible words that language could express, by pictured symbols of the siege, by the vision of God, by acted parables, their fate if they refused to repent: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "The whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds," "neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity." "Evil arrows of famine," "pestilence," "evil beasts," "the sword," "furious rebukes," "cities laid waste," "melted as silver is melted in the furnace," "destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none,"—all these and more, repeated over and over again, were placed in their downward path, crying with all their might, Turn back, Turn back, Turn ye for why will ye die! The people did not take warning. Nebuchadnezzar had begun his great siege. It was now too late. The warning bell ceased to ring. Ezekiel 24 was written on the 10th day of the 10th month, 583, the date given in 2 Kings 25:1, for the commencement of the siege of Jerusalem in Zedekiah's reign.

The Vision of God

The Vision of God. "Now and then a great experience comes, unexpected and unsought. It touches the greater chords of the soul, and lifts it above the common level of emotion, outruns all former knowledge. . . . But what other experience is like that of the personal disclosure of God in the soul? . . . There comes an hour to some, to many, of transfiguration. It may be in grief; it may be in joy; it may be in the opening of the door of sickness; it may be in active duty; it may be under the roof or under the sky, where God draws near with such reality, glory, and power that the soul is filled, amazed, transported. All before was nothing; all afterwards will be but a souvenir. That single vision, that one hour, is worth the whole of life, and throws back a light on all that went before. It . . . gives to the soul some such certainty of invisible, spiritual truths as one has of his own personal identity. When one has had this hour of divine disclosure of full and entrancing vision, it never can be retraced, or effaced, or reasoned against, or forgotten."—Beecher.

But the vision is not all. "God's plans, even in the call of a prophet, never come to effectiveness until they find their lodging place in human endeavor; or, to put it from the other side, man never attains to intelligent contact with God or proper understanding of God's will until through his heart and through his effort he is found where God's call can be heard and where the hand of God may be felt when it is laid upon him."

And where the call has come there must be no holding back. Whether they regard what is said by thee or not; whether they even listen to thy words; whether, even, thou must suffer for thy labor for them; when the word of God is in thy heart and soul it must come forth, for God himself does not cease to plead with men, however they treat his pleadings.

Modern Applications

God never lets his children go headlong to destruction without ample warning of where they are going, and urging into the right paths. These warnings are given because he loves us. God shows his goodness—never hate—when he warns men against their evil courses; when sin is followed by punishment. Punishment is never so great an evil as sin. A man who had committed crime after crime, and for them had suffered many terms of imprisonment, and other punishments, told one with whom he was talking that no punishment he had ever endured, or could imagine, was so great as the evil of being what he was.

God gives his warnings in our bodies, by sickness, pains and weakness, against courses which will ruin the body. He gives warnings to the soul by the pangs of conscience, by troubles and afflictions. He warns our country, by discontent, internal commotion, by strikes, outbreaks, anarchies, war, against the oppressions, inequalities, luxury, irreligion, injustice, which will bring final ruin unless we turn from them. It is not that God actually and directly causes so many of these things. But "he maketh the wrath of man to praise him"; he overrules what was meant by the evil men to the good of those who love and obey him he uses the evil results of sin, coming in the natural course of things, to show the evil of sin, and to urge to a change of life. —From Illustrated Quarterly.

Reports from Christian Endeavor Fields

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT PHILADELPHIA FIRST CHURCH

Dear fellow Christian Endeavorers:

Although the First church in Philadelphia has not been heard from, we are still endeavoring for Christ and the church. Our most important work, outside of our Sunday night meetings is the Brotherhood Mission of this city. Once every month our Senior Society takes charge of the services there. We supply the speaker and the music. It is our great joy to see those men give their lives to Christ, who changes them completely.

At Christmas time we contributed $10.00 to the Kentucky Mission and wish it could have been more.

As the hot weather comes on, our Junior and Intermediate Societies close for the summer. However, that doesn't stop our Intermediates, as we expect to see them come out to our Senior Society meetings. We have a live and busy Intermediate Society, carrying away the Banner from the Intermediate Philadelphia Society of Christian Endeavor several months ago, by their attendance (assisted by the members of the church) and their percentage.

Our Juniors also are very active under the leadership of Miss Ruth Blue. Each one is willing to take part and give their best to the work.

With interest we read of the successful reports from our fellow Brethren, and trust we might all remain faithful to Christ and the church.

In his service,

MISS LAURA BALDERSTON,
Secretary Senior Society.

OUR DAILY BIBLE-READING

In our pledge we promise to make daily Bible-reading the rule of our lives. How shall we go about it? First, by setting aside a regular time and place for the reading; if we do not do this, our work and play will certainly crowd it out. Then we must form a plan for the reading, so that we can have a sense of progress and be interested in what we are doing. If you have not read the Bible through, that is the way to begin. If you have done so, then take some one book of the Bible and read it through until you feel thoroughly at home in it, at the same time using a good commentary to explain whatever you come across that you do not understand. Bible-marking is an efficient aid to Bible-reading; whenever a verse or a passage strikes you as especially helpful, indicate it on the margin of the book, and often go back to it. Commit to memory many of these verses and passages. The time you spend in reading the Bible thus carefully and thoroughly will become before long the happiest time of the entire day.

Argentina, South America

During the month of May I have been preaching in the southern part of our district. First I went to Huinca Renanco where I found Brother Sichel and family and Brother Zeche well and the work growing. The hall was filled every night and ten made confession of conversion. It would be expedient to enlarge the hall at this place if funds permit. Brother Sichel has been making some improvements to the property and it has become a valuable property as it is in the center of a large and growing town. The provincial bank has been located just across the street.

From Huinca Renanco I went to Pico, sixty miles further south in the great Pampa. This is another place which twenty years ago did not exist and is now a town of over fifteen thousand, and in a few years will have double that number. I was glad to accept the invitation to visit this place because here is one of the most flourishing missions in the country. These new pampa towns have a larger European element and the people have gotten away from their fanatical grandmothers and other relatives who in the older towns hinder the conversion of the young people. But Pico is fortunate in having a very able pastor, both consecrated and active; a good preacher, a good singer, a good organizer and an untiring personal worker. We had from 150 to 200 in the congregations here and more than twenty-five conversions. This work is under the direction of the Christian Alliance with which we are cooperating. The snobbish aristocratic class is only beginning to be assertive here and it has been easier to reach the middle class on that account. Eighty percent of the people own their own homes and they are learning to give to the work. They are paying for their own property by monthly installments, but the pastor thinks it will be a long time before the Argentine missions can be self supporting. Those who have their homes generally have them on the long time payment system and there is not the prosperity here that there is in the homeland. There is a great deal of atheism, anarchism and spiritualism. There are cases of plain demon possession.

One Sunday an anarchist, ignorant and immoral as they generally are, was making a speech in the plaza in which he attacked the mission, saying that only women attended, and that the pastor and I were making fanatics out of them. One of the members, a vegetable grocer, called him down saying, "All that this man has been saying are pure lies. When he came to the mission he saw just as many men as women there. I have been attending for six years and when I began to quit drinking and smoking and the rest of my vices and that represents a saving of eight dollars a week for my family." Here the anarchists tried to make him hush but he called out, "I make you this challenge and I defy you to take it up. Bring me all the bad debts of the mission members and I will pay them if you will pay me all that the atheists and anarchists owe me." That was a good testimony and no one accepted his challenge.

On account of few trains and bad connections I could not remain more than several days in Laboulaye on this trip, but I was impressed more than ever with the need of a building on our property there. Satan has provided so many attractions for the children elsewhere that if the mission does not provide a social center for them it is very difficult to reach them. There are a number of new people interested here, but Brother Iztueta complains that the priests are very astute and very active and are making his work hard.

On returning to Rio Cuarto I was called at once to Deheza to assist in the funeral of one of our leading members there. Brother Sotola is in poor health. He says that in Cabrera he has succeeded in getting four new families to attend.

I am now helping in Rio Cuarto again while Brother Romanenghi has gone to Rosario to preach for a week or more. We have a group of twenty-five members from Rio Cuarto there and they are trying to sustain a mission in a district where there is no other. Here in Rio Cuarto as elsewhere the cold weather is telling on the attendance. The poor people are not prepared for cold weather. The streets have been torn up for a year putting in sewers, and the work will not be finished for another year or more. We are planning for more personal work, but we are so few. If it were not that the Lord is great we would be but a ripple struggling against the waves of sin. Pray for us.

News from Our African Missions

Yalohe, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,

April 21st, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been a long time since I have had the privilege of writing you and in that time much has happened. No mail has arrived in the interval, the last news from the outside world having been received on March 13th. Our Bassai friends, who were here for our conference of which I will write later, were also hungering and thirsting for news, likewise the Bellevue missionaries. We have however been better able to endure the prolonged wait because of the fact that conference intervened. On Saturday evening, April 6th, the automobile arrived, bringing with their necessities for travel, the conference delegates, Mr. and Mrs. Jobson, accompanied of course by Joseph Roger, and Mr. Kennedy. Bassai station was temporarily closed in order that the delegates might attend the conference. It being thought unwise on account of local conditions to close Bellevue Station for the conference, Miss Myers went to Bellevue to stay with Mrs. Kennedy in order that Mr. Kennedy might be released to represent Bellevue at the conference and field council meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. Jobson, and Joseph Roger, now a sprightly child of eleven months, were housed with Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Mr. Kennedy occupied one of the rooms in the still unfinished new house. Conference opened on Sunday afternoon by an able sermon by Mr. O. D. Jobson. The evening was spent in social intercourse and arrangements were made for the following week's services:

Three meetings for prayer were held daily. One at 6:30 A. M., one at 9:30 A. M., one at 3:30 P. M. The evening was reserved for the presentation of various subjects,—"Tithing in the Native Church," "The Subject of the Native Workers by the Native Church," and other subjects were ably presented by various conference members. By tacit agreement the usual ten days was reduced to eight, inasmuch as it was necessary for the delegates to hasten their return toward the depleted or vacant stations. On Friday morning the business sessions of the conference commenced, the conference now resolving itself into a field council in which all the delegates except Joseph Roger took an active part. Many important questions were considered and some important decisions rendered. Most of the questions considered tend toward the establishment of our native churches on a self-supporting, self-governing, self-propagating basis, leaving the sources of foreign money to the larger fields of supporting foreign missionaries, opening new stations, etc.

Mr. Kennedy preached the closing sermon of the conference on the subject, "The Fullness of Christ," and the evening was again spent in that fellowship so precious to missionaries who meet but occasionally.

Early Monday morning the delegates departed to their respective stations and the Yaloke missionaries settled down to the regular routine of their station work.

The dispensary and hospital at Yaloke are having perhaps the largest number of patients in our history. Patients come from a distance in groups, besides the regular miscellaneous daily demands which are made upon us by patients living nearby. Yesterday morning a group of Yaws patients came, this morning a large group of lepers, etc. Everyone of these patients hears the gospel, comfort and help are administered to all, and healing to some. The detailed annual report of the field medical work will doubtless be published in due time, but we would like to recount here the sad fate of one of our patients not therein mentioned.

She was a woman of past middle age who had borne eleven children. As one of the incidents of the war which still continues, her son was shot down beside her, and another son wounded. She herself was shot through the hand, taken prisoner, and finally delivered to us for treatment. She was cared for some time in the hospital, then escaped. One of her "sons," that is the son of her husband by another wife, is one of our Christian schoolboys, Paul. He brought her back after her first escape, but her mind seemed distracted or crazed by her grief. She escaped again in the middle of the night. Not being able to find her it was necessary for us to report the escape of this prisoner to the sergeant by whom she had been delivered to us for treatment. The sergeant regretted her escape, as he had intended to release her immediately upon her recovery. We next heard of her pitiful death. Returning to some of her ing rather slowly. I hope this is not an indication that the total results will be small. We are so anxious here to make next year the best thus far and I know we shall be cramped for money unless everyone does his duty.

Professor Melvin Stuckey, professor of Religious Education and Miss Anne Brauer, teacher of Piano, were married recently in Chicago. They will reside in Ashland. Mrs. Stuckey will continue next year as teacher of Piano.

ON THE ROAD

This is being written en route to Bellingham, Washington. Mrs. McClain and I left Los Angeles day before yesterday by automobile and we are now in Marysville, which is a prosperous looking little city north of Sacramento. Just finished lunch. Mrs. McClain is enjoying a siesta on the lawn of the city park, and I am wielding my pen. (I hope the editor can read this. Using a typewriter constantly does not improve one's penmanship. We have a tendency to lose that which we do not use. Stenographers and dictaphones bid fair to make penmanship a lost art, unless we do something about it.)

At Bellingham I am scheduled to deliver a series of addresses to the Washington State Christian Endeavor Convention which convenes June 20-23. From Bellingham we go to Spokane where I shall speak for our own Brethren conference. Then I return to Long Beach to speak at the Southern California Conference, July 17-20. We expect to spend some days in the Olympic Forest, at Crater Lake and other places. Of course, we carry the "old fishin' pole."

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

This church is far removed from the centers of our work and is somewhat isolated from other churches. At one time we had a good strong congregation here, but it has suffered from deaths, removals and local difficulties, and has been greatly weakened.

We have a good building and parsonage at this place and there is no reason why this work should not be built up in time and made a good strong aggressive church again.

Brother Flora is the pastor and they are slowly gaining ground and the future looks better than it did. They feel keenly the loss of the men who formerly bore the burdens and led the work. The Lord always raises up men to fill the ranks, if we do our part and are loyal to his cause.

I was well received and Brother Flora did all he could to make my stay pleasant and assist in the canvass.

The total gift from here was $335.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The summer school is larger than at last writing; there are now 335 enrolled. This is somewhat more than our capacity. Miss Jaderquist, teacher of Voice, has resigned, and we have filled her place, Miss Hurdle of the Chicago Musical College having been employed.

A recent letter from Dr. Bell describes some of his work in the Maryland-Virginia district, where he expects to finish soon.

The seniors of this present year who were seeking places are now mostly placed, only a few remaining who are still seeking employment.

Two of the new men employed for next year have been here looking for a house. There is still one place to fill. It has not been an easy matter to get just the kind of men we desire here.

The Summer school will close one week before Conference, so that we will not be so crowded here this year. However, we began a week too soon and it looks as if next year we would have to begin a week later. If so, those who set the date for Conference should keep this in mind.

The Educational Day offerings are comment. In spite of the efforts of those who did their best to disrupt the school during the past year, we graduated a fine class of ninety-three students. Ten of these are members of the Brethren church. For the first time, diplomas were given to three members of the same family. These were three Brethren from Lost Creek, Kentucky—Lucinda, Clyde and Sewell Landrum. Another Brethren girl, Verna Remple, is the youngest student who ever received a diploma from the Bible Institute. I am sure she will not mind if I tell her age—seventeen—which is one year beneath the required age for entrance! Her sister, Edna Remple, acted as my secretary during the past year. Two of these Bible Institute graduates are planning to take up work at Ashland this fall. They are Lucinda Landrum and Ruby Bowman. And there may be others. Pray for these young people, that God may guide them into places of usefulness.

Strange Ideas of Christianity

Last evening we stopped in Stockton to get some road information at a service station. The man in charge was very indignant concerning half a dozen young boys and girls who were piled in a one-seated Ford in the indiscriminate fashion of the present day. They had stopped for gasoline and were swearing and smoking cigarettes while being served. The attendant remarked to us that he had three children of his own and that if he ever caught them with such a gang someone would get hurt! He added that, in his opinion, the greatest curse these modern youngsters have is their parents! He was not far wrong at that.

During our conversation I asked him if he was a Christian. He answered that he thought he was, but didn't suppose I would agree with his view of the matter.

"Well," I said, "suppose you tell me what a Christian is, and we shall see how far apart our ideas are." His definition was interesting. "If you come into this service station," he said to me, "and ask for two quarts of good oil and five gallons of gasoline, I would give you exactly what you asked for; that is why I believe I am a Christian." "Now," he added, "I can tell by your face that you think I am wrong."

"Yes, you are wrong," I answered; "Even a pagan who has never heard of Christ might be an honest man. A Christian is a man who knows he has sinned, realizes he needs a life and power he doesn't have, accepts Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord." But he was inclined to argue the matter. So I gave him the words spoken by Christ himself, and asked him whether he didn't think that the Founder of Christianity ought to know more about the matter than any of the rest of us. He guessed that was right, and we parted after I had urged him to accept the gift our Lord offers to men.

I mention this incident because this man's ideas of Christianity are typical of the man of the street (And also of some men in the churches.) Until we have learned that salvation is the free gift of God to those who believe, that man can do nothing for salvation except to take the gift from God's hand, we know nothing at all about Christianity.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA The Switzerland of America

Quite a time has elapsed since we have sent in a report from here. Had there been nothing to report there would have been some excuse for not writing, but that has not been the case. We have just permitted the reports to be neglected because of much activity. A special Easter pageant was presented by the folks here, which was well received by a house filled to capacity. This was well presented and gave an indication as to the talent here for a musical production. Two have been baptized and received into the church, others are waiting baptism. The mention of our call for the seventh year as reported in the local county paper appeared in the Evangelist. Naturally we appreciated the confidence manifested by the call as it came with such strength for the seventh year. The work here has not grown beyond the field as there is a field here really limited only by the one who is on the job.

The one outstanding event of the month was the entertaining of the Conference. This was especially well attended and as far as we know the best attended of any we have witnessed during the six years we have been in this district. Eighty-seven

DEDICATION

*Father, let me dedicate
All this year to thee,
In whatever worldly state
Thou wilt have me be!
Not from sorrow, pain, or care
Freedom dare I claim;
This alone shall be my prayer,
Glorify thy name!*

people from outside of the state wended their way to Oak Hill for the enjoyment of the trip, the conference and the hospitality of its citizens. People of various churches threw open their homes and did everything possible for the visiting delegates. If there were no other results or benefits the value of the conference to the Oak Hill church and the community would be difficult to estimate. The best spirit prevailed and as far as we know each one who came had a pleasant as well as a profitable time. From a viewpoint of the city at large they had a splendid impression of those who constitute the workers of the Brethren church in the Southeastern District. The interest of the conference kept up until the closing of the session on Thursday night, with a full house. Some said that this was the best of the conference. Like a certain advertised commodity, "it was good to the last drop."

Dr. W. S. Bell remained over from the conference and spent several days in the congregation, preaching the next Sunday morning and showing the College pictures on Sunday night to a large and appreciative audience. Dr. Bell's visit was very much appreciated though at the present we were not able to do as much as we desired for the work he represented, the people having obligated themselves to the limit on the financing of the church building.

The work and interest of the church is very good. The future has not yet lost its golden glow after a number of years service. Tomorrow looks better than today. Plans have been made for the meeting this coming October when Brother Charles Ashman will be with us. There is no reason that we can see for not having a splendid ingathering.

Quite a number of the folks here are already planning for National Conference. So we presume that Oak Hill will be well represented as usual.

We read with interest the progress made over the brotherhood and wish to be remembered as we continue to sow and reap in this corner of the vineyard.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

THE DEMANDS OF RELIGION

Every once in a while the follower of Jesus Christ needs to remind himself that his religion makes certain very positive demands of him. It is true that it comes to him with offers of comfort and joy and deep satisfaction such as he can attain unto through no other medium, but not only does it give to him rich and full and abiding treasures of hope and gladness and strength, but it makes as well certain rather imperious demands of him. The religion that tries to take more than it seeks to give would have difficulty in proving itself a religion worthy of the Christian name.

This human life of ours has its evils and its ills, and the man who would claim to be a follower of Jesus Christ cannot by any possibility justify himself in anything like indifference to all these. Jesus himself was mightily concerned about them, even about such things as disease and ill health, and gave of his time and strength and infinite patience throughout much of his ministry to the healing and bodily restoration of the people. Sometimes we find it easy to think that other people's diseases and discomforts and disappointments may work out to their spiritual good and therefore that we may be somewhat indifferent toward them, but we didn't learn that habit from our Master. Apparently he was never indifferent to anything that affected the well-being of the people even in a physical way.

And if he teaches us that we as his followers have a duty to perform in relation to these more physical ills of life, surely he would teach us that our duty is equally plain in regard to ills and evils of a still more positive character. There are diseases that ruin the bodies of men, but there are as well ill things in the world that ruin the minds of men, too, that destroy their liberty and opportunity and corrupt their souls. And against all these things the whole spirit and teaching of Jesus tell us we as his followers must wage a relentless warfare. There is, therefore, a place for militant Christianity, and so long as sin and wrong and injustice are in the world there will continue to be a place and great need for it. And the man who insists on basking himself in the comforts and satisfactions of his religion and refuses to listen to its call to service and sacrifice and broadening human fellowship and love is denying something that must always be very fundamental in that religion. Genuine religion does bring its great comforts to a man's soul, but it brings its great dissatisfactions as well, so long as we are living in a world in which there are so many things that hurt and spoil and mar and make ugly the lives of men.—The New Outlook.

OF INDESCRIBABLE VALUE

Under the title, "America's Greatest Steamship Operator's View on Prohibition," the "Manufacturers Record" publishes the following interview with Capt. Robert Dollar:

"When I took over a fleet of 20 ships, five years ago, any number of persons, all kinds of people, told me I could not run them successfully unless I served liquor on board. Not a drop of liquor ever has been served on one of those ships—and they are running still, and the passenger list always is filled. If ever I have to turn bootlegger or serve liquor on my ship, I'll give up or go broke—I don't do it. And what kind of a man would I be if I carried liquor on my ships and at the same time said to my officers and men, 'Any one of you who takes a drink of liquor will be fired instantly?' No, sir; my ships never have carried liquor and never will.

"I was banished from my home—from Scotland, my native land—at the age of 13, by liquor. Our family had a sad experience with liquor and at 13 I left home, and I vowed then and there that never would I touch a drop of liquor, and I never have. In my long life in the lumber business and the shipping business, I have seen hundreds of young men—fine young fellows, with every prospect for fine, useful lives—absolutely destroyed by liquor. Young fellows who started with me, but took to liquor, went into the gutter. All my life, from boyhood, I have seen closely the wretchedness that liquor causes.

"Prohibition has been a Godsend to this country, and above all to the poorer people. And, most of all, it has been of indescribable value to the women and children of the country. It is the women and children who suffer most, in the end, from the effects of liquor on the men, and prohibition has spared the women and children an indescribable amount of suffering. Under prohibition, money which went to the saloon and the liquor seller goes to the stores for clothing for the women and children; it goes into the savings banks by hundreds of millions of dollars each year; it is invested in automobiles and other recreations. Prohibition is a Godsend to this country."

PLENTY OF DRUNKARDS

Boston Post Editorial

With so many explorers of experience available here in the United States it might be a good idea to arrange an expedition to solve one of the greatest mysteries of modern times—to find the one drunken Frenchman no American traveler has been able to discover.

A long procession of tourists returns from Europe each year to solemnly inform the ship news reporters in Boston or New York that, having spent many weeks in close contact with the liberty-loving French people, they "never saw one drunken Frenchman." They contrast this experience with the ease with which drunkards may be discovered in American cities.

But the police of Paris have no difficulty in discovering drunken Frenchmen. And one has to be good and drunk in Paris to attract the attention of the police. Arrests for drunkenness in Paris per 10,000 population are three times that of New York, the wettest city in America.

In Paris, the arrests per 10,000 of population have averaged about 50, in the past few years. In New York the average is about 15 per 10,000.

And, whereas, in Paris the police are inclined to leniency in enforcement, the New York police have been much more strict since prohibition.

In Greater London the convictions (not arrests) for drunkenness have ranged from 48 to 50 per 10,000 in the past few years. In Edinburgh, Scotland, the ratio is startling as compared to New York. Edinburgh, arrests for drunkenness have gone as high as 153 per 10,000 in the last ten years. New York's high mark since prohibition was 18.34 arrests per 10,000 in 1924.

The figures show glibly repeated statements that European countries, with their wholesome beer and wine available to the citizens at reasonable prices, are not troubled by the problem of the drunkard, to be entirely untrue.

Drunkenness is a grave problem in practically all European countries. It is particularly so in England and France.

Those American travelers who have been unable to spot a drunkard in France ought to team up with some of our rabid drys here in America who are blind to the number of our local inebriates.

DRY SENTIMENT GROWS

"The growing strength of the anti-alcohol movement in Great Britain may be estimated from the fact that the total abstainers in that island are now reckoned at no less than 10,000,000 out of 43,000,000 inhabitants, while another 10,000,000 expended only negligible sums for alcoholic beverages, according to outstanding statistics like Professor Bowly and Sir Josiah Stamp," says Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism. "This growing sentiment against the use of intoxicants has caused the beer consumption in England to decrease about 21 per cent in 1927 from the last complete year before the war, 1913 while the consumption of spirits in the same period has decreased 52 per cent. The natural consequence has been that convictions for drunkenness have fallen to about one-third of what they were in 1913. Full licenses to sell liquor have been reduced 11 per cent and licensed premises are now allowed to be open less than one-half the time permitted in 1913. These straws indicate the direction in which the wind is blowing in Great Britain.

"That the liquor group recognize that a crisis is approaching, is suggested by the contemplated joint advertising campaign of the brewers 'to make the people drink beer. The increasing use of automobiles has been a significant factor in the promotion of total abstinence, while temperance teaching and specialized educational work treating of the evils of beverage alcohol has greatly encouraged the growth of anti-alcohol sentiment throughout Great Britain.

"The fact that Great Britain's drink bill for 1926 was £31,300,000, indicates a per capita expenditure of approximately $65 for every man, woman and child in the country, deducting the total abstainers and the 10,000,000 whose drink bill is negligible. Although this is a reduction of £15,000,000 from the drink bill of 1925, it nevertheless represents a dangerous drain upon the income of the nation.

"Many of the industrial leaders of England and Scotland recognize the fact that the economic welfare of their country depends upon the elimination of the drink evil. As former Premier Lloyd George warned his countrymen some years ago, a drinking England can not hope successfully to compete with the sober workers of the United States."

Get the listening ear before you get the speaking mouth.

FAMILY RELIGION IN DEMAND

One of the discussions that awakens genuine interest in thousands of hearts today is the problem of home religion as it relates itself to morals and devotion. The programme of modern life is most demanding and threatens the exclusion of the higher things of the soul. There seems no clear moment when a break with the routine is possible, where one may stop, and look and listen, to that world of infinite interests within, which we call the realm of the spirit. We are told that family prayers, as our forefathers conducted them, are no longer possible. That may or may not be true, but it does not determine our relations to family prayers as a sacred habit, with centuries of blessing behind it. Any way, there are no rules for family worship, which bind us to one form only. Some of us remember the wholesome practice in an old-time custom of having a long Bible chapter, a hymn or psalm and then the formal prayer as the family knelt in a semi-circle about the hearth-stone. The influence of that unbroken habit is too sacred for words. The holiest things of life linger with those memories; but the practice need not be abandoned because that custom is forbidden in many homes by the imperative train schedule, the incessant telephone interruptions, the changed social life for our young people, and long working hours for the household.

In many hurried homes this following simple custom is found a helpful and uplifting influence and is possible in every household. Following either the morning or the evening meal, while the family is still seated about the table, the copy of the Bible kept at hand for this special purpose is brought into service. Some families follow the daily readings of the International Sabbath school lessons; some take a Gospel, or Epistle, or one of the Prophets, chapter by chapter; some read an entire chapter, others a section, and others still a few special verses, after which all bow their heads while the leader offers direct, earnest prayers. Young people going out for an evening's social life, just away from such an influence would not find it easy to go into sin. Where the more formal habit known to our forefathers has seemed impracticable, this simple service has proved a most precious and helpful moment in the life of the family.—The Presbyterian.

Youth cannot begin too soon to recognize the truth that the world is temporary and therefore that worldliness is worthless.

NEWS FROM OUR AFRICAN MISSIONS

sons still hiding in the jungle, she was accused of having through demon possession caused the death and injury of the two brothers. Therefore the accusing son buried her alive. But while the grave was being dug the younger son, in whom a spark of filial love still existed, cried, "Oh, don't kill mother. Only give her poison!" The child referred to the well-known poison ordeal in which the victim if innocent, is supposed to vomit the poison. The child's intent was to save his mother's life as with true childish faith, he believed his mother to be innocent. Skilled in all the arts of devilry, though only a heathen child, he ran quickly procured and prepared the poison, and returned with it in a gourd to his mother's side, the grave not yet being completed. Here stories differ. One says that she was permitted to drink the poison, another that the elder brother denied her even this doubtful heathen mercy. However this may be, she was now thrown alive into the grave, which was quickly filled, the sons and their friends stamping upon it in diabolical frenzy. They justified themselves by the thought that they had disposed of one more evil spirit. Could anything be sadder? How deep are the depths of darkness when the loftiest appeal a child can make for mercy is, "Oh, don't kill mother. Only give her poison." It reminds one of the cry of the Uganda boy martyr before he was mutilated and burned, "Don't cut off my hand. Only throw me into the fire." How we praise God not only that he is merciful, but that his mercy endureth forever." This woman had heard the gospel but recently. She had made no open confession. Our hearts are wrung with anguish as we think of her fate. But she is gone. We must turn our attention to those who remain. May the heathen cry, "Don't kill mother, only give poison." It reminds one of the cry of the ing desire for the evangelization of these tribes to their uttermost borders, that among them the Son of God may be manifested, and being manifested may destroy the works of the devil."

Mr. and Mrs. Foster made a visit to the chapels in March. During their absence numbers were converted and one hundred and five were baptized.

An itinerating trip is planned for the near future by the Misses Tyson and Emmert.

Church activities on the station are also multiplying. Busy indeed are the Sundays at Yaloke now, with Sunday school at 7:30, inquirers at 9:00, Christian Endeavor at 2:00, Old Peoples' class at 3:00 and Women's Class also at 3:00. With a morning service every day in the week followed by dealing with seekers of the Lord Jesus, with an evening service daily except Saturday which is reserved for examination of candidates for baptism, with communion service monthly, preceded by an examination of candidates as to their spiritual fitness, Yaloke's church activities consume a large proportion of the missionaries' time.

School continues with not only day but evening classes. Many of the school children are earnest Christians.

In spite of shortage of workmen, Yaloke's first brick house is now nearing completion. Workmen have not yet come in since the war, but we are continuing in prayer that a more rapid building up of the station may be made possible by an increased quota of workmen.

We now have four full time evangelists, Yolo, stationed at Bozoum, and three who are assisting in the pastoral work of the Yaloke church.

The eight student evangelists are employed in manual labor, but have daily and weekly appointments, as well as six classes weekly. The evening classes for teaching to church members are also open to them, when their preaching appointments do not conflict. There are two grades as to advancement, each being equal in number. The four most advanced will doubtless be the first ones eligible to promotion as full-time evangelists.

Praying God's blessing upon you, and especially that you may labor and pray as is consistent in us who love his appearing.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

THE STORY OF SEKE

By Lois Johnson McNeill

My name is Seke, and I don't know how old I am. But my mother tells me that I was born during the days of the war, so maybe you can count how many years ago that was. My father died ten moons ago. A big tree fell on him while he was walking through the forest and killed him. My brothers are both married. One has three wives, the other, six.

When I began to creep a man came one day with a dog and some chickens and bought me. I didn't want to go. I was afraid and cried bitterly when they carried me from my mother, but nobody would listen. There were thirty wives in this man's town. His name was Amang, and his hair was gray and his skin wrinkled. He gave me to one of his wives as a slave till I should be old enough to be his wife.

I learned to grind the hard, dry corn between stones, and to make it into cakes. I shelled peanuts and roasted them. I learned to blow the slow fire into a blaze and to endure the smoke in my eyes. When the rice began to ripen in the fields I used to go and sit all day and frighten the birds away. It was hot sitting in the sun, but I never dared leave the fields, lest I should get a beating from my master.

Often I was sick, but nobody cared. There were jiggers in my toes, itch all over my body and in my hair, and on my leg was a big ulcer that hurt terribly. Around my neck there hung a tiny horn to keep the evil spirits away. This was all I had to wear except a bit of grass tucked into the string around my waist.

One day I came home from the rice fields, hobbling on my heels, because my feet were so sore. And under the eaves of the round mud hut which was my home sat a white woman. I had seen her once before when she had passed me on the big road, riding so fast in the noisy, red motor. She was talking with some of the wives of the town and was showing some pictures while she talked. She was wearing a dress, oh, so clean and white! I was ashamed of my dirtiness and tried to hide behind some banana trees, but she saw me and called to me. I came, and she didn't seem to see my dirt at all—only my itch and the sore ulcer. She said I could be made well and clean if I would come to her house. She asked me if I knew how to read and had ever read the Word of God. Of course, I had to say no.

And then a wonderful thing happened! She said, "Come on home with me and let me take care of you and teach you. Don't you want to?"

"Oh, ye—" I started to say, but just then I spied my old husband coming home from the forest with his spear and cutlass and with a monkey slung over his shoulders. I was too frightened to speak, but the white woman wasn't. She wasn't afraid even when he got angry and talked very loud and fierce. And in the end I went.

Now I have been in the mission school for two years. My ulcer is all gone. So is the itch. And I can walk straight, for there are no jiggers in my feet. And, oh, the beautiful things I have learned! How to keep the body clean and well; how to cook food and not let it get dirty; how to eat and how to sleep with plenty of fresh air in the house at night. And some day soon I'll know how to read the beautiful Bible. Best of all, I have learned to pray, and to love Jesus who loves me. And do you know—I asked him to save my mother, too, and he did. She has given back the dog and chickens and I'll never have to go back to that old man. Won't you children of across the sea pray now for the hundreds of other children who have not yet had anyone to help them and to teach them, and who are as unhappy as I used to be?—The Presbyterian Advance.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The Oak Hill Brethren church will hold its communion service Sunday evening, of June thirteenth, commencing at seven-thirty. The usual invitation is extended.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

CALL FOR STATISTICAL REPORTS

To the Brethren of the Brotherhood:

The National Statistician is becoming a bit anxious about this year's Statistical report. Have you made out and sent in the report for your church? Church officers, the reports should have been in my hands by June 15. At the present I have very few.

If you did not get the blanks write to the District Statistician of your District. The following are the men I am depending upon: South East District—John Locke, Woodstock, Va.; Pennsylvania—Herman Koontz, Masontown, Pa.; Ohio—L. V. King, New Lebanon, Ohio; Indiana—J. W. Clark, North Liberty, Indiana; Mid-West—W. H. Schaffer, Hamlin, Kansas; Northern California—W. A. Ogden, Fillmore, California; Southern California—John Lienhard, 1501 E. 59th St., Long Beach, California; North-West—C. C. Grisso, Sunnyside, Washington. These men are District Statisticians and are supposed to gather the statistics of the District and have kindly consented to work with the National Statistician. If the church Secretary or some church officer of each local church will cooperate in this matter of statistics we will be able to have a fuller report than in the past. The National Statistician compiled a report last autumn and it is given on pages 65, 66 and 67 of "The Brethren Annual." I am sure every one in the brotherhood would like to have each church reported at the National Conference and in the 1929 Annual. There is still time if you act immediately. This is a greater advantage to the local church than to the balance of the brotherhood, and we want you to have your just credit in the report. DO IT NOW, please, if you have not already.

XV. IMPORTANCE OF AN EDUCATED MINISTRY

By Prof. Kenneth M. Monroe

A prime requisite of a growing denomination is an educated ministry. Three factors may tend to build one. First, an adequately equipped seminary building; second, competent instructors; and third, consecrated young men.

A great need of our Seminary is a separate building, properly equipped, where students may live, study and recite. Our prayer is that some Christian financier may make such a structure possible in the very near future. The teaching of the Seminary faculty intends to confirm and strengthen the student's faith in the Word of God, as an infallible guide for faith and practice and especially accentuates Brethren doctrine and practices. A building and a faculty do not constitute a seminary. There must be young men, separated by the Holy Spirit, who desire knowledge, mental discipline and culture, as well as spirituality and a passion for souls, and are willing to give themselves over to an abundance of hard work that they might be better able to preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Young men, with the ministry in mind, we invite you to consider our Church Seminary as the place for your training. Come! Be with us in the fall!

FROM Hollywood to Bellingham

This is being written in Bellingham, Washington, an interesting city of 40,000 population, situated on Puget Sound only a few miles from the Canadian border. We arrived here yesterday afternoon after a very pleasant motor trip from Los Angeles.

Everyone ought some time to drive the Pacific Highway from Mexico to Canada. The entire journey—across desert, over mountains, along ocean and streams, through mighty forests and rich valleys—may be taken without leaving pavement except upon side trips, and even here the road is always well kept graveled.

Motorists are learning gradually that there is more to the West than California. Oregon, Washington and Idaho are filled with interest and beauty. It used to be "heresy" for a Californian to find any "good thing" outside of California. But today you may find even "Native sons" spending their summers in the cool, brisk climate of the Puget Sound country. Last night, at the close of my first address to the Washington State Convention of Christian Endeavorers, we found some friends of ours from Long Beach, Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, members of the Brethren church there. They leave California every spring and head for this northern country. I have often remarked that for an ideal climate one should spend the winter in Southern California and the summer on Puget Sound.

PLENTY of Room up here

One can scarcely realize how vast a territory is penetrated by the waters of Puget Sound. There is enough shore line here for summer homes for almost every inhabitant of the United States. And with an ordinary motor boat, one could probably spend a life time exploring the various coves, bays and islands. But it is not necessary to have a boat. There are ferries almost everywhere for the motorist who wishes to reach the islands and cross from one side to the other.

A FLAT Tire

Yesterday we were waiting on the wharf at Port Townsend for the ferry to carry us to the famous Whidby Island. Just as the ferry docked, I heard the slow hiss of escaping air, an ominous sound to the motorist. I knew that if the tire went down before the gates were opened I could never change it in time to get on the ferry. And my engagement in Bellingham made it necessary to catch that ferry. The next few moments were anxious ones as I watched the tire slowly collapse. But at last the gateman yelled, "Come on," and we drove on just as the tire gave up the ghost. (It was good California air, too.)

I then spent an interesting half hour jacking up a heavily loaded car and changing tires instead of watching the scenery. Everyone was very sympathetic. The engineer even provided a basin of warm water and Ivory soap for my hands. A deck-hand insisted upon helping, and before I could interfere nearly twisted a bolt off, trying to turn it the wrong way. He meant well.

BELLINGHAM Hospitality

These Bellingham folks know how to make one feel at home. Upon arriving we found comfortable quarters reserved and waiting for us. We had just gotten settled when the bell-boy brought us a note of greeting from the officers of the Convention. Everyone has been very gracious. Our audiences have been interesting and attentive. The weather has been perfect. Yesterday afternoon, having a few hours of leisure, we drove sixty miles to the end of the road ascending Mt. Baker. We found snow fifteen feet deep and not a cloud in the sky to mar the view. I had heard of the beauty of this drive and had seen photographs of the snow-capped peaks, but the actuality surpassed all the descriptions. Did you know that the Holy Spirit is the great Artist who creates the beauty in Nature? Read Job 26:13. "By His Spirit he hath garnished the heavens."

AN Alumnus of Ashland College

Yesterday we had the pleasure of again meeting an uncle, Mr. U. D. Gnagey, a leading attorney of this city. I use the word "again" advisedly. During our conversation, I told him that I seemed to remember meeting him once before. He remarked that I must have an excellent memory because at our last meeting I was just one year old. Mr. Gnagey is a brother of our own well-known A. D. Gnagey, and is an alumnus of Ashland College. He graduated in the eighties.

INSTALLING an Indian Chief

Tonight the Convention closes, and tomorrow, Monday, is reserved for recreation. (Not a bad plan at that, to hold the delegates throughout the entire Convention.) An interesting program is planned. There are to be automobile drives, boat rides, field sports, stunts, a barbecued salmon dinner;

42. Please explain Genesis 1:28. W. A. S.

Verse 28 is a continuation of the creation account of Man which begins in verse 27. One must read not only the verse indicated but also the whole section from verse 27 to 29 and chapter 2:7ff. and 18ff. The creation of Man was a climax to God's whole creative work. The dignity, worth and high station assigned Man not alone in these creation accounts but throughout the whole of the Bible is most significant and meaningful. We have no right to be over-exalted in our opinions regarding ourselves as God's supreme creation on earth; but neither have we any right to depreciate and underestimate by a false attitude our high station as children of God by creation. This will be clearly seen when we are reminded that God made us in his own image and after his likeness. Verses 26-27. The Eighth Psalm is a fine Old Testament exposition of the dignity and destiny of Man. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews sees this high station of Man realized in Jesus the archetypal Man. What is the destiny of this Man whom God so created and endowed may be further seen from 1 Corinthians 15:45-49. There is a first Adam who was a living soul; a second Adam who was a life-giving spirit. There was a first man of the earth, earthy and a second Man who is the Lord from heaven. But I can not pursue this most interesting subject any farther. I must return to the question.

If now my questioner will read Genesis 1:21-22 he will see that after the creation of the animals there is not alone the customary mark of, divine approval in the words, "And God saw that it was good," but there is added in verse 22 a blessing in the words, "And God blessed them, . . ." The words of the blessing are expanded when we read them as pronounced upon the Man and his Wife as in verse 28. Man is not only to be fruitful and to multiply but he is to subdue the earth and he is to have dominion over all. We have perhaps in our own day just begun to tap the resources of the earth and the sky. The new forces and the uses to which man can put them have been potentially here since the dawn of creation. We are just now discovering them and how to use them in doing our work and making life tolerable and happy. The ancients thought the lightning was the thunderbolt of some deity's destructive wrath. We know it is God's wise provision for man's blessing. So with radium and all radio-activities just found. How infinite in wisdom was our Heavenly Father in his creative plans.

"Is the Peace Pact a Joke?"

We are informed by the Ohio Christian News that an article under this title has been prepared for the Prince of Peace Declaration Contest of the Ohio Council of Churches. The point made by the author is that a year after the signing of the peace treaty by which the nations agreed never to go to war again, they are still building bigger navies, recruiting larger armies, training young people in the art of war, and "blacklisting" citizens who dare speak out against war. All this feverish preparation for war makes the average man wonder whether the nations are taking their pledges seriously, or whether indeed they are still looking upon treaties as mere "scraps of paper."

This doubtful attitude of mind has been all the more intensified recently by the bill pending in Congress and sponsored by the War Department, making provision for the registration of all male citizens between 18 and 45, to be subject to call for military purposes when Congress shall declare a national emergency to exist, or conferring on the President the power to declare such a national emergency at his "discretion," and to conscript any individual registrant. It looks as though militarism were attempting to get a throttle hold on our government with the purpose that the peace pact might be allowed to slip quietly into the limbo of forgotten things.

But on the other hand there are evidences that the thoughtful, Christian citizenry of our land does not propose to allow such valuable peace machinery to be thrown into the discard without a protest. Church conferences and educational leaders are discussing the situation. Young people's gatherings are raising the question whether militarism or pacifism is to be our national policy. The religious press is wielding an ever widening and more pronounced influence against preparedness and in favor of peace. And intelligent leaders of churches and communities are becoming awakened to the seriousness of the situation, and to the responsibility of the church to build for peace and to oppose war. The inquiries reaching the Evangelist concerning the meaning of war maneuvers, military training camps and military building programs, are but indicative of the increasing interest being registered in practically all the religious publication headquarters, and point to the slowly rising tide in behalf of peace. Just the other day a prominent layman of our church stepped into the Evangelist office and seeing a display poster of the peace pact, asked where a copy could be gotten, or whether the editor would publish it. We have previously given it publicity in these columns, but we are glad to do so again by request. Here it is. Read it over, and ask yourself whether it is going to be allowed to be a joke, or whether it is destined by the encouragement of every peace-loving Christian to become a blessed reality.

GENERAL PACT FOR THE RENUNCIATION OF WAR

Signed at Paris, August 27, 1923

The President of the German Reich, the President of the United States of America, His Majesty the King of the Belgians, the President of the French Republic, His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, His Majesty the King of Italy, His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, the President of the Republic of Poland, the President of the Czechoslovak Republic, Persuaded that the time has come when a frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy should be made ... Convinced that all changes in their relations with one another should be sought only by pacific means ... Hopeful that, encouraged by their example, all the other nations of the world will join in this humane endeavor ... Have decided to conclude a Treaty ...

Article 1

The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the name of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

Article 2

The High Contracting Parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means.

This is a most satisfying statement to all lovers of peace. But a mere declaration of this sort will not of itself do away with war. Many good people question whether war can ever be wholly done away, and they may be right. In fact, we are agreed that war can only be really and fully destroyed as the Spirit of Christ grips men's hearts and the teachings of Christ become the measure of the conduct of individuals and of nations. But while working to bring in the universal reign of Christ in the hearts of men, it is the Christian's duty to promote such proper humane measures as may be more or less effective in discouraging or lessening the chances of war. And men who believe more in the nobility of peace and the worth of human life than in militarism and "dollar diplomacy" have a right to expect that the influence of the church and of church members individually shall be on the side of those worthy agencies that are set for the promotion of peace and the destruction of war. And in line with this thought we would point to present signs of growing official sentiment in behalf of a reduction of armaments and a lessening of emphasis on military preparedness as being worthy of the gratitude and support of all peace-minded people. Present indications are that Herbert Hoover and Ramsey Macdonald are about to put a new seriousness and sincerity into diplomatic efforts in behalf of peace and disarmament.

Making Cross-Bearing Easy

Cross-bearing has become a very common subject of conversation and it is often referred to flippantly. It has little real meaning to the average person, and even to most Christian people who speak of cross-bearing it means simply putting up with some rather insignificant thing that happens to be more or less disagreeable. Real cross-bearing is not common and few people know anything about it. The real significance of it has been almost wholly lost. Cross-bearing to Jesus meant excruciating pain and a horrible death, and he laid the necessity of cross-bearing upon his disciples. The last one of those to whom he talked understood what it meant. They knew that it meant possible death, and the doing of things that would cause great suffering and sacrifice.

Today we not only do not realize the seriousness of the task of cross-bearing, but we do not want to know or to experience it. We do not want to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, as Paul admonishes us. We want to make the Christian way easy. We like the name of cross-bearing, but we do not like the hurt or the hardship or the suffering of it.

We shrink from going against the current of popular opinion, lest we suffer the loss of a certain popularity. We shun the thought of opposing or refraining from that which the crowd sanctions, lest by any chance we heap upon ourselves ridicule. We are unwilling to approach that degree of consecration that would set us apart from worldly indulgences and despiritualizing agencies, lest our non-Christian friends cut us off from some of their ungodly revelries and social functions. We are unwilling to follow Christ too closely because it would mean the denial of self in many respects and the sacrificing of many things that we have set our hearts upon. Sacrifice comes hard and the cross is heavy and we are unwilling.

Not only in the matter of worldly indulgences do we shun the cross, but in the demands of service and the pouring out of life's energy for the cause of Christ. Our services are so ordinary and our contributions to the forces of righteousness are so meagre! We give just the left-over of our time and the fag-ends of our talents and powers! We are so inclined just to potter along with the little, easy things, shunning the hard tasks, and doing only half-heartedly what we cannot escape from. So few are willing to give God their best, and to fairly pour out their lives in sacrificial service. That is hard; it means real cross-bearing and we are unwilling to endure it.

We like to flatter ourselves that we are bearing our crosses, but we seldom really are. We cannot be said to be bearing our crosses when we persist in shying at all hardship and sacrifice in our Christian lives and service. It is not the spirit of cross-bearing to complain of the hurt of the ordeal, or to insist that our crosses shall be made easy, or that they shall be of our own choosing. Christ has promised that our crosses shall be made easy, and our burdens made light, but not by slighting and avoiding them, but by undertaking them willingly, courageously, in his strength and power. It is to the industrious, the hard workers, the enduring, the heavily laden, that he says, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." Those who are not unwilling to bear the burden and heat of the day, who do not shrink from the path of duty that is strewn with self-denial and suffering, pain and persecution, he invites to find relief in him who is inexhaustible in strength, unsearchable in wisdom and never tiring in patience. They shall discover thereby, says he, that "my yoke is easy and my burden is light." That is the only way to make cross-bearing easy.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There can be no true faith apart from obedience.

God puts every possible hindrance in the way of men who go the downward road of sin and destruction.

If you sometimes become discouraged in the Christian way, be assured that God never leaves any obedience unrewarded.

In this day when leaders of other religions are seeking to enter into a bargain with leaders of Christianity, we need to sound the warning, "Beware of substitutes."

The peace that Christ bestows "passeth all understanding," but we do not need to understand or to analyze it to possess it; we need only to accept and to enjoy it.

"The way of the transgressor is hard," but that is not an evidence of God's severity, but rather of his lovingkindness; he makes the way hard so that men will turn from it and walk in the way that is truth and life.

Brother Miles H. Taber, who recently took charge of the work at Leon, Iowa, has been well received by the people there and is pleased at evidences of their loyal support. He says: "Attendance is good and we are enthusiastic about the outlook."

We do well to work for the destruction of the institution of war and the enthronement of policies of peace in international affairs, however, we must never forget that sin cannot be merely hushed or quieted out of the human heart, but can only be extricated by the power of the cross, and that true peace, the peace that passeth all understanding, is the gift of Christ.

We are in receipt of a copy of an excellent program for the Northwest District conference, held at Spokane, June 26 to 30, when Prof. Alva J. McClain was the special speaker. The pastors are not numerous, but the pastors' wives are capable and add to the number on the program. Mrs. C. C. Grisso and Mrs. Fred V. Kinzie made important contributions. Doubtless we shall have a report of the conference at an early date.

This week Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports for Mulvane, Kansas, one of our small western churches, and one that has been hard hit financially, but also one that is persevering in its work with courage and faith. Brother Claude Landis is the pastor and is showing himself a worthy leader of this group. Their gift to the Endowment Fund was $305.00, putting the total amount at $212,376.20.

Mrs. Orville D. Jobson writes a letter this week to the little folks in behalf of the little black boys and girls of Africa. In a note accompanying her letter she says, "We are happy and thankful that the people of the Karre tribe were not drawn away by the false teaching. . . . The work is going nicely here (Bassai Station), although our force is somewhat depleted at this time." We are sure the older readers as well as the children will enjoy her letter. The marker mentioned and placed at our lamented Brother Gribble's grave was the gift of the First church of Philadelphia.

A recent note from Brother A. L. Lynn, pastor of the church at La Verne, California, informs us that at their communion service just held they had "the largest attendance in the history of the church." It is encouraging to learn of the places where the people in large numbers prize this sacred service. All too many are rather indifferent to it. That service with all of its richness of teaching and important implications rests at the center of the Brethren plea. To neglect it is to neglect one of the outstanding reasons for our denominational existence.

Dr. J. Allen Miller writes urging support of Shipshewana. We are glad to call attention to his statement and to add a supporting word. We recently heard Prof. R. R. Haun outline the program and advantages of the Shipshewana camp, Dr. Bame speak of its importance and Prof. M. A. Stuckey tell us privately something of the growth and plans for the future, so that we have become quite enthusiastic about the project. We are inclined to believe that young people who go there will return to their homes greatly benefited. The undertaking deserves a wide support.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, makes his first report of receipts from the Educational Day offering. The total amount of this report was $790.88. It is too early to prophesy what the total amount will be, but we are inclined to suggest that if any church feels that it has not done its best, it ought to be given a second chance, for it is likely that it will require the best efforts of all to make the goal. Remember the College absolutely needs $5,000. That is really not a big amount when divided among us all, but if some do little or nothing, it will lay a heavy burden on others if the goal is to be met.

The newly established Brethren church at Osceola, Indiana, met on the evening of June 25th to further perfect their organization. Four deacons were elected in the persons of John Humes, Vern Gongwere, Leslie Doll and Delbert Beery. The following were elected as a finance committee: Floyd Essig, Leslie Doll and Delbert Beery. Maybelle Hume was elected church correspondent and Harry Simpson was chosen as Elder. We wish these good people the blessing of God that success attend their efforts to the end that the Kingdom may be advanced through them. We invite them all to join the Evangelist family by subscribing to the Brethren Evangelist.

Brother E. L. Miller is back in the news department again and we appreciate his interesting letter and his many friends will join the editor in hoping that he will come again soon. The church is going forward in all departments and the people have a mind to work. They find inspiration in the energetic example of their pastor. He sets the pace and had splendid cooperation on the part of his parishioners in completing a fine improvement on the church property recently. The pastor pays high tribute to the excellent service and inspiration of the aged brother, Elder Spiggle, of his church. The congregation was well represented at the Oak Hill conference, of which the pastor was the efficient moderator.

A very common fault of the average worshipper is that of receiving all the good and helpful things in the church's worship program as a matter of course, with seldom a thought of obligation or expression of gratitude. "How easy it is to take things as just a matter of regular procedure, without pausing to consider the efforts that are put forward," said Brother Charles Mayes of Whittier, California, recently in his church calendar. Then he called attention to the work done by the choir, the pianist, and others who have regular responsibilities in the worship program of the church, and remarked that "they should know that their efforts and work are appreciated by all of us." But we are so thoughtless or neglectful, or for some other reason fail to show our appreciation. If we were more expressive of our gratitude, it would add wonderfully to the happiness and good will of this old world.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the complete recovery of Brother W. I. Duker, pastor of the church of Elkhart, Indiana, who recently underwent a rather serious operation for appendicitis. He says he is slowly recovering.

Pray for the recovery of Brother A. T. Wirick, who, we are informed, has undergone a serious goiter operation at Indianapolis. "While not out of danger, his recovery is anticipated."

Things By the Way. XX

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

The Locked-Open Gate

A gentleman once saw his gardner locking the gate to keep the children out. He at once ordered it opened and locked open, and this sign put up: "Children May Come and Pick Flowers." He who comes in the name of a child will find the gate into the heart of Jesus locked OPEN. And if you come to him in your soul need, in your sorrow, in the great temptation of life, you will find the gate locked open! He has put up the sign: "I will in no wise cast out."

Feeding on Jesus

Jesus made it very clear that the soul that does not feed on Jesus will starve; he made it equally clear that

HE is the bread of life, nothing else will satisfy. No one ever tasted the bread from heaven who wanted bread more than heaven. The first thing necessary to feeding on Jesus is, as he so pointedly put it to the multitude, to seek him for himself, and not for "the advantages of Christian civilization," being better fed and clothed. Jesus is more than civilization. He is civilization plus a person, and a PERSON is always of greater importance than a mere THING. The biggest thing Jesus has to offer the world is not the church with its privileges, not the gospel, not a doctrine of any kind, it is HIMSELF. He who has HIM has everything else that is worth having. The one outstanding contribution Jesus Christ made to this world is himself. A home missionary's wife in the West received a sewing machine, a washing machine, a victrola, and a number of other extremely useful gifts from a wealthy lady in the East. Finally she got a letter saying that a piano, an encyclopedia, and other welcome gifts had been shipped to the parsonage. At the foot of the letter was a postscript adding that the lady who had given all these things was on the way and would visit the missionary's home. And the missionary's wife was so delighted with the companionship, the inspiration, the soul feast which the advent of such a person promised that she forgot to send to the railroad for the piano and other things. Who can think of the "loaves and the fishes" in the PRESENCE OF JESUS? For the moment, the material gifts which had been shipped to the missionary, precious as they were, were lost sight of in anticipation of the giver's arrival. When one has Christ he has all there is, and if he does not have Christ, then he has nothing, whatever else he may have.

"And He Showed Me Christ"

"I went to St. Andrews' church, and there saw a little fair man; and he showed me the loveliness of Christ." That is the description given more than two centuries and a half ago of the preaching of the celebrated Samuel Rutherford, whose "Letters" are among the half-dozen chief classics in religious literature. What a compliment to the preacher! Could any minister of the gospel wish for any higher praise than that in his preaching he showed his auditors "the loveliness of Jesus?" Would it not be well if all ministers would ask themselves when leaving the pulpit, Did I make those people see me or see my Master? Certainly the preacher who can so effectually hide himself behind the cross that his auditors can "see no man save Jesus only," comes up to the true standard of gospel preaching. That king of preachers, the Apostle

Paul, tells us that he "determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified." His own conversion had been produced by a revelation of Christ to him, and that not first on the way to Damascus, but rather as he stood by while Stephen was being stoned to death. It was there that Paul got his first glimpse of Jesus, incarnated in a human life. That prepared the mind of Paul for the revelation which appeared to him later "in the way."

Not the Atonement but the Atoner

The vast majority of all the people who attend our churches believe in Christianity; they admit its excellence and admire its beauty. But that faith in Christianity works no change in the heart or in the daily life. Jesus Christ himself did not formulate a creed and call upon his hearers to accept that; he simply said, "Come unto me!" Any statement of belief to which one is required to subscribe to maintain his standing in a church is a requirement which Jesus Christ never laid upon any one who would follow him. "Follow ME," was the invitation of the Christ; and in those two words is summed up the whole gospel. "He that believeth on ME hath everlasting life." The only saving faith is that which sees Jesus, accepts Jesus, obeys Jesus, and joins the soul to Jesus. How complicated we have made the otherwise simple gospel! It is not the central, vital doctrine of the Atonement that Christ presses upon the sinning, suffering souls around him; it is HIMSELF AS THE ATONER. How this simplifies the work of the minister, the evangelist, and the teacher! The humble primitive Methodist preacher whose sermon converted Spurgeon when he was a boy, did nothing but repeat over and over again the one truth, "LOOK TO JESUS." No discourse delivered on that Sunday by the most profound theologian or brilliant orator did such ex-

The Christ of the Simple Life

By Herbert Booth Smith, D.D.

*Long, long ago, he walked abroad
The quiet ways of Holy Land;
At every turn of nature's road
He saw his Father's wondrous hand.*

*No dim cathedral was his shrine,
No cloistered monks his worship heard;
But quiet hill and lonely pine Reflected oft his gracious word.*

*What homely sermons did he preach!
What simple things he dared to say!
What common folk he loved to teach
His message of the better way!*

*He loved the sheep and birds and flowers,
The wild beasts, too, enjoyed his care;
The children, in their play-time hours,
Received the blessing of his prayer.*

*A simple, natural Man was he—
So far removed from cant and pride;
Thus real should his servants be,
And all the folk who're on his side.*

*Come on, good Christian, back to Christ!
Be more like him you Master call!
The world's mad show is too high-priced
For you who've given him your all.*

*O Church, your systems have their place,
But these you may not deify,—
Lest, in your zeal to save the race,
The Lord himself you crucify!*

ecution as the Methodist's plain, persistent exhortation. It converted the greatest preacher of the century.

How We Betray Ourselves

In a thousand ways we destroy our lives and our happiness by our own selfishness. We want money, and we cheat others out of their rightful share in order to get it. We want to stand at the head of the class, or to make a passing grade, and we cheat on a test. We love to be praised, and we undercut the reputation of another in order to throw credit upon ourselves. We resort to petty little schemes and tricks in order to get ahead of others, and in all these cunning devices we simply lay the plans for our own failure and shame. We may succeed, but what is success if it costs us that delicate thing we call honor, self-respect, and loyalty to the best we know?

The Life of the Early Church People

It was very simple. In a few verses in the second chapter of Acts we have a beautiful picture of the life of the disciples during the early days of the church in Jerusalem. It will do us good to turn back to those days when no man-made creeds shackled the simple life of the early pupils of the Spirit. Whether or not the church has gained or lost by lopping off some things and taking on others is, of course, an open question. Three things characterized the church in those days: (1) They were constantly taught about Christ. The church was at once a Sunday school, a day school, and a church. The apostles, especially Peter and John, were their first teachers; the people who joined the little circle were the pupils. Thus early in its life the church was regarded, as it should be now, as a training school for service. (2) Believers in the early church regularly attended public worship and observed the Lord's Supper. For a time they worshipped with the Jews in the temple. They had daily prayer meetings, and these were more largely attended than our weekly prayer service of today. At home they observed the "breaking of bread," which seems to mean that they daily gathered by families or in larger groups to commemorate the Lord's Supper. In this united service they found mutual strength and inspiration. One helped the other. Such services are just as necessary for the growth of the Christian life now as then. (3) The spirit of fellowship was very pronounced. They shared their possessions with those who were in need; as one writer says, "the distinction between mine and thine was lost in an overflowing love." This rare generosity and their spirit of helpfulness impressed their neighbors and day by day many were won to their belief and way of living. The most impressive thing about it all was the LIFE these early Christians lived. It was NOT the preaching of any particular doctrine that added "daily" to the little family of believers; it was not preaching at all that did it, though preaching and teaching from house to house there was, and much of it. Here was a people differentiated from all the rest; they had a secret the rest did not have, and that secret was JESUS. It was the re-incarnation of Christ in the lives of men and women that impressed the community as nothing else had ever done. The writer has noticed in the recent "front page" Evangelist messages by representative ministers of the Brethren church the increased emphases on our "plea," our "distinctive doctrines," our special "mission and message," etc. It is misplaced emphasis. Our only distinction, if it is to impress the world and make our influence felt, is the distinction of LIFE, pure, honest, noble life, inspired by the spirit of Jesus Christ,—that is the only unanswerable argument.

"That They May Be One", John 17:21

By Dr. Charles A. Bame

Whether we may delight in it or not; agree or not; help or oppose it, there is a wonderful movement to the unification of the many denominations in our country. Great gatherings like that of Lausanne; accomplished unions like that in Canada and elsewhere are bound to make indelible impressions on the minds of the laity and inevitably create a feeling for more of them, and, as they become enlightened to the lessened expense and the larger good that may be achieved in this day of big things, cause more and more of likeminded peoples to consider and make efforts toward union—"that they may be one," "as we are." It is not my purpose to discuss the means or methods of union but rather to try to show how, though we may at first think the two main divisions of the Brethren Church are still far apart, the most radical are susceptible to good impressions, and react in splendid style to proper advances and real fraternal conduct. I desire to tell of three memorable incidents:

The Last, First

I was, as has been reported, an interested and delighted visitor at the recent Annual or (International) Meeting of the Church of the Brethren at North Manchester, Indiana. Here, locally, I had many friends in both the churches; here, for the first time in many years, I was again at an Annual Meeting, which for a dozen years in succession I had attended and which I had received my greatest acclaim and also my greatest humiliation. One day of this last meeting, I walked into the presence of two Brethren of our sister church, both of whom I knew well and with whom I had been intimately associated. One knew me well and said to the other, "Do you not know this brother?" He said, "I believe not." "Do you remember a man by the name of Bame?" said the younger one. "Is this Charles A. Bame?" asked the other. "It is," said the one, and I acceded. He reached for my hand again and said, "I want to kiss you," and accompanied the word with the deed. Then the younger said, half in jest, "I am jealous of Brother Bame, for you did not kiss me," and he then saluted him with "the holy kiss" 1 Thess. 5:14. And then he added a most significant remark that gave the whole incident its value. "But Brother . . . ., there were never the differences between us that there were between Brother Bame and myself." There had been differences about the order of dress and how to obtain it and with the power which the Annual Meeting had given him from year to year, he had made it mighty uncomfortable for me in times past; but now, it seemed to me he was glad of the opportunity to show me a spirit of unity he had been unable to do other times. I accepted it as the unmistakable evidence of the different spirit I found among many who had been friends and some who had not. One prominent layman, meeting me with gladdened spirit, could not tell my name. "Oh," said he, "we made programs together and worked the Sunday school work together and you were recognized as one of our . . . . leaders," and then, when I told him my name, he said, "Well, we did a good many things of which I am ashamed, but the best we can do is to try to heal the breach made in the past, and forget those trying times," and I am perfectly willing to do so. May I give another incident that happened many years ago, though all the principals are living to bear witness to the truth of it.

A committee of three from our division and three from theirs had met in accord with our commissions from the two conferences to see what could be done about our separation. The chairman was from their division and he suggested that we simply open our hearts and say without fear what was on them which we did, each speaking in turn as the next in the circle from the starting point; I am not sure but think, perhaps, the last one was finishing his message when one from their committee rose and impassionately said, "We be Brethren! I never suspected we were so much alike! It has always been the custom that when Brethren meet, they greet each other with the Holy Kiss! I move that we pass the salutation!" Without passing the motion, we passed the salutation in that happy group. Alas, we could not carry the spirit of that meeting to our conferences. But it did not die. It slumbers and again awakens. It dies, but arises from the grave. They desire our name and they have many things to give us for it. May Brethren people of both divisions make it an object of special prayer daily, to pray "that they may be one," so that the Master's prayer may be answered, "All ye, are Brethren."

Christ as Our Example

By Miss Frances Brumbaugh

(Substance of Address at Southeastern District Conference, at Oak Hill, West Virginia, June 11 to 13, 1929).

The text assigned as an explanation of my theme is found in Luke 2:52, and reads: "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

In Peter 2:21 we read: "For even here unto were ye called because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow in his steps."

Jesus, on one occasion, said to Peter: "Follow thou me." Therefore, the biggest thing any one can do is to bring and keep his life in accord with the example which Christ set for us in the life he lived. When we think of his life from the standpoint of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the great challenge comes to us of "following in his steps."

He is our example in every good thing, but I shall only mention some of the Christian graces in which we should "Follow his steps."

1—It means the walk according to his will, and we are not to determine what his will is by the lives of those who profess to follow him. The one safe standard is the testament which he sealed with his own blood. Even Paul only asked the Corinthians to follow him as he follows Christ. I Corinthians 11:1.

2—Follow him in preparation. Christ prepared himself for his ministry and if we are to do our best for him we too must pay the price in preparation. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

3—Follow Christ's example in doctrine as well as in conduct. Conduct is what identifies one as to what class he belongs. The Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Faith in Christ and all his teachings, relates one to his family.

4—Follow him in resisting temptation: "Ye have not resisted yet unto blood, striving against sin." Hebrews 12:4. Following the example of Christ is a life of continual conquest; but it is the most glorious conquest in which anyone can engage. The victorious life must have both the positive and negative. Positive toward truth, purity and righteousness, and negative toward all sin and falsehood. The Master gave us an example in resisting temptation when he said: "Get thee behind me, Satan."

5—Follow him in prayer. We may not be able to pray as he did, but we may open our lives to receive of him.

It is possible for us to so conduct our lives that our prayers may avail much. James 5:16.

6—Follow him in worship; without show, unpretentious, without formality. Our worship should be simple, free, heartfelt, deep—therefore: "In spirit and in truth."

7—Follow his example in compassion, in sympathy and love. Jesus shed no tears over his own poverty, persecution and abuse but always looked in pity and sympathy and love on those in need both physically and spiritually.

8—Follow him in purity, as it is only the pure in heart that shall see God. To be pure we must not only abstain from evil but the things that lead to evil.

9—Follow him in obedience. Christ said: "If ye love me keep my commandments." So we must seek to know his commands and do them.

10—Follow his example in unstinted service. In the church with all its activities we may find our place and spend and be spent in his service. We may prepare ourselves for his coming by our constant following of his example in service. The greatest men of earth did not spring into greatness but they paid the price by applying themselves to the principles of greatness. All the principles of greatness are crunched in the one word—"Faithfulness to him who gave us the example."

Effective Praying

By Mabel Crawford

(Sermon preached by a member of the Ashland College Girls' Gospel Team in the Ashland Church on March 17, 1929)

Text—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.—Matthew 26:47.

I believe that the greatest need in the Brethren Church, as a denomination today, is the need of a deeper, more consecrated prayer life. We are living in a very skeptical day. Among other things the doctrine of Prayer has been attacked. The skeptics are saying that it is utter folly to think that the Creator of the Universe, if there is such a Being, would stoop to hear the requests of man whom he has created. As a result many questions are being asked, even among Christians. Let us consider together four of the questions being asked: Is prayer necessary to the development of Christian Life? If it is necessary, who can pray effectively? How shall we pray effectively? Does prayer really bring results?

I. Its Necessity

The only answer that a Christian can have to any question of the necessity of effective prayer must be an emphatic affirmative. All Christian teaching and experience teaches that. Jesus Christ's earthly ministry was one of much prayer. In Luke 6:12 we read that he spent the whole night in prayer before choosing his disciples. If Jesus Christ, omnipotent and omniscient, felt the need of divine sanction before choosing those who should be his companions and successors, how much more do we with our finite minds need divine sanction in making choices! Jesus prayed in all the great Crises of his life, among which were the feeding of the five thousand, the raising of Lazarus, and the prayer in Gethsemane when he submitted his will to the Father's and made the supreme sacrifice for us.

Jesus not only prayed himself but he taught his disciples to pray. Upon one occasion, seeing his great prayer life, they came to him with the request, "Lord, Teach us to Pray." As a result he gave them that prayer which has come down to us as the "Our Father" or model prayer. That the disciples followed the teachings of their Lord is substantiated throughout the New Testament.

Peter was in Prayer on the housetop when he received the Vision which sent him to carry the Gospel for the first time to the Gentiles. The apostle Paul is constantly exhorting us in such phrases as "Be instant in prayer." If the disciples, who had three years in the presence of the Lord, and the early church, led by these disciples, feel the need of prayer, how much more does the Christian Church today, nearly 2,000 years removed from that Magnetic personality, need prayer! Andrew Murray, one of our greatest commentators on prayer has said that "Intercession is the highest attainment of a life of true abiding" and that "it is in prayer that the Christian Church will find and wield its highest power." Do we, as a Brethren Church wish to wield a powerful influence? Then, let us pray!

II. Effective Prayerers

There are many qualifications of effective prayerers mentioned in our Bible but I wish to mention only a few of the very outstanding.

In the eighteenth chapter of Luke we have the parable of the publican and the Pharisee. Jesus distinctly teaches that the lowly prayer of the publican, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," was heard rather than the proud, vaunting prayer of the Pharisee. On one or two occasions I have been asked this question, "Can a non-Christian pray?" To this I have answered "Yes," upon one condition. "A non-Christian can pray one prayer and only one. 'God be merciful to me a sinner.'" Until he has prayed that prayer he is not entitled to pray any other prayer.

One of the disciples has come down to us as the nearest and most beloved of our Lord's companions, who aside from our Lord himself, could know his desires and will better than the one who was closest to him. The Beloved Disciple John says in 1 John 5:13: "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us; and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him."

The apostle distinctly says that he is speaking to those who "believe in the Name of the Son of God." If we ask ourselves the question—"Do I really believe in the Son of God?" What will be the answer? Probably we all have a "head belief," but has our belief entered the depths of our being, has it changed our actions, thoughts, and desires? If not, we do not truly "believe in the name of the Son of God."

The apostle again says in the third chapter of the same epistle, "And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him because we keep his commandments and do those things which are pleasing in his sight." Here we find a very close relationship between Bible Study and Prayer. How are we to know what his commandments are unless we search the Scriptures to see what is written therein. If we are not willing to obey his commands and listen to him speak, we cannot expect him to obey our wishes and hear our requests.

In John 15 we have the parable of the Vine and the branches. Jesus closes this wonderful story with the promise "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

What does Jesus Christ mean by "abiding." He means just such a relationship as exists between a vine and a branch. Suppose the branch had the ability to say, "I am tired of being dependent upon the vine. I'll sever myself from the Vine and live alone." How long would that branch live? Immediately it would begin to wither and before many hours be dead. The life of the Vine had to flow through the branch. It is just such a relationship that is meant by our abiding. We are branches abiding in the Vine, receiving our nourishment from him, feeling his life and energy flowing through us, bearing his fruit, and doing his will and purpose. Just in so far as our thoughts, ambitions, desires, purposes, and feelings are his thoughts, ambitions, desires, purposes, and feelings are we assured of answers.

FELLOWSHIP WITHOUT UNION

The Congregational Union of England and Wales, the oldest community of dissenters, with 4,754 churches and preaching stations in its assembly, adopted a report welcoming the approaches toward reunion made by the Anglican church in recent years, though rejecting the idea that episcopacy is necessary to unity. They expressed the conviction "that unity will best be advanced at the present moment, not by attempts to construct a single corporate institution embracing all existent denominations, but by seeking to realize and make more manifest to ourselves and the world the fellowship of Christ, transcending all differences of order, ritual and creed."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

WOMEN WIN OUT AT SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Southern Baptist church has been faced constantly in its convention with the question of women's privileges on the floor. But, at the last one, held in May, in Memphis, Tennessee, the matter was finally settled, when an effort to prevent Mrs. W. J. Cox, of Memphis, president of the Womens' Missionary Union, was defeated by a big vote. She came back at her opponents when she said during the course of her address that, "no woman slept in Gethsemane, no woman denied him, no woman betrayed him."

The convention adopted a new plan of financing its varied activities. At the close of the present fiscal year the executive committee, with headquarters at Nashville, will serve as administrative head of the denomination. Budgets for each board and agency will be made by the committee each year, superseding the present method of allotting each department a problematical percentage of expected contributions.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE NEW ARCHAEOLOGY AND THE BIBLE

One by one the reputed mythological sites of Genesis in the form of strong cities, as well as the cities of the Conquest, are yielding up their buried testimonies to the earnest workers digging for evidences of the great past. Towns like Gath Hepher, which gave Jonah to the world of fact and the world of controversy, speak in no uncertain voice. The site of Hazor, whose king contested with Joshua, is definitely located. Much interest has always gathered about the recitals of the allied kings whose armies captured Lot and whose release was made by Abraham's small force of domestic soldiers. The new discoveries on the east of the Jordan go far to confirm this report, and to repudiate the claim of the radicals, that such cities and kings and armies did not exist in the regions beyond the little Jordan. The town of Ham as a Canaanite city has been most valuable in its discovery, as it helps to blaze the path along which the march of Abraham followed. There are recent finds that have been made known to the public by the secular press and secured by them from the most reliable sources. Jerusalem itself is one of the most fruitful fields of research. Thus God gives light when light is so demanded, and the faith of so many in God's written Word is severely tested. However, that Word does not need defense, but the open day.—The Presbyterian.

SEVERAL SIGNIFICANT FEATURES

The successful lessening of tuberculosis is a great lesson to folk interested in the conquest of evil. The church may well take notice of this triumph. The disease is younger than sin, but it is as ancient as any particular "social problem" which involves a disregard of the rules of health—moral as well as physical. The serious fight began when a talented man assumed the leadership of a movement. He might have reasoned that for generations untold, people died from this distemper, and a percentage of deaths due to this cause is natural. Or he might have said to himself, "If humanity does not have tuberculosis, it will have something else and die of it, so why interfere with a kind of affliction to which mankind has grown accustomed?" We have people who seduce themselves into indifference to current evils by one or the other of these ways of thinking. Maybe leaders are born and not made, but we have a fairly fixed opinion that a considerable number could lead successfully if they undertook their task instead of standing on the side lines and complaining.—The Lutheran.

ROGER BABSON BLAMES MOVIES FOR MUCH CRIME

Of course he does not blame all moving pictures as crime breeding. He has no word of condemnation for the better class of theaters and pictures. But he is convinced that the kind of pictures shown in many theaters can work nothing but harm to those who see them.

To quote him: "Such studies as I have made lead directly to the movies as the basic cause of the crime waves of today. When one considers that ten million people (largely young people) in the United States attend the movies every week, their tremendous influence in all ways must be admitted. . . I sent a questionnaire to the school principals of New England asking which of the following had the greatest influence in molding the character of our young people today—the school, the church, or the home—and 70 per cent scratched off all three and replied: 'The movies!'"

"Do not make the mistake of judging the movies by the pictures which are being shown in the good theaters. Such pictures represent only a small fraction of the pictures shown every day of the year. The greatest percentage of pictures are crime-breeding and plant seeds of vice and deceit. Why we Americans . . . permit a bunch of irresponsible men to exhibit each night crime-breeding pictures is beyond comprehension. Such pictures in one night uproot all the good seed which schools can plant in a month." Sober words from a keen observer!

CONFORMING TO THE WORLD

Conformity to this world is something we are warned against in Holy Scripture. There are periods when we take heed. At the present hour it is not necessary to make a wide observation to discover that the Christian church in many respects is conforming to the demands of present-day society. We learn of churches here and there which hold their services early on Sunday morning, making it possible for the members who so desire to play golf and at the same time retain some of their religious respectability. They may go to church and then have the rest of the day for the open field. In many other respects the church finds itself receiving favorably the dictation of the world.—Western Christian Advocate.

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

"In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Eph. 1:11-13.

MONDAY

An Inheritance.—A number of times already we have referred to the riches that are now ours and will yet be ours in Christ Jesus, as joint heirs with him. It is well to praise him as we recall these things, but let us never forget that our richest inheritance lies in HIM himself. "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance," exclaimed the Psalmist. Let us joy in the Lord of our salvation! Read Psalm 16.

TUESDAY

His Own Will.—According to the old mythologies, the gods were themselves capricious, ever vacillating, and their plans were constantly modified by the selfish appeals of their favorites. Our God is not so; he hears no sordidly selfish prayers, but only those in accordance with his own perfect will; and since he possesses all wisdom and loving-kindness we may rest assured that there is nothing better than his will for us. Teach us, our Father, to know thy will, and to find pleasure in doing it! Psalm 86.

WEDNESDAY

The Praise of His Glory.—"The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the Lord thy God." This was required under the law, as an act of praise for God's bounty, typified by the coming harvest. So with these first Christians: They were the firstfruits, presented to the praise of his glory. But WE praise him for the abundant harvest that has followed, of which we are a part. Today the fields are white unto the harvest, and reapers are needed. Prov. 3:1-10.

THURSDAY

The Word of Truth.—Many voices have called to men through the centuries, but only the voice of God has called with the word of truth. His words are truly breathed of God, and are not merely words of truth, but truths that shall bless and comfort every hearer. May we give the more earnest heed to the blessed word of truth! 2 Tim. 3.

FRIDAY

Our Salvation.—Like redemption, salvation is a word much older than Christianity. There are those today who still attach to it its old pagan meaning: Health, Happiness, and Prosperity! I think these items are more than replaced by the one word, Peace, and by contentment regardless of our physical state. Salvation, according to the word of truth, consists primarily in being saved from sin and death through the blood of Jesus Christ. "I will rejoice in thy salvation." Psalm 9:1-14.

SATURDAY

Sealed.—In days of old the king pressed his signet ring into the fresh wax with which an official document was sealed, and it was henceforth recognized as the property of the king, bearing his approval, and not to be tampered with. So with us: we are as the fresh wax that has received the imprint of the king, and we bear his image. Let us praise him that he hath sealed us, and that wicked one dare not touch us! John 6:16-27.

SUNDAY

The Holy Spirit of Promise.—This may refer in part to the promises which are ours through the Holy Spirit's witnessing; but primarily it refers to the fact that the Holy Spirit was promised by God and was received according to the promise. As thy children everywhere meet in thy house today, may they truly seek thy face; then we know that thou wilt be present to bless, for thou hast promised! Matt. 18:18-35.—T. C. L.

Teaching Bible Truth Through Chemistry

By Ruby Almond

JESUS SAVES

Required: A glass containing some alkaline solution, such as a one percent solution of sodium hydroxide, another glass or bottle containing a strong acid, such as ten percent hydrochloric acid, a small bottle of an alcoholic solution of phenolphthalein, and a medicine dropper. The best results will be obtained with the above. White wine vinegar may be used as the acid, but a great deal of it will be required and possibly much time to produce the change from red to colorless unless a very weak solution of caustic soda is used. Try this out in private to ascertain the quantities of materials needed.

Gist of the Message: Just suppose for a few minutes that this glass (alkaline solution) is your life. It is clean, honest, and honorable. You want to keep it that way, but every day temptation comes to you, temptation so strong that sometimes you think it is almost right. Here is a little bottle of sin (Phenolphthalein). It looks as harmless and as pure as your own life. Surely, just a little bit of sin can make no difference. No one will ever see it. (Add a drop or two of the phenolphthalein using the dropper. A deep red-pink at once spreads throughout the mixture). Sin, when it gets into your life, soon shows up. You cannot hide from sin that is in you, nor can you get rid of it without outside help. There is nothing in you to take out the stain. As you took sin into your heart, so must you take Jesus Christ in to make it clean again. Listen to Isaiah, the great prophet of God, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isa. 1:18). (Add the acid slowly without shaking. Where it strikes the solution, this becomes colorless. Add until all the red disappears leaving the solution clear and colorless as water). The Lord Jesus can make you clean. You must take sin or take the Lord Jesus; you cannot have both. If you say that the Lord Jesus is your Savior, you must think clean thoughts, feel kindly to all, and do good deeds; for, if you say that the Lord Jesus is in your heart and you tell lies, or steal, or cheat, or do mean things, or say unkind words, then you are wrong, because when the Lord Jesus comes into your heart, all these things go away.

YELLOW STREAK

Required: A test tube about one-third full of potassium iodide solution, a similar test tube one-third full of lead acetate solution, and a blackboard.

Gist of the Message: I am going to start right off today with a big word. It is hypocrite. I can tell you why it seems so big to the little boys and girls: it is really a Greek word. Somebody long ago who could read the funny Greek letters and liked the sound of the word wrote out the same sounds in English letters like this: H-Y-P-O-C-R-I-T-E. (Print this in large letters near the top of the blackboard.) He borrowed that word from the Greeks, and we have kept it. The actor on the Greek stage was called a hypocrite because he pretended to be somebody else. He put a mask on his face, he wore different clothes and talked differently, so that you never knew what he was like inside. We have kept that word, not as a name for actors on the stage, but as a name for people who pretend to be what they are not.

Hypocrites are those who try to fool other folks. They try to fool God. Perhaps you want everybody to think that you are a nice girl, yet you do secretly things you could not tell your mother. Maybe you are the sort of boy who cheats at games and then thinks he makes up for it by going to Sunday school. Are you polite only when somebody is looking? Would you take the biggest piece of cake if nobody was there to see you? Grown-ups like to think that they are fooling God when they give a lot of money to the church after they have done crookedly in business. They sometimes think a good deed squares a bad one. The hypocrite fools himself, not God. Every hypocrite is two persons: Mr. Really I Am and Mr. Pretend I Am. (Draw two lines diagonally from the center of "hypocrite." At the extremities of the diagonals place these names.)

When the Lord Jesus was talking to his disciples on the mountainside, he said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matt. 6:24). I do not want you to stumble over that word "mammon." It means anything without God. Mr. Pretend I Am always serves God. He is a very fine fellow. Mr. Really I Am is not nearly so nice, he serves himself and does what he pleases. Although Mr. Hypocrite is double (hold up the two test tubes), I can only see Mr. Pretend I Am (hold one of the tubes forward). God sees the two mixed together in one person. (Pour the contents of one tube into the other. Immediately a dense, bright yellow precipitate appears.) If you pretend to be somebody you are not, God sees a yellow streak of crookedness in you. You cannot pretend very long before other folks also will see how "yellow" you are. We call a boy or girl "yellow" when he or she is dishonest and mean.

You can try to live double, to be good and to be bad, to be nice and to be nasty (turn your attention to the blackboard), but God says you are not two persons, but only one, and that you must come together again. (Draw lines from the two names so that they meet. This point should be near the bottom of the board and roughly under the middle of "hypocrite.") Where these lines cross, is where you are found out; and you are always found out sometime, somewhere. Boys and girls, it is hard work being a hypocrite and it is harder being found out. Come, believe on the Lord Jesus and follow him, for it is the happy way, the safe way, and the easy way.—S. S. Times.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS SUPPORT NEAR EAST

The Deputation of the World's Sunday School Association which attended the first Religious Educational Conference in Bible Lands has just returned to America. In addition to giving addresses at the Conference they also met the boys and girls of the American Near East Relief orphanages and Working Boys' Homes. They issue their official statement as follows:

The whisper of a child in distress is heard around the world. Through Near East Relief America's father-and-mother heart went out to the thousands of children made homeless and helpless.

We have seen with our own eyes the splendid work which Near East Relief has done for these orphans and for the refugees exiled from their homes. Our ears have heard their words of gratitude. Our hearts have been stirred by their fortitude and their fidelity to Christ.

In Cairo, Beirut, Aleppo, Athens and elsewhere we saw thousands of refugees bravely struggling upward. Speedily and adequately these should be rehabilitated and given not charity but a chance.

Throughout Greece, Egypt, Palestine, and Syria we saw many hundreds of Armenian boys and girls, ex-orphans, working their way toward self-support, placed by Near East Relief leaders in homes, markets, on farms, and at trades which they learned in Near East Relief orphanage schools.

America has saved their lives, fed, clothed and sheltered them, taught them more than thirty different useful occupations, and given them religious nurture and training. We must not now desert them. These are the weeks and months when they need us most as they seek to adjust themselves to new masters under distressing economic and social conditions often in cities where communities furnish social centers, their only counsellors for encouragement and the necessary small financial assistance. Unless one final million more is raised by June 30th, these children will be imperilled by these conditions.

Homes for Working Boys, and Homes for Working Girls, and the Near East Leagues furnish social centers, their only opportunities under Christian leadership for the conservation of health, mind and morals. Here they find night study classes, recreational programs, and religious services to re-enforce their wills in their fight for clean Christian character.

We earnestly appeal to American friends, especially in the churches and the Sunday schools, to see these orphans through to places of honor, industry and high grade living. Two years will be needed by some, a longer period for others. We must stand by. Vocational guidance and religious education must continue.

American honor is at stake. We must not withdraw the helping hand. We must keep on lifting, leading, and loving until he is satisfied, who by his earthly life forever made sacred to our minds these Bible lands. In his name and for his sake, Walter A. Howlett, Director of Religious Education for the Greater New York Federation of Churches.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for July 14)

Ezekiel Teaches Personal Responsibility

Scripture Lesson—Ezek. 18:1-32; 33:1-20.

Printed Text—Ezek. 33:7-16.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 125.

Golden Text—Each one of us shall give account of himself to God.—Rom. 14:12.

Introductory Note

Before the fall of Jerusalem the Jewish prophets laid the most stress upon national righteousness or sin, with national preservation or destruction as the certain result of their choice. After the fall of their capital city the Jewish nation was non-existent, as a nation, and the times called for a message to the individual of the race. Ezekiel 18 is one of the passages where this is most strongly brought out.

The proverb quoted expresses the fatalism and despair which settled down on the people when they realized the extent of their calamity. Whoever first uttered this proverb "it had come to be used as a witticism at the expense of Providence." Ezekiel in this chapter stresses with great force the responsibility of the individual for his own character. Heredity does count; but men and women have conquered an evil inheritance, while others, with the best of ancestors, have gone far astray.

Ezekiel's dictum is that the one who commits the sin is responsible and will bear the punishment, whatever his father was; and whatever his son may be after him. God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked; all who turn from their sin are more than welcome; but it is necessary that sin shall bear its natural punishment.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Responsibility for Others

Ezekiel 33:1-9 gives an example of one sort of individual responsibility—the responsibility of a man who is set to watch for the raiders who so often came in those days against whatever part of the land seemed to be worth attacking. In brief the argument is: If the watchman is negligent; if he sleeps and does not watch, or sees the raiders and does not give the alarm, the blood of his fellow-citizens is on his head. But if the watchman is faithful and seeing the raiders, gives the alarm, and those whose duty it is to man the walls and resist the attack fail in their duty, the watchman is not to blame—he has done his whole duty, whatever the fate of his countrymen, and of himself with them, may be. The chapter is almost a repetition of chapter 3:17-21.—Ibid.

This question of personal responsibility for others is one that men are debating to-day, and many are ignoring it, but God is still pressing it home to the hearts of individuals. Since the days of Cain, the divine voice has insisted that men are their brothers' keepers. God has so fashioned the human family that men are brought together in many and varied relationships that cause them to influence one another, and they are responsible for the influence they wield. It is not possible for any one to live unto himself, nor to die unto himself. All that we have of wealth, talent, position or strength, is ours not for selfish interests alone, but for the help we may render others. We may be our brother's keeper (1) by showing him a brother's love and sympathy, and not by dictation to him; (2) by helping him in time of need, as did the Samaritan, or as the righteous in Matthew 25:31-46; (3) by being considerate of his welfare in business relations; (4) by using our every rightful influence for their good, even as we would that they should do for us.

Individual Responsibility

Having expressed in the terms of a watchman, whose duties were well known to his hearers, his responsibility to God for them, he goes on to show their individual responsibility (vss. 10-20). If he warns them the responsibility becomes entirely theirs.

Until Jerusalem was actually destroyed the people would not believe that such a dire calamity was possible. Now it had fallen many of them felt that their burden of sin against Jehovah had become so great that there was no longer any hope for any of them, whatever his repentance. Ezekiel is told to preach to them the gospel of hope. God tells them I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. I am not merely a revengeful monster, slaying those who disobey me no matter how much they repent of the sin. If the wicked turn from his way he shall live. Why will ye die? It was all in their own hands; repent and turn to God and the sin will be forgiven and the sinner shall live. God is like an affectionate parent who must not show favor to a disobedient child while he is still disobedient, but who is grieving until the child repents and asks to be forgiven, and who will not delay that forgiveness.

But it is not a question of balancing off of good and evil acts. If a man who has always been righteous slips from that estate and sins, he is as much a sinner, and as sure to receive the punishment for his sins, as if he never had done righteousness. His past righteousness shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression.—Selected.

The Lesson Needed Today

If there is one lesson more than another that men need to learn today it is that we must all individually give an account to God. Hermon Eldredge in the Herald of Gospel Liberty stresses this point by saying:

"Daniel Webster was said to have had the greatest brain of any of the great American statesmen. On one occasion when he was asked what was the most important thought that ever entered that massive brain, he replied that the greatest thought which ever came to him was the thought of his personal responsibility to Almighty God.

"That is the lesson which the prophet Ezekiel is bringing to us today. In all the mass and multitudes of people and in all the ways and things to do there is no truth more impressive than that some day each one of us must give an account of himself to Almighty God.

"There is a tendency of our age to shirk this personal responsibility. Too many are apt to think that religion is the preacher's job or that the deacons will take care of it. If there is something to do, we set up an organization or appoint a committee or in some way try to shift the personal responsibility from our shoulders to the crowd. But it can't be done with all things. There are personal obligations which God has laid on the shoulders of each one of us, and if we shirk them, no committee or club or church can answer for us.

We can sing:

"Count your many blessings;
Name them one by one."

And we also may sing:

"Count your many duties;
Answer one by one."

For we have obligations as well as privileges and duties as well as blessings to account for."

JUNIOR STANDBYS

For Junior Superintendents

Why not give the letter S to your Juniors that are the standbys of the society? Make handsome badges bearing the letter, and have them worn in the meeting. Perhaps you may get pins carrying the S and let them be worn all the time. Confer the S with a little ceremony that will make it mean still more. Be sure the letter is well earned before it is bestowed. Draw up a definite set of regulations for the S, such as regular attendance for three months, with regular participation in the meetings and good work on committees or as an officer. You may add some special original work for the good of the society which the member will devise all by himself. Of course you will want as many "Standbys" as possible, but make the honor so hard to win that the Standbys will be standbys indeed.

WHAT IS MY THOUGHT LIKE?

There is an amusing game called "What is My Thought Like?" It is played in this way.

The one who is "it" goes round the room and asks each player the question, "What is my thought like?" Each one must reply instantly. One may say, "Like a stove"; another may reply, "Like a coal-scuttle," or anything that occurs to the mind; the funnier, the better.

As each reply is given it is written down. When all have replied to the question the one who is "it" again goes round the circle and asks each player why his thought is like the thing mentioned. "Why is my thought like a stove?" is asked the first played, for instance. He must give some kind of answer. He may say, for example, "Because it has more than one 'lid.'"

An African Letter for the Children

Bassai Station, French Equatorial
 Africa, March 25th, 1929.

Dear Little Readers:

I am sure your fathers and mothers have been reading to you something about the war in Africa, and we know you have been praying not only for the missionaries and their children but for your little black brothers and sisters who have never heard of Jesus.

A few weeks ago our Captain at Bozoum with several hundred black soldiers went out in the bush to find the natives who were hiding from the government. Some were hidden in caves, others were on top of the trees, while many were hiding in big rocks or deep grass. In one certain village as the captain with his soldiers entered not one person was to be found, all the houses were empty, and while the captain was resting for a few minutes before they went to battle he saw three little girls coming towards him. As they walked slowly yet bravely, they approached him with these words: "White man, we not afraid of you, we know you won't kill us, will you? But we are afraid of these black soldiers with so many big guns."

The white man assured them that the soldiers would do them no harm. Then one of the three stepped forward and said, "Our mamma is hid up there in a cave and she sent us to ask you if you will kill her if she comes back to the village." The captain said, "No, go tell your mother to come home." With happy and light hearts these three little girls ran quickly to their mother who was anxiously waiting to hear if they were safe to return to the village.

When the good news was conveyed to their mother and many others who were with her, they immediately came out from their hiding places and surrendered, saying they wanted to obey the Government and were willing to pay their taxes and live peacefully with all. So you see how these little girls who were brave enough to venture out saved a village from being burned and thousands of lives were saved. How true it is, that a little child shall lead them.

Won't you remember these little black boys and girls, and ask God to send someone to them to tell of Jesus and his power to save?

MRS. ORVILLE JOBSON.

Christian Missionary Effort Among the Jews

Questions concerning which were presented to the Home Missions Council by Dr. Israel Goldstein of New York.

"1. Is it morally right, directly or indirectly, to cause the alienation of a child's reverence and affection from the Faith of his Fathers without the written consent and approval of his parents?

"2. Is a conversion brought about under circumstances where benefits are offered, in the form of parties, outings, movies, gymnasium facilities, handicraft and sewing classes, gifts to children, benefits including medical attention and personal relief to adults, which though not stated or even intended as such do, however, serve as intrinsic considerations likely to induce a favorable response to the Christianizing influence, to be regarded as a pure and truly Christian conversion?

"3. Is it in accord with the accepted American principle, as enunciated by the great political and religious leaders of our nation, that Jew and Christian, Judaism and Christianity, side by side, have great spiritual considerations to offer for the ennoblement of American civilization?

"4. Is it respectful toward a neighboring faith to seek the conversion to Christianity of an adult who is a Jew by birth and can presumably find in the religion which is his birthright, the inspiration and guidance which are necessary for the living of the good life? If it be argued that only Jews who are without religious affiliation are ministered to, may it not be questioned whether their status is investigated with care and accuracy by missionary workers who are eager to show results, and whether the nature of the Jewish sentiment is not too complicated for simple formulation?

"5. Is there not a sufficient area for Christian missionary endeavor, among those who are born into the Christian Faith but have wandered away, to reclaim them who are the lost sheep of Christianity, just as it is a challenge to the Synagogue to reclaim the lost sheep who have wandered from its fold? Is it not fair to expect that in the case of the Church and the Synagogue, respectively, each should first attempt to exhaust the possibilities of reclamation in its own field before seeking to draw recruits from the other's field?

"These questions may seem blunt, but believe me I should not take the liberty of putting it that way if I would not feel that the relationship between the intelligent and well meaning Christians and Jews has reached a stage of mutual confidence, where frankness is warranted, nay necessary. The high-minded Christians with whom I speak want to know how Jews really feel about matters of this kind and insist that if there are grievances they should be honestly expressed. The questions which I have proposed are questions which express not only my personal reaction, but that of many, many representatives of my people.

"I hope you will pardon one personal note. As a former President of the Board of Jewish Ministers in the greatest American metropolis, I had the opportunity to observe how Jew and Christian, maintaining the utmost respect for one another's faith, could work together for the realization of civic and humanitarian ideals which they cherished in common.

"As the Rabbi of one of the oldest Jewish Congregations in America, I know from a study of its history and the history of the Jewish community generally during the 103 years of my Congregation's existence, that the Jews who rendered the most valuable services to their city and country were generally those who were most loyal to Judaism.

"As the President of Young Judea, which is the largest organization of the Jewish Youth in this country, I know that loyalty to the Jewish Race and Religion is motivating Jewish boys and girls to a high caliber of ethical conduct and American patriotism, such as the motivation of another religion might conceivably equal but never surpass.

"And as a member of the National Conference of Jews and Christians, which is interested in cementing inter-religious relations of goodwill and understanding, and has at a meeting of its Executive Committee on June 4, 1928, adopted unanimously a resolution disapproving of Christian propaganda among Jewish children, I can assure you that no single act on the part of our Christian brothers would so surely tend to cement mutual goodwill and understanding between them and the Jews of this country, as their decision to stop the unsolicited proselytizing of the Jews.

"That this matter will receive the attention of your meeting is my hope and plea.

"To my knowledge this is the first time that a Jew has appeared before a Christian body of this kind to make such a plea. For this privilege, I am deeply grateful."

The Final Reply of the Home Missions Council

"We desire to assure Dr. Goldstein of our hearty co-operation in the cultivating and propagating of goodwill, civic righteousness, social service and national loyalty between Jews and Christians everywhere.

"We wish also to say to him that when little children from Jewish families come to our churches, Sunday schools and our neighboring houses, we believe it is desirable that they should come with the consent and approval of their parents. And furthermore, we do not believe in the conversion of men and women to Christianity by bribes or by bait.

"We are grateful for the spiritual contributions to the ennoblement of our American civilization by every faith and are in perfect sympathy with the American principle of giving the largest possible liberty to all faiths in contributing to our American life.

"In accordance with this American principle, therefore, we insist that every group of people has the right to propagate their faith. In accordance with this principle we affirm that the gospel of Jesus Christ is a gospel for the whole world. At the very heart of it is the missionary command of Christ—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This gospel is a way to salvation and a way of life for the individual and for the nation. Not to go, therefore, to all people would be a direct violation of this central command of our religion. Not to go to any group of people would be a discrimination against that group from the Christian point of view.

"The Home Missions Council representing 38 boards of Home Missions of the United States and Canada must insist on not only the right but the duty to present the gospel of Christ in all of its fullness and the service of Christ in all of its implications to every man and woman within the bounds of this Continent, without regard to color, creed or condition. To do less than this would be false to our faith and unfair to our fellowmen."

(Dr. G. W. Hadaway, Executive of the Methodist Protestant Missionary Society, after publishing the above Questions and Reply in his department of their church paper, remarked, "We say so too." And so do we! Christ gave his followers no authority to make any agreement with any other religious system. Our Lord shares honors with no one, not even Moses. He is imperialistic absolutely. "There is none other name given under heaven whereby men must be saved.")

THE INDIAN ON THE NICKEL

Few people know that the representation of an Indian on the "buffalo nickel" is a likeness of a real person, living now. Still fewer know that he is an active member of the Methodist-Episcopal church. He is fifty-five years old, John Two-Guns White-Calf by name, whose father, White-Calf, was a recognized chief and a leader in the Black-foot tribe, ruling the whole northern part of Montana. Chief White-Calf once captured two guns from another tribe, and "Two Guns" was thereafter prefixed to his title, which he, in turn gave to his son. Since White-Calf's time the Blackfeet have had no wars, and John Two-Guns has never engaged in warfare. Like most Indians, John Two Guns worshipped the Great Spirit manifested by the sun. Not until he was fifty did the Christian church succeed in gaining him as a member. On Easter Sunday, 1923, he was baptized and received into the church.—The Missionary Review of the World.

communion is the better attended and we are wondering how to accommodate the crowd next October. Our Rally Day, Children's Day and Christmas services more than fill the house and folks appreciate the efforts put forth. The pastor has held the revival meetings here each year and quite a few additions have been had each time. It is also our custom to hold services during Easter week. These were very well attended the past Easter week. We use the stereopticon during part of the Passion week services giving the story of the Life of Christ along with the meditational service of the evening. The people of the community seem to enjoy this arrangement very much.

Just recently we completed some work of improvement around the church premises. We placed a concrete wall around the lot, some six hundred feet of wall, and a nice lawn fence on top of the wall. Along with this we gave the whole place a real cleaning and straightening up. The pastor lost several gallons of ministerial perspiration on the job, but it was worth it. The men and women responded nicely in this work. The men did the work and the ladies saw that they were fed. And when the job was finished, we had an improvement worth at the least estimate $1,000, and there was not one cent owing on it. A mind to give and a mind to work is what put it across. And now we are looking for other worlds to conquer, that is, we are facing other improvements that we must make. In this work I dare not forget giving special mention to our good Brother, Elder Wm. Spiggle. Brother Spiggle is an inspiration to the pastor for better service, and in the improvements mentioned he was the inspiration for all of us. He and his good wife and son, with their time and substance, encouraged us so that we just couldn't help making the thing go. Brother Spiggle is

MULVANE, KANSAS

This is a church that many of our people know very little about. It is located about twenty miles south of Wichita and not far from the Oklahoma line. The church is about four miles in the country from Mulvane and its membership is made up of rural people. I was surprised to find such a fine group. The membership is not large, but are interested in the church and are maintaining a creditable work. They have a fine parsonage and about five acres of land, so that the pastor can raise a good garden and do much to cut down expense.

Brother Claude Landis is the pastor and has done good work. I found him busy raising chickens and farming the ground on the side and a mighty willing helper in my work.

The people were pleasant to work with, but the old story of the West in BANK FAILURES had hit some of the strongest financial helpers hard and cleaned up their life savings. The church here has a future and there is no reason why the work should not grow.

The total gift was $305.00.

MAURERTOWN, VIRGINIA

For many months we have been exceedingly quiet so far as any word to the brotherhood by way of the Evangelist is concerned. It is not for lack of news that we have been quiet but simply because we have been on the everlasting move and have simply neglected to make any reports. The work at Maurertown is going along smoothly and we believe to the glory of his name. The preacher is doing what he can by way of preaching and teaching the whole Gospel. And the people have a mind to hear and also work. The auxiliaries show the mind of the folks to work also. The Sunday school, W. M. S. and S. M. M. are all alive and moving along. The attendance at preaching services and prayer meetings is real good all the time. Of course there are occasional Sundays when special events nearby pull down the attendance, but in the main the folks are loyal to church and pastor.

We have had some mountain top experiences during the months of our silence. The Easter offerings, and we have had two of them since last I wrote, have been most excellent. The communion attendance is the best I have ever observed anywhere. At our last communion service well over two hundred assembled around the tables. The fall up in years and does no more preaching, but the older folks of the brotherhood remember him and the days of his more active service in the ministry. May we preachers all grow old as gracefully as dear Brother Spiggle, and also with the desire to see the church go and grow.

Mauertown was represented by nineteen of her people at the recent conference held at Oak Hill, West Virginia. This is a haul of nearly 300 miles from here and yet the folks went. And what a conference we had! It was "good to the last drop." Folks remained for the whole conference this time as I have never seen them do before. It was encouraging to the speakers and the entertaining church. The folks at Oak Hill did themselves grand. The conference showed that progress is being made in the district and steps for more of it were taken. Here's hoping that all our churches and districts keep step with the Lord and his program. Brother Ed., E. L. MILLER.

THE 1929 OFFERING TO THE EDUCATIONAL BOARD

When the General Conference of the Brethren Church asked that the cause of Christian Education, as it finds expression in the work done at Ashland College, should be presented to all our people, in all the pulpits of the brotherhood, on or about the second Sunday in June, it was assumed that that was among the most worthy causes claiming the attention of Brethren. It was known, of course, that the church must train its own leaders, for both its pulpits and the mission fields. And in addition, it was seen that if the young people of our church who seek advanced training in institutions of learning, are to be kept, either faithful to Jesus Christ or the church, they must receive that training in an atmosphere in which the Christian religion is emphasized, —an atmosphere made so by the active participation of all faculty members in the daily religious services of the institution. Knowing that Ashland College alone, meets all these standards, the General Conference asked not only the prayers of its entire constituency in its behalf, but asked also that its work and its financial needs should be presented annually to our people, and that they should be given an opportunity to make such an offering as their Spirit-led conscience should suggest. This is the month set aside for such presentation, and for the bringing of such offerings. Thus far, gifts have been received as follows:

The Day and the Work

*To each man is given a day and his work for the day;
And once, and no more, he is given to travel this way.
And woe if he flies from the task, whatever the odds;
For the task is appointed to him on the scroll of the gods.
And so, if he falters, a chord in the music will fail.
There is waiting a work where only his hands can avail;
He may laugh to the sky, he may lie for an hour in the sun;
But he dare not go home 'til the labor appointed is done.*

*To each man is given a marble to carve for the wall;
A stone that is needed to heighten the beauty of all;
And only his soul has the magic to give it a grace;
And only his hands have the cunning to put it in place.
We are given an hour to parley and struggle with Fate,*

*Our wild hearts filled with the dream, our brains with the high debate.
It is given to look on life once, and once only to die;
One testing, and then at a sign we go out of the sky.
Yes, the task that is given to each man, no other can do;
So the errand is waiting; it has waited through ages for you.*

IT WAS FOR LOVE HE CAME

By Rev. Robert Hill, D. D.

There is a legend from the ancient times of an infidel knight who determined to test the reality of God. Going out into the field armed for combat, he cast his glove upon the ground, and looking up into the heavens cried out: "God, if there be a God, I defy thee here and now to mortal combat. If thou indeed art, put forth thy power, of which thy pretended priests make such boast." While waiting for answer to his challenge he saw a little piece of paper flutter in the air above him. It fell at his feet. He picked it up, and found written upon it, "God is love." Overcome by this response, he broke his sword, and keeling upon the fragments dedicated himself to the service of the God he had just defied. This may be only a story, but it contains a truth far more wonderful than the story itself.

1. His coming to earth was such a revelation of God's love as overwhelms the reverent heart with wonder. He, from all eternity God, supreme in the heavens, served by angel and archangel, doing his will in the army of heaven and amongst the inhabitants of the earth, surrenders the glory he had with the Father from eternity and comes down to a sinful earth, to deal in close relations with wicked and disloyal men, to have eyes and ears offended and heart distressed, and for what? That he might lift them out of their sin, and fill their hearts with love for God and man.

2. His conquests are the greatest man has ever known because they are victories of love. We read in classic story of Alexander sitting down and crying because he had conquered the world and there were no more conquests possible. Napoleon made a continent tremble at the mention of his name. Mohammed, Aquila, Saladin, and others carried war's blazing brands over great territories, and have left behind them names to make men fear. But Jesus moves in more majestic splendor, wields a more merciful sword, and brings his victims to his feet in the surrender of ineffable love. He has subdued, not inflamed, the baser passions of men. He has created a longing to save, not a thirst to destroy. He turns no man's hand against his brother, but causes every hand to be outstretched in loving service. Where man has turned the world into a shamble, he turns it into a paradise. Let us give him entrance into our hearts, and realize the days of heaven upon earth.

Tyler, Texas.

WILL RIGHT WIN?

We cannot outwit God. No smoke screen is sufficient to obscure his presence. Evil doing sometimes wins a skirmish, but victory at last is with right. The unseen forces of God will eventually beat down any man or nation that persistently goes bad. The sinner against moral and spiritual forces is insane to that extent and runs amuck. This is a moral universe with a spiritual principle. The persistent violator of the natural laws suffers spiritual deterioration as well.

There is no war between science and religion. The more we know of the laws of God in the physical world the better we ought to be in the spiritual and moral world. Man can snatch the titanic forces from God and use them, but he can never drive or leave God out of them. He is the immanent God. And never forget this—this is his universe and he is running it on schedule time, and he will win.—Floyd Poe, in The Presbyterian Magazine.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT DIVIDED ON DEATH PENALTY

It would be folly to argue for or against capital punishment now that the Lennon bill has been vetoed. Public sentiment is irreconcilably divided upon it. There is much to be said on both sides. It is to be assumed that proponents and opponents are equally sincere. Police and law enforcement officers have been generally urgent for the death penalty. In views of the prevalence and wantonness of murder in these days, many have felt the death penalty to be imperatively needed to check crime. Others are equally convinced that it would not deter murder. But whatever our personal views, the matter is settled for the present by the Governor's veto.

Michigan had capital punishment on its statute books for the first ten years of its history as a state. It is said there was not a single execution during that time. The death penalty was abolished eighty-two years ago. Numerous attempts have been made to restore it, but they have always failed.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

INDIAN CRISES AND FRIENDS

By Lucy Meacham Thruston

Now that a Friend has been appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs and another Friend Assistant Commissioner, the particular points of Friends' work among Indians are attracting attention.

It is impossible in so short a space to touch upon even the points which should be especially emphasized, but from the time Friends began preaching in England, soon after the first settlements were made in the New World, Friends manifested a definite sympathy with those people who had roamed over the lands being taken up and claimed by others. Their conditions, their spiritual and physical needs received the greatest interest.

George Fox wrote Friends in America to "go and discourse with some of the Heathen kings, desiring them to gather their Councils and People together that you may declare God's everlasting truth and his everlasting Way of Life and Salvation to them" and when Fox himself was in America he held meetings with the Indians at Shelter Island, on the eastern shore of Maryland, and in North Carolina. One of his last messages to America shortly before his death was, "Let your light shine among the Indians."

William Penn's dealings with the Indians are too well known to need mention, but Friends basic policy of friendliness and peace in their dealings with the natives was, and is, the outstanding feature of every contact.

And certainly before this in at least two great crises of Indian Affairs Friends have taken an effectual part: in the early days of the republic, when the pacification of the western Indians was one of the gravest questions Washington had to face; after the Civil War;—and now comes the crisis of 1929.

When in the early days of the new republic the capital was at Philadelphia Friends had opportunity to confer with deputations of Indians who came to the President and Congress with their grievances. They often served as intermediaries, explaining to them the justice of certain measures, helping them also to gain others. It was then that seeing the need of the Indian for spiritual and physical help the various Yearly Meetings established stations among them, "for instructing them in husbandry and useful trades; and teaching their children necessary learning that they may become acquainted with the Scriptures of truth—and become qualified to manage temporal concerns." This plan of blending religious and practical instruction was typical of Friends' endeavors among them.

Baltimore Friends in 1803 sent out to the then far west of Iowa a gift of plows and axes, "implements of industry," and then at request of the chiefs, Little Turtle and Five Medals, sent out in 1804 visiting Friends to explain the use of the gifts. Gerard Hopkins, George Ellicott and Philip Dennis starting in February made the long journey by horseback over unknown ways, and when at last they held council with the chieftains and their people told them, "it is out of the earth that food and clothing come. We are sure, brothers, that with little labor and attention you may raise much more corn and other grain than will be necessary for yourselves, your women and your children—we are fully convinced that if you will adopt our mode of cultivating the earth and of raising useful animals that you will find it to be a mode of living."

Again when Grant was president Friends helped to unravel the tangle of Indian affairs. It had become clear that war policy was not successful in dealing with them, the Peace Policy of Penn and of Friends generally was known, Grant determined to try it. In 1869 Friends were approached, "appreciating fully the friendship and interest your Society has ever maintained in their behalf the president directs me to request you will send him a list of names, members of your Society, who your Society will endorse as suitable persons for Indian agents." Also friends were promised aid and upholding by the government in all they should do "for the education, improvement and Christianizing of the Indians."

This open door was taken advantage of, valuable work was done, but the Hays' administration was not so friendly; Friends work concentrated mostly in Oklahoma and Alaska.

"In the picturesque imagery of Indian oratory," comments a writer on the subject, "repeated around many a council fire, the long line of Quaker apostles to the Indians have been bright links in the covenant chain of friendship that has bound Friends and the Indians together, a chain that will never rust nor break, but will remain bright and strong as long as the sun shines in heaven."

Now, in these questions of unfair land allotments, unjust handling of timber and oil, zinc and iron Indian properties, of poor schools, bad health conditions, Friends represented by two outstanding Friends and a President of Quaker upbringing, hope to help.—Methodist Protestant.

This is true, whatever else be false—that following Christ is an adventure, and it means that we must take up a cross and bear it. Much as we may admire modern life, with many of the ideals of this indulgent age there can be no compromise, if we are to be followers of the Master. What fills me with deep disquiet about our Christianity today, both liberal and orthodox, is that it is so harmless. It is so tame, so timid, so tepid—a kind of glorified lollipop. Even if we apply it to social questions, as we talk so much of doing, there will be little result unless it has more power in it than it has now.—Joseph Fort Newton.

and the big event will be a visit to the Lummi Indian tribe to watch the ceremonies incident to the installation of a new Chief. This will be the first event of the kind here to be witnessed by white men.

ON to Spokane

Tomorrow afternoon we shall leave for Seattle to visit a sister, and then head for Spokane to attend our own Brethren Conference which will be held in the church pastored by Brother Broad. The new President of the Washington State Union of Christian Endeavor, Mr. Arend, is from Spokane and speaks very highly of Brother Broad and his work.

"A MILE AND A BITTOCK"

By Frank J. Scribner

Last summer when I was in Scotland I learned a new expression. We did a great deal of walking there, and I wish I could tell you what a beautiful country it is to talk through. The great bare hills are covered with the tiny purple blossoms of the heather. Along the roadsides are foxgloves and forget-me-nots, growing wild. There is a beautiful soft mistiness in the air. You walk on from valley to valley with your mind taking pictures that you will remember always. But that isn't what I started to tell you about.

It sometimes happened that we would meet another traveler and would ask him how far we still had to walk to the next village.

And he would answer, perhaps, "About four miles."

And then we would walk on and on at a pretty good rate, and when it seemed we were almost there we would meet another traveler and ask him the same question.

He would say, "Oh, about two miles."

We knew very well that we had walked more than two miles since last we asked the distance, and before we reached the village we knew very well that we had walked more than four miles. And when we were talking with some people whom we met in the evening we spoke about the distances and our continual surprise at the miles that were given us. One of our new friends smiled and said, "I guess those must have been Scotch miles."

"Why, what is a Scotch mile?" we asked. And our friend said, "A Scotch mile is a mile and a bittock."

That is quite an expression, "A mile and a bittock." A mile, that is, and a little bit more. That's worth thinking over. That bittock, that little bit more that the Scotchman adds to his mile, fits so well to so many things. There are people who know how to add that bittock.

When I was a boy I lived in a country where blueberries grew, and we boys would sometimes pick berries and sell them to earn a little money. There was one friend of mine who made a special business of it. Every day throughout the season he went off to the hills picking, and then he peddled his berries from house to house. Now this is what I heard one lady say. "So-and-so gives you what you pay for, all right. When you buy a quart, you get a quart. But he is very, very careful not to give you one little bit more."

I suppose that was fair enough. Perhaps it was good business. But somehow you couldn't help feeling a little more friendly toward the boy who gave a quart and a bittock. It wasn't just that you wanted more berries for your money. It was the spirit of the boy you were buying them from.

I've seen a good many different people practice music lessons. Sometimes I've seen a boy practice this way. He knows he must play an hour; and he is going to, just an hour. He has one eye on his music and one eye on the clock. He sighs now and then that the clock seems to be going so slowly. When the hour is up it makes no difference if he is in the very middle of a measure. He drops it quickly and is away from the piano before the clock has struck the second note of the hour. He has done his day's practicing all right, but he has been very careful not to do any more.

Some people work at their jobs as if to say, "You pay me for so much of my time. You will get it, all right, and that is all you will get." Other people are willing to do their work and a bittock. Some people are not worth much all the last hour of the day. They are busy listening for the whistle to blow and they can't give more than half their attention to their work. I saw a funny picture once of two men hauling a third man up the side of a great unfinished building. They had him nearly up to the staging where they were working when the whistle blew. And one of them was saying to the other, "Five o'clock, Bill. Too bad we have to drop him." That is exaggerated, but there are people who seem to have just that feeling about their work. But the man who is willing to do his work and a bittock is the man in line for the better job.

I don't know but that it is just that extra bittock, or at least not being afraid of an extra bittock, which makes the difference between a life that is, oh, well enough; and a life that is full of joy and satisfaction. Yes, full—and a bittock.—The Portion for Children.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ON TO SHIPSEWANA!

The dates for the Summer's activities to begin at Shipshewana draw near. I am keenly interested in this movement to build up a center of Brethren activities. There are many reasons why we should support such a work. Perhaps it may best be summed up in saying that large and influential denominations have found just such church activities as we are trying to promote at Shipshewana invaluable. Look for a moment at the opportunities afforded this coming month.

First, there is the Young People's Training Camp. Under competent leadership and the wise and skilled instruction which is provided this Camp prepares our future church leaders. Opening date July 7.

Second, there follows the Bible Conference week. I have been asked to announce my work for the week. At the Ministers' Hour in the morning I propose to build up a profitable week's work around the theme: What shall I preach and Why? It will be my aim to build sermons in a practical demonstration and to suggest materials for a year's successful preaching. At the Bible hour I plan a study of the Epistles to the Hebrews. This is one of the most wonderful of the New Testament Books and an intensely interesting one for popular study. Bring your New Testament.

Third, there is always at Shipshewana an evening service of worship and sermon. I have not been authorized to make any announcement here. I have heard indirectly that the evening preacher for the week will be Dr. W. S. Bell. That should be enough to assure a treat for every one who attends. Dr. Bell is a splendid preacher, one who knows the message of the Lord for a dying and lost world, and a loyal and sincere "booster" for all Brethren interests.

The date for the Bible Conference is Sunday, July 14 to Sunday July 21. All who can at all do so should plan to attend part or all of this week's Bible conference. Ministers will be able to render a more acceptable service to their people for having been present and studied and thought for a week together.

I can not close without urging upon our whole church in the east to send representative young people to the Training Camp. Help them financially to come. It will put loyalty and pep into the young people's devotion of your Sunday school.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

TALLMAN-WILSON—On June 16, occurred the marriage of two of our finest young people, both teachers in our Sunday school, and faithful members of the Laanark church. The happy event took place at the parsonage, the writer officiating. Nancy Tallman is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Tallman, also active members of our church. Miss Geneva Wilson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Wilson, and has been from girlhood one of our own. The entire church wishes them joy.

IN THE SHADOW

MRS. MOLLIE SHAVER

On May first last the people of Mauretown and vicinity were terribly shocked to learn of the sudden death of one of the finest women in all this region. Sister Mollie Shaver, as she was known to all the members of the church here and hosts of others besides, was the daughter of Elder E. B. Shaver and wife. She was a church woman by birth, rearing and choice. She loved the church of her choice and gave of herself unstintingly to its service. The daughter of a minister she became the wife of a physician, a deacon in the church here at Mauretown, our good Brother Dr. D. L. Shaver. So from more than one angle Sister Shaver learned to serve and sacrifice for others. One can hardly imagine the pall of gloom that overshadowed the community here when the sad news of Sister Mollie's departure became known. She was not very strong physically for some time, but complained of her final illness for only one day. And when examination was made an operation was deemed immediately necessary. The good sister never recovered from the effects of the anesthetic.

Sister Shaver leaves to mourn her early departure two sons, Paul of Detroit, and Duke who lives in the old home-stead, and her husband mentioned above. There are also four grandchildren and two brothers of the immediate family. But what a host of friends and other relatives meet and miss the smiling face of one who was always interested in the welfare of all in the church and community! Personally I can say that the pastor of the church has lost a friend who understood the work of the church and problems of a pastor, for she lived in the home of a ministering pastor for over forty years. She sleeps on the hillside overlooking the church to which she in many ways bore the relation of mother. May God help us who remain to profit by her Godly example and life of genuine service. To the loved ones hundreds, yes thousands of folks in the brotherhood extend their deepest sympathy. By her pastor,

E. L. MILLER.

ROWLAND—Dr. Samuel Joy Rowland, son of Brother Chris Rowland of Sunnyside, died at his Yakima home on May 22nd, 1929. Brother Rowland came with his father from Laanark, Illinois about thirty years ago. After graduating from the Illinois Medical School he began his practice in Yakima where he since lived. He was a member of the Sunnyside church, having united here in 1916. He was a veteran of the world war. In his going he leaves his companion and four children. His father, one brother and two sisters, all of Sunnyside, also share with these their great loss. May our God, who knows how to comfort, sustain them in their hours of sorrow. Funeral services conducted in Yakima by Drs. Ferry and Hogan and in Sunnyside by the writer.

C. C. GRISBO.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Offers to young men wishing to prepare for the ministry better opportunities than ever for study. The work of the Seminary is planned to prepare you for service in the pastorate, or the mission field. It is open also to young women who may have missionary work in view, or who may wish to do some other form of Christian work in the church.

XVI. A LOST ART

By Dr. R. R. Teeter, Business Manager of our Publishing House

Nearly two generations ago a noted orator, the father of the American Lyceum, became famous with his lecture "The Lost Arts," in which he told of the accomplishments and achievements of the ancient civilizations of Egypt and Babylon which seemed to have been lost to later civilizations. This had to do with material things in which I am not interested particularly at the present time.

But there is one art of a spiritual nature that I fear has become lost to too many Christian people, and that is—

The Art of Appreciation

Taking one view of the matter, it might be said with a more or less degree of truthfulness that this art has never been discovered or fully developed, and that one can not lose what one never had. But we believe the early Christians had this art, or grace, if you want to call it that and it was considered one of the virtues of the Christian life.

When some of the disciples of John brought to him the report of the many disciples Jesus was making and baptizing, his reply was, "This my joy therefore is full. He must increase, but I must decrease." This was genuine appreciation. When the Jerusalem church heard how the Gentiles were receiving the Word and sent Barnabas to Antioch to investigate the matter we are told that "when he had seen the grace of God he was glad." He appreciated the work of another.

In writing to the Philippians Paul admonished them with the words, "In lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself."

The writer has been an active worker in the Brethren church for thirty-nine years and has been a reader of its publications from the days of "The Progressive Christian" to the present, and it is his conviction that altogether too many of us do not appreciate the work of others. We do not appreciate the work of those whose lives are devoted to the College; we do not appreciate the burdens and the work of our missionary boards, our Board of Benevolences, etc.; we do not appreciate the work and hard tasks of our editors, or of our missionaries on the field; we do not appreciate the personal achievements of our brothers in the ministry. Too many of us have drawn a circle around our own feet and can see little good beyond that circle. This is not meant as a complaint, for we will claim no more personal virtue than we are willing to grant to others, but it is a plea for the recovery or the rediscovery of the lost art of appreciation. But if we feel that it has not been lost because we never had it, then let us in deepest humility seek to develop it as a personal grace.

THE Spokane Conference

This is being written in Spokane, Washington, where the Northwest Conference of Brethren churches is convened. The interest and attendance is remarkable considering that we have only three churches in this district and that the Spokane church is separated by 200 miles from the other two at Sunnyside and Harrah. In spite of this the attendance at times is better than in some of the large Eastern Districts. It has been a genuine pleasure to meet again the three pastors of the Northwest churches, Brethren Broad, Grisso and Kinzie. Brother and Sister Kinzie arrived in Washington very recently to take charge of the Harrah congregation, and already they have fallen in love with the people and the country. Many old friends from Sunnyside, our former home, are here. Also a number of former Bible Institute students are attending the conference sessions.

CRYING "Peace" when there is No Peace

Senator Borah, foremost among the workers for world peace, and who is also chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, recently reviewed the peace efforts during the last ten years. His report is not encouraging. He declares that the nations, while talking of disarmament and peace, while professing to desire peace, have during the last ten years fastened upon the world the heaviest military establishments in all of human history!

"There are more men under arms at the present time," the Senator reports, "than at the beginning of the World War . . . The Versailles Treaty was a continuation of the war. It has been waged just as it was waged prior to November 11th, 1918, but waged in a way scarcely less deadly in its effects upon millions of human beings."

Furthermore, "there has not been a conference in Europe during these ten years since the World War but has been rendered practically ineffective by reason of the war spirit."

These are disagreeable facts, but we cannot make them better by closing our eyes to them ostrich-fashion. The trouble with the world is not a lack of proper organization, but rather a lack of the Son of God who alone can bring peace to the world. "There is no peace, saith Jehovah, to the wicked" (Isa. 48:22), and men are "wicked" who reject Jesus Christ.

THE "spirit" of Human Religion

During the late war, a prominent government official in Constantinople described the situation there as follows:

"The Mohammedans here are praying that as many Christians may be killed as rams are sacrificed at the Feast; and the 'Christians' are praying that as many Mohammedans may be killed as Easter eggs are broken at Easter; while the Jews are praying that both of these prayers may be answered and answered quickly."

Of course, the "Christians" referred to are not Christians at all. The true Christian has the spirit of the Son of God who came not to destroy human life but to save it.

FUEL for the Next War

In the memoirs of the late Marshall Foch, he tells the story of his meeting with the German representatives to arrange for an armistice. The Germans came, he says, "weary, tired out, like hunted animals." The leader started to explain the pitiable situation of his country and to plead for some concessions. The French Marshall stopped him abruptly and said harshly, "I refuse everything."

Judged on the principle of an "Eye for an eye," doubtless, Foch was well within his rights in treating severely these representatives of a defeated nation. But his harsh word will only make the next war more terrible, when it comes. Germany will never forget the humiliation of her envoys. Just a little kindness at that bitter meeting would have done more to protect France from future invasions than all her swollen armies and political intrigue.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up strife" (Prov. 15:1).

Evangelical Preaching

One of the aspects of Popular Christianity is the fading out of Christian speech and usage of such words as "the unsaved," "sinners," "the lost," "the soul." We find that the first teachers and preachers of Christianity constantly employed these words. When awakened sinners called out, "What shall I do to be saved?" they knew how to answer them.

If we are to be faithful witnesses to Jesus Christ and his gospel, there are three great truths which must be taught and witnessed to by preacher and laymen alike.

The first of these is the fact of sin. There is no sense in offering men Christianity without telling them why we offer it, and why we and they need it. Christianity is not a religion of ideals and sentiments and attitudes toward life, and education of our moral nature. It is a religion of redemption from sin and its eternal penalty and its crimson guilt and its deep corruption. The church must declare to men their true condition, that their minds are revolted from God, that sin has invaded their nature, involving both corruption and guilt, from which they can be delivered only through the infinite sacrifice of God in Jesus Christ.

The second fact is the Saviorship of Christ. It is possible, of course, to offer Christ to men upon lesser terms than he is offered in the gospel. And many may accept that deleted offer of a diluted salvation. Much of the Laodicean indifference of the great mass of church members to the salvation of the world is due to the fact that many of them have come into the church without conviction of sin or a real sense of their need of Christ as a Savior. Hence the fading of redemptive witness, and the vast efforts now being made to express the greatness of Christianity in some other way than by the glory of salvation.

Much of the blame for this deplorable condition is to be laid at the door of the ministers, because they have neglected to preach repentance. Repentance is a divine grace, and the preaching and teaching of repentance has ever been the means through which that grace has been bestowed. How the Bible rings with the call for repentance, Old Testament and New Testament! And how feeble the cry for repentance is within the Christian church today!

The third fact which must be emphasized in all true evangelical witness to Christ is the fact of redeeming love. We all like to preach about the love of God, and the Christian minister, above all others, has the liberty to declare God's love at the utmost, love in its noblest expression. But that love must be declared in the terms of the New Testament. There never was a time in the history if Christianity when men talked and wrote so much about the love of God, and never a time when they related it so little to the New Testament expression and illustration of that love. Whenever the New Testament speaks of the love of God, that is what it means: love which redeems from sin. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." "Herein is love, that God sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." We have no right to preach God's love on any other terms.—Clarence E. McCartney, in Herald and Presbyter.

LIGHT WINES AND HEAVY DRUNKENNESS

Although many returning travellers tell the newspapers that "they travelled all over France and never saw a drunken Frenchman," the Paris police have no difficulty in locating public drunks, according to latest official statistics.

One has to be thoroughly drunk to be arrested in Paris, yet arrests for drunkenness there are three times as great per ten thousand of population as in New York, the wettest of American cities. In Paris the arrests for drunkenness are fifty per ten thousand, while in New York they are fifteen per ten thousand. In Paris the police are inclined to leniency in making such arrests, whereas in New York they are inclined to arrest any one seen drunk.

In London the convictions for drunkenness, not arrests, have ranged from forty-eight to fifty per ten thousand in the past few years. In Edinburgh the arrests for drunkenness are startling. They have recently gone as high as one hundred and fifty-three per ten thousand, while the highest mark in New York's arrests for drunkenness since prohibition has been a fraction more than eighteen per ten thousand in 1924.

These figures, we trust, will put an end to the declaration that there is no drunkenness in wine-drinking, whiskey-guzzling Europe.—Selected.

Our Mental Dependents

No, it is not the crazy people we have in mind, but the lazy people. It would be foolish to criticize the mentally weak, but there is reason aplenty and perfect propriety in criticising the mentally indolent, the people who do not like to use their minds, who are indispensed to do any downright thinking. That is the weakness supreme of our age. We cannot imagine affliction to which men are subject that is quite so widespread as mental inertia. Thinking is hard work, it requires discipline and self-exertion and going against the current, and few men will voluntarily give themselves to such strenuous living. The masses seek the line of least resistance; they go with the crowd; they take their opinions and decisions ready-made. They are very largely dependent for their mental attitudes and views of things on the thinking of a few people. That is why they are so fickle, so easily swayed, so easily misled. That is why so many unreasonable and foolish philosophies and empty religious theories find such ready acceptance.

People have never been disposed overmuch to thinking, and now influences have greatly multiplied against any real effort in that direction. There have developed so many ways of getting information and opinions that do not require any concentrated thinking that there has been built up a strong aversion to mental labor and an impatience with this rather irksome process of acquiring knowledge. A certain convention speaker was seeking to explain to his audience why so many people do not read the Bible. "It is because of the stilted, unnatural language," he said. "Give the people a translation that is modern, that uses the language of the average man of today and they will find the Bible more interesting and will give more time to reading it. For this same reason," he said, "people do not read Shakespeare like they used to. It employs an archaic language." But his argument was not very convincing. The chances are that he hit upon a minor point. With regard to Shakespeare, the average person never did read him very much except as a school requirement, and the extent to which this type of reading is being neglected is indicative of the increased tendency to shun mental effort. Dr. L. L. Garber, head of the Department of English Literature in Ashland College, says people do not read Shakespeare because they do not like to think, or have lost the art of thinking because of not being required to think by reason of the present day popular educational agencies that make thinking unnecessary. And there is more truth in his reasoning than in that of the convention speaker referred to. It requires more effort to read Shakespeare, and it requires more effort to read the Bible intelligently than the average person wishes often to spend. That at least is one reason why so little time is spent on it. And that is also one reason for the popularity of the pictured sermon and the illustrated Bible lecture. They afford an easy, as well as entertaining, way of gaining knowledge.

Observe how people spend their leisure time and you will discover how prone they are to avoid real mental labor. According to statistics cited by J. E. McDade, Assistant Superintendent of Chicago Public Schools, "35,000,000 people daily spend their leisure sitting glancing over newspapers; 30,000,000 sit half dozing and half listening over radios; 20,000,000 sit staring out of automobiles; 15,000,000 sit snoozing at phonographs; 5,000,000 sit gossiping at games; 3,500,000 sit gazing at sex and crime movies; 1,000,000 sit gaping at pish-posh theaters, re-hash concerts and propaganda lectures; 1,000,000 loll with pictorial sex-magazines or 'journals of controversy'; less than one-tenth utilize their leisure." There are agencies on every hand that tend to miseducate the people, lead them away from habits of mental activity, and cause them to depend on others for the thoughts they think and the knowledge they receive, without subjecting it to a moment's scrutiny.

Such extreme credulity is no virtue, but is an indication of mental sluggishness or indolence and is conducive to the spread of all sorts of vagaries and religious fads. When people will not investigate, nor seek to verify the truth or falsity of new doctrines and isms that are being foisted upon them, they have no protection against error. It is no credit to a person to be duped when he might avoid it by a little examination and thinking on his own part. Faith is a most commendable virtue, but anything that is worthy of our faith can stand investigation. The Gospel of Christ is the greatest challenge to faith in all the world, but it is also ready to submit to the severest testing. He who goes forth to proclaim the Gospel has a right to call upon men to believe, but at the same time those who hear have a right to insist that the message thus proclaimed as the message of God shall stand the test of inquiring minds. Paul commended his converts at Berea as being "more noble than those of Thessalonica" not merely because they received the word which he preached "with all readiness of mind," but also because they were in the habit of checking up on him, "examining the scriptures daily whether these things were so." He asked no one for a blind, unquestioning faith in him and his message. He was ready always for the closest examination, and by reasoning with his hearers and not for them he sought to convince them of the trustworthiness of the gospel which he preached. And no religious teacher or preacher today has a right to expect to get his message accepted on any easier terms, nor will he wish it, if he is both wise and genuine. The convert who has a mind of his own and shows a disposition to use it will make a more stable and dependable Christian disciple than will he who yields without examining the steps he is called upon to take. The Gospel calls for faith, but not for mental dependency.

The Rock of My Refuge

We need occasionally to refresh our minds concerning some of the great majestic figures descriptive of the power and grace of God our Savior. We are inclined to forget how great is the strength of God, how absolute and ever-dependable is his keeping power. And in the hour of temptation and weakness, nothing is more important than that we should be mindful of, and have perfect confidence in, the One to whom we may turn for succor.

One of the most inspiring metaphors relating to the security to be found in Christ and in the Father of our Lord is that which represents him as a rock. Such portrayal of strength and safety fills the soul with confidence and trust that is abundantly satisfying and makes him very near and precious to our souls. It was this patient and trustful attitude that characterized the psalmist when he sang, "The Lord is my defense, and my God is the rock of my refuge" (Psalm 94:22). No fear need overtake them who put their trust in Jehovah, for to every heart may be that assurance that enabled the psalmist to say, "For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion; in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock" (Psalm 27:5). And we think it was that divine stability that Jesus had in mind when he said to Peter and the other disciples, "Upon this rock (the confession of his Lordship) will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16:18). That absolute confidence in the almighty power of God was the fundamental pre-requisite to the building up of the church, but, given that confidence, nothing could stay its progress. And that was to be the secret of success in individual accomplishment as well, for says Paul, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me" (Phil. 4:13). It was a foretaste of the Gospel confidence which the psalmist had when he said, "Truly my soul waiteth upon God; from him cometh my salvation. He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defense; I shall not be greatly moved" (Psalm 62:1, 2).

What a glorious confidence such words portray, and yet how often are we unmindful of the strength of him who warrants such confidence! How prone we are to be absorbed in our petty interests with never a thought of God while life flows like a song, and then when the dangers and persecution threaten us we are given over to utter fear and despair. Mark Guy Pearse tells a true story which well illustrates our shrinking, fearful human nature, and also the rock-like power of God to save in the most terrifying emergency:

Away on the western coast of England there stands a steep rock that is known to everybody as the Lady's Rock. At high water it is surrounded by the sea; the waves break about it and fling themselves far up its side, though never covering it entirely. But at low water it stands upon a sandy beach, and is easily reached. It gets its name from an accident that happened years ago. One summer's day a lady had walked along the beach as far as the rock, and there sat down and began to read a book that interested her. She read on, in the pleasant quietness, forgetful of all about her, and never thinking of any danger, when she was startled by a loud shout from the cliffs. The coast-guard had seen her, and shouted across the bay. She looked up, and in a moment saw her peril. Between herself and the shore there were the curling waves and the white foam spreading over the sands. Her first look showed her nothing but certain death, for the waves were rising every moment, and as she stood hesitating, a huge breaker dashed its spray over her. Above her frowned the steep black rock, where even the fisher lads could scarcely climb to get the seabirds' eggs; there seemed to be no way of escape there. She looked across at the crowd that were gathering on the shore, and no boat could live in that tumbling sea. Then, as she stood with the waves creeping up after her like a wild beast that chased their prey, she wrung her hands in bitter agony, and burst into tears, crying, "Can I be saved? Can I be saved?"

A moment before it was nothing to her; now it was everything. Wealth, luxury, comfort, pleasure, all thoughts of these were swept away. Her only anxiety was this—Oh, to be saved. Then across from the shore came the cry of the coast-guard again:

"You must climb the rock. Your only chance is to climb the rock at once."

She looked at the rock, hanging over her with jagged sides and steep, slippery front. How could she climb it? But, as she delayed, a wave swept up and flung itself over the place where she stood, and close below her the waters surged and hissed. Then she grasped the rock desperately, and dragged herself up and hung to the face of it, tremblingly feeling for a higher foothold, and rising, little by little, until she reached a ledge from which she looked shudderingly on the waves below. The tide crept upward until again the spray flew about her.

"Climb higher!" rang from the shore this time from a hundred voices, for the tidings of her dangerous position had spread to the adjoining village. Again she gathered her strength, and hardly knowing how she crept, little by little, hanging on with bleeding fingers, dragging herself through narrow openings, pressing up steep, slippery front. How could she climb it? But, as she seized it she felt fainting on the top, beyond the reach of the waves, while excited people cried with a shout: "She's saved! Thank heaven, she's saved!"

And from the spiritual storms that sweep this life, the only place of safety is on the rock Christ Jesus. So long as we remain on the impregnable Rock of Ages there is absolutely nothing that can move us, and no evil can befall us.

---

Brother Samuel Kiehl finds the "Worship Program" as conducted by Brother Thoburn C. Lyon suggestive and inspiring. Others have indicated their appreciation of this column, among them, Prof. A. J. McClain sometime ago expressed his appreciation of Brother Lyon's studies in Ezekiel.

The faithful pastor of the church at Louisville, Ohio, with the help of some of his talented teachers conducted a successful Daily Vacation Bible School with a total enrollment of fifty. We are glad to be permitted to publish a likeness of this group of pupils and teachers this week on the Sunday school page.

The secretary of the Northwest District reports briefly the proceedings of their recent conference at Spokane, Washington, where a good attendance was had. Brother Fred V. Kinzie is the new moderator and the next conference is to be held at Harrah. A new minister in the person of Brother A. L. Moyer was ordained at the conference.

Brother L. G. Wood reports a very successful Daily Vacation Bible School in his church at Fort Scott, Kansas. A very spiritual and well attended communion service indicates somewhat of the loyalty of this group to one of the central features of the Brethren plea. Every effort possible is being made to maintain a high Sunday school attendance and outlook is brighter, according to the pastor, than at any time since he has been there.

Dr. A. D. Gnag y, the capable pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, writes of the steady and continued growth of the work at this place. Brother Gnag y seems to know how to encourage growth in the natural, normal way. Several have recently been baptized, and at a recent meeting a family of three came forward to confess Christ and they await baptism. His remark that "no field is easy" is true. Building the kingdom of righteousness is not an easy job; it cost blood, and will yet.

Brother Claud Studebaker writes that he has been well received at Pittsburgh where he recently took charge as pastor, and has found the Brethren there the same friendly, helpful type that it has been his pleasure to meet elsewhere. He found it hard to leave the good people at Leon, Iowa, where he had made himself one of them and had accomplished a splendid work under discouraging conditions. Brother and Sister Miles Taber were on the field at Leon before he left and they are fitting into the leadership there in a fine way.

The secretary of the National Board of Benevolences writes concerning a deplorable situation. They are faced with a mandate by General Conference to mete out to all superannuated ministers and their dependents on their roll a certain sum for their support, and to go to the church for an offering with which to do this, and the churches have not responded in anything like an adequate measure, and many have not made any response. What is the Board to do about it? What would you do, if you were a member of that Board? Put yourself in their stead and think it over.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his visit to Fort Scott, Kansas, but says he did not canvass the field for College Endowment because this courageously struggling group have a load already greater than they can bear. Out of the maze of bewilderment and confusion Brother L. G. Wood is leading them to a place of encouragement and hope. Brother Bell however seems to have known where to get something to make up for Fort Scott's lack, for he picked up a nice gift "on the way." It was $500.00 from Brother and Sister Millhisler of El Dorado. This $510.00 report makes the total of the Fund stand at $212,886.20.

There came to our desk a new literature book of 192 pages, called "The Creative Study of Literature," including "One Hundred and Sixty Greater Short Poems." The author and publisher is Dr. L. L. Garber, head of the Department of English in Ashland College, and is done with the collaboration of Prof. James W. Carmichael, head of the Department of English of Bowling Green State Normal College, and Prof. Melvin A. Stuckey, head of the Department of Psychology and Christian Education in Ashland College. It is a splendid guide to the study of every type of literature and those who wish to know how to get into the study of literature so that it will become inspiringly meaningful, those who wish to know how great literature is made, or grown, will find this outline study exceedingly helpful. And the greater short poems published are admirably selected from the world's greatest writers. We commend this excellent work of Dr. Garber and his collaborators to the careful attention of our students of literature.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother L. G. Wood says, "As the brotherhood is interested in a special way in this work (Fort Scott, Kansas), we earnestly solicit your prayers."

Pray for the success of the Superannuated Ministers' offering, which should have been taken in February, but concerning which only seventy-one churches have reported.

Why I am Returning to India

By E. Stanley Jones

(On Friday night, April 5, Stanley Jones sailed from New York for India. For more than a year he has campaigned for Christ in the Western world. The greatest cities of South America opened their greatest auditoriums and thronged them to hear his message. Across North America he has gone, and America, forgetting minor things, has been enthralled to hear the simple gospel story of this man. And now he is sailing, again, toward India. We Westerners thrilled by his message, but unprepared, perhaps, to follow his example, inevitably ask: "Why does he go back?" So Stanley Jones has answered that question and chosen to give his answers to Western Christendom through Christian Herald. "It is all summed up," he told the editor on the eve of sailing, "in one sentence that you will find there: 'men need a savior, but they need, more deeply, a Savior.'"—S. H. in Christian Herald. We are republishing this splendid article at the request of Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, who makes observation concerning, "Its evident, sincerity and depth of experience, together with its forceful and positive setting forth of the facts of Christianity." It is a great article written by a man who has had a great experience as a missionary and to whom Christianity is most vital. We are glad to pass it on to our readers.—Editor).

I have spent twenty-one years in India and may now be considered of age in missionary service. As was suggested of the man in the Scripture I can now speak for myself.

The glamour period of foreign missions has gone for me. If I go back, I go back not to romance but to reality. The romantic wrappings of this movement have fallen away and if I am held now I am held by the inner core of reality.

Moreover, I am now forty-five years of age. I now go over the dividing line. At this time of life I could still put my roots into the life of the United States and make what contribution I could here. An English lady, at a most upset period in India, came to Mrs. Jones and said, "I do not see why you stay here when you could get out. As the wife of an official I have to stay, but you don't. It does seem that your husband might be able to get something to do in America!" I think I could still get something to do in America!

And I realize the amazing opportunity at the home base. I have never seen youth more eager. A girl—I would call her a flapper if I did not dislike the name—walked up to me at the close of a meeting and said, "Gee, you walked all over my needs this morning. Say, you got hold of me, boy." The language was slangy, but sincere. I congratulate any one who in sincerity and self-abandon is putting himself up against the problems of youth and materialistic middle age in America. It has the feel of a real battle in it. I would gladly give my life to it.

Nevertheless, I find myself turning toward my task in the East with eagerness. And this in spite of the difficulties looming up before me in the missionary task.

One of the difficulties standing out is the attitude taken by many cultivated minds that it is religious imperialism to seek to share your faith and experience with another. Mr. Gandhi preaches that there should be no conversions in religion; Mr. Natarajan, the distinguished editor of the Indian Social Reformer, does the same. Mr. C. F. Andrews, for whose character and service I have the deepest admiration, has been addressing groups in the United States and advocating the same attitude, his suggestion being that we are to be St. Johns to the East—the man who lives his loving service, and not St. Paul the man who went as an apostle of repentance and conversion to the one way: Jesus Christ. Pratt in the Pilgrimage of Buddhism urges that there is no question of the superiority of one faith over another, that Buddhism and Christianity each has its contribution to make against materialism and they must work together to combat materialism. This seems so broad and tolerant and reasonable! But it can not be escaped that under those silken phrases you can hear the clipping of the nerve of evangelism and missions. This attitude on the part of respective Christians and non-Christians certainly makes my task of a missionary evangelist to the educated classes not less easy.

Again I know that in spite of everything I do I shall be considered a Westerner in India. And the Westerner is far from popular in the East. We may be bowed to, but if we are loved it is in spite of being Westerners—we are loved, if at all, rather grudgingly, on account of service rendered. The conflict is a real one, for the West dominates and the East resents it. It is not easy to work in that atmosphere.

When I turn to the home end of things there is this question that arises: Is the church really behind you as you go out? When I look back over the year spent here with its great crowds, sometimes as large as 7,000, churches and halls and banquet rooms crowded to overflowing, the obvious answer is, "Why yes, certainly, look at these eager throngs." I wish I were sure about it. Of some men and women I am utterly sure. Of some congregations I can unhesitatingly say, "Their Christianity will stand the strain to the obvious and immediate thing. They will not be swamped by an insular mentality and outlook, their fellowship with Christ makes them fellowship with human need everywhere."

But how wide-spread this is to be found in the soul of the Church is a question. It is a question where this can happen: A crowd of three to four thousand people crowd a hall to listen to a missionary appeal and that alone, the chairman urges the crowd to give liberally, the collection to be turned over to the local council of churches. And the applier for missions has to ask for his traveling expenses. The same thing happened not once, not twice, and sometimes he paid his own traveling expenses.

The surprising thing was not that this was done, but the facility with which it was done. No one batted an eye. It seemed the obvious and sensible thing to do. It was done so easily and without any jar that we felt that the grooves in the direction of self-interest were greased.

Then I look at the pinched condition of missions after four years of retrenchment. One layman after returning from a tour of missions said, "the situation is being starved." And this at a time when America is the most prosperous nation that ever existed. It hurts to see talented and consecrated youth ready to go back to their unfinished tasks and no funds to send them.

If the reply is made that there are thousands of pastors in the home field pinched by small salaries and churches overburdened with debt, I agree that it is a scandal. I have been deeply touched to see pastors educating their children on utterly inadequate salaries. But this condition comes not from the fact that there is not sufficient money given to support the pastors, but it is distributed between so many competing churches in the community. The obvious remedy is to close or amalgamate or trade territory so that one good strong church would supply the religious needs of the town and an able minister employed with an adequate salary. This could be done without making the supply of churches inadequate, for there is one minister to every 513 people of the United States, obviously a more than adequate number. In a small town I saw three churches looking at one another on three corners of two intersecting streets, one an M. E., another an M. E. South, and the third a Methodist Protestant. Denominationalism will keep all three open; Christianity would close two—any two.

One feels hesitancy in going on a project while not sure of the lines being held from behind. And we do not mean financial alone, but the whole moral and spiritual backing so necessary in such an enterprise as ours.

These are some of the difficulties and yet I go back with joy—why?

The first reason that stands out is that I am convinced that God called me to India and as yet he has not recalled me. When I was deciding this matter of my life work after college graduation, I received a letter from a college praysident saying, "It is the will of the faculty, the will of the student body, the will of the townspeople, and I believe the will of God that you should come and teach here in the college. Another friend wrote that it was the will of God that I should go into the work of evangelism in the United States. The Mission Board wrote saying that it was their will to send me to India. Here was a traffic jam of wills! I took the Mission Board letter into my room, spread it out before God and said, "My life is not my own. It is thine. Tell me what I must do." And very, very clearly that Inner Voice said, "It is India." I arose assured and wrote the Board that I was ready to go.

That has never been revoked. I am persuaded that inside the will of God we can not fail, outside of it we can not succeed; that one can not do his best work unless he feels that the sum total of things is backing his will, then he has a sense of divine mission in life.

That is the central reason for returning to India. The will of God for me seems to lie along this line. And if you were to tell me that I would see no converts, taste nothing of what we call "success," I would still go, for the business of life is not to "succeed" but to be faithful to the highest that one has seen. I refuse to bow my knee at the altars of the god of Success. I am drawn to bow at a Cross—the world's chief Failure—a failure seemingly, in fact the greatest moment in the life of God or man, the magnetic center of our universe.

But there are subsidiary reasons for going. I once heard Gilbert Chesterton tell his reasons for going over to Roman Catholicism. He said, "I could sit here and give a long list of reasons each sentence beginning with the phrase, 'It is the only church that—.' I can use his phrase I think to better service in saying that this missionary movement is the only movement that:—

First.—Believes in and launches out upon the idea of the worth of every human personality, apart from race, birth, color, social or economic standing. It affirms that the differences between men are largely the products of social heredity, in the social heredity being the sum total of influences, moral, spiritual, environmental, that play upon the man. It affirms that there are infinite possibilities bound up in every human life, that there are undeveloped races but no permanently inferior races. We remind ourselves that we, too, are the product of that faith in people underlying the missionary enterprise. Servius, a Roman said, "The stupidest and the ugliest slaves in the market are those from Britain"; and St. Jerome, writing in the fourth century, said, "I well remember the Scots in Gaul; they were eaters of human flesh, they had plenty of flocks and herds, but they much preferred the ham of the herdsman or a steak from the female breast as a variety." Another Roman, seeing some of these slaves in the market, said, "Angles, Angles, if they could but be Christianized they would be angels." Their faith in us has been borne out by the achievements of the centuries. There are two ways to look upon the world: one (the exploiter) says, "Stupid and ugly slaves"; the other (the Christian) says, "If they could but be Christianized they would be angels." I take the latter and identify myself with a movement that stands against all exploitation of man by man, all snobbery, all pretensions based on so-called superior class or caste or color, and stand with those forces that make for human uplift and redemption. With all its faults, the missionary movement stands for this, so I stand for it.

Second.—And carrying this forward, the missionary movement believes that man has an inherent right to stand socially, economically, politically, morally and spiritually free. This movement is as wide as the needs of the human race. If men suffer in body, hospitals and leper and blind and deaf-mute asylums are reared and the best skill and love brought to bear upon those problems. If men are pinched by hunger and cramped economic conditions, this movement sets up agricultural experimental farms, workshops, technical schools to improve the economic life of every people. If minds are darkened for want of knowledge, schools and orphan asylums of every description are set up. If society is rotting because of moral decay, then the amazing moral ideal and dynamic found in Jesus Christ is set up as the antidote. If men need to be free politically, this movement strikes at those inner chains that make possible the outer bondage and thus contribute directly and permanently to the freedom of peoples. The world was made for man as man and not for man as white or yellow or black. We therefore stretch out a hand to prostrate nations, and say, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and stand upon your feet."

If we are told that we are disturbers of nations we confess that we are. We disturb them with the joy of elevated thought, with the vision of chains broken, for actual freedom for body, mind and soul.

Third.—It is the only movement that has this idealogy plus the dynamic to put it into operation. When we turn to the non-Christian faiths to see if they can supply the moral and spiritual dynamic to lift the nations we have our deep questionings. If they could do it I should gladly say, "Go to it, my brother men, we stand with you and by you in your task." But I am deeply convinced that the non-Christian faiths can not do it. I have looked sympathetically into the soul of the non-Christian world through our Round Table Conferences, and nowhere did their faiths seem to supply either the ideas or the dynamic to lift these nations.

Every single economic, social and political evil is rooted in the old religions. You try to change things economically, socially or politically and you run straight against a religious idea or custom that balks you. You can not change things until you change the underlying idea or custom, but that involves a religious change, hence the need of a change in religion.

If the objection is made to this that the nations living under non-Christian religions are now undergoing reform without changing their religions, the answer would be that these reforms do not come inherently out of the non-Christian faiths, rather they come in spite of them, for the fact of the matter is that every single reform in the East is a reform away from the old faiths and toward the ideas that underlie the Gospel. It makes us wonder if the ideas upon which the reforms live are not from the Gospel itself? To ask this question is simply to state a fact. A Hindu put it this way: "If we give up the customs and ideas which our sacred books approve, what happens to our sacred books in this process of reform?" What happens? Their authority goes. If there has been a revival of the non-Christian faiths, "this revival has been accompanied by an inner steady decay," according to Dr. Farquhar.

But amid this welter of conflicting movements and ideas there stands one Person who is not being subjected to reform or decay. That Person is Christ. That leads me to the next point.

Fourth.—It is the only movement that presents a Person who stands unmodified amid the clamor for reform. The demand concerning Christ is not for modification, but for exemplification. The criticisms of men are directed not toward the fact that we are like Christ, but unlike him. But he is more than not being modified. He is forcing modification upon everything by the sheer influence of his moral and spiritual dignity. He is changing the psychological atmosphere by the sheer shining of his mind into questions and situations. His ideas and spirit are seeping down into the souls of men, changing their mentality and outlook, though they are hardly conscious that they are living upon Christian thought. Again and again in our Round Table Conferences a Hindu would say, "Well, I believe the best way to live is to do unto others as you would that men should do to you," unconscious that they were living upon a Christian ideal.

One prominent Hindu said: "Hinduism to me is this: 'He hath showed thee O man what is good and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy

Effective Praying

By Mabel Crawford

(Sermon preached by a member of the Ashland College Girls' Gospel Team in the Ashland Church on March 17, 1929)

III. Effective Praying

The third question that arises is, "How can I pray so that my prayer will be heard?" We will consider only a few of the outstanding passages here also.

This promise was given to us by our Lord in John 14:14.—"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

What does it mean to ask in the name of the Lord? It does not mean to say a few jumbled sentences as a prayer, and then almost as an after thought, to say, in the name of Jesus. One of my professors at the Bible Institute once gave us this illustration. He likened Heaven to a great bank, God the Father to the Banker, Jesus Christ to the Soul Depositor, and the Christian to a needy man. He had us suppose there was a needy man and a very wealthy man in a town. The needy man was of good character but through circumstances beyond his control had been brought to dire need. The wealthy man realizing his worth and condition, presented to him a blank signed check and said, "Fill this check for the amount of your need, present it to my bank, and your need will be filled without any questions." That he said, was what Jesus Christ had done. When he gave to us the gift of salvation he also gave to us a blank signed check. When we fill in the check signed with his name and present it to the Banker, the limitless resources of all heaven are open to us if we need them. I believe this teaches very aptly the real meaning of praying in the name of Jesus.

Psalms 145:18—"The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth." What does it mean to call upon the Lord in "sincerity and truth?" It means simply this—to ask the Lord for that which you earnestly desire and to trust explicitly that you shall have that for which you've asked. At one time there lived up in the mountains an elderly lady. Between her and the Valley, where there was a little Church, there stood a large mountain which it was necessary to go around to reach the Valley below. Because the way was long and her body was crippled by age and disease she very seldom went down into the Valley. One day as she read her Bible she came across the words to the disciples, that if they had faith as a grain of mustard seed, they could remove mountains. "Why," she said, "that is just what I need," so as she went to bed that evening she prayed that the Mountain would be taken away so that she could go down to the Valley to Church. Upon awakening she immediately looked out. The Mountain was still there. "Well," she said, "I didn't expect it to be gone anyway." She was not praying in sincerity and truth.

The apostle Paul, in Philippians 4:6 gives us this injunction. "Be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Praise is an essential part of true prayer life. Our Lord must get awfully tired of our constant asking with never a thought of thanks. How would you who are parents and are constantly sacrificing for your children feel if they never by a word or deed made you feel that they appreciated what you did? Wouldn't it rather take the joy out of giving? I sometimes wonder if Our Father doesn't sometimes feel the same way.

The Lord has given us one promise in Matthew 18:19 which is often quoted and many times without a thought of its true significance. "But if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." The word translated agree is in the original Greek "Symphoneo" from which we get our word "symphony." There are two things fundamentally necessary to a musical symphony." First, the chords in the symphony must be struck by a master hand, a hand which knows the utmost possibility hidden within each key. It must know just when and how long to touch each key to bring forth the needed tones. So it is with our prayer lives. The master hand of our Lord must touch the keys of our life in order to bring out just the expressions and prayers which it is his will to have us utter.

Second, the keys of the instrument must all be in tune with the whole instrument and with each other. If one key is out of tune the entire symphony is spoiled. Here the Lord seeks to teach one of his greatest truths. We as Church Members so often forget when we come together for prayer that every member of the group must be in complete harmony with God and so in fellowship with every other member. If these two qualifications are not the reasons for our agreement on a thing, then we have no right to claim the promise.

IV. Its Results

Surely no Christian doubts the fact that prayer brings results. I think just three illustrations will show that prayer does bring results just as surely today as in past centuries.

After the Ascension of Our Lord the Christian Church was subject to many and various persecutions. At one time the Apostle Peter was thrown into prison. In the Village nearby a small group of Christians came together to pray for his deliverance. In the dark hours of that night the Angel of the Lord visited that prison; he struck off Peter's bonds; he opened the prison doors, and led him out to safety. I wonder if you could convince Peter or that little group of Christians that prayer had not brought results?

No doubt many of you readers know the story of George Muller. This great man of God, seeing the needs of English orphans, determined to show the world that a great business enterprise could be carried on by prayer alone.

A house accommodating thirty orphans was rented. His helpers were bound to secrecy and no needs were ever mentioned outside their prayer room. The work grew and with its growth God supplid funds. Within a few years the work had increased from a little rented building accommodating thirty children to five large complete buildings free of debt and accommodating twenty-one hundred children. During his life more than seven million dollars passed through his hands for orphanage work and for foreign missions. I wonder if you could convince George Muller or the orphans benefited by him that prayer does not bring results?

We who are Brethren need not go outside our own denomination for one of the greatest answers to prayer in the annals of history. You all know the story of our African Mission work. You know how Brother and Sister Gribble came home from their first work in Africa, desiring to interest the Brethren Church in French Equatorial Africa. At length the first party set sail, with little encouragement from the folks here at home. You know of the tedious days of travel, of the long trip up the Congo during which time two of the party were carried off to lonely graves in the wilderness. You know the long years of waiting for entrance, while prayer was continually made both there and here at home; of the refusals time and again as Brother Gribble visited the Officials. Then you know of the permission granted to go to Bozoum. I wonder if it was merely chance that led the French Officials to open the very port of the country which had been laid on Brother Gribble's heart years before? You know the more recent history of the work. Now we have three stations in the very heart of that land, fifteen consecrated workers, applicants in training, several trained native evangelists, chapels in many centers, and the greatest Brethren Church in the World. Surely we Brethren cannot look at this work and at the story of our similar work in South America with any doubt of the results of prayer. Let us rally to a deeper, more effectual prayer life.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed
The motion of a hidden fire,
That kindles in the breast.

"Prayer is the burthen of a sigh,
The falling of a tear—
The upward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near.

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech,
That infant lips can try—
Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high.

"Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice,
Returning from his ways,
While angels in their songs rejoice,
And cry, "Behold! He prays."

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath—
The Christian's native air—
His watchword at the gate of death—
He enters heaven with prayer.

"The saints in prayer appear as one
In words and deed and mind,
Where with the Father and the Son
Sweet fellowship they find.

"Nor prayer is made by man alone—
The Holy Spirit pleads—
And Jesus, on the eternal throne,
For sinners intercedes.

"O thou by whom we come to God—
The Life, the Truth, the Way
The path of prayer Thyself has trod;
Lord, teach us how to pray "

Whittier, California.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

GENERAL BRAMWELL BOOTH

Reports from England are to the effect that all Britain, regardless of creed or religious convictions, mourned the passing of General Bramwell Booth. It is a great tribute to sincere and devoted work in behalf of the underprivileged that this should be so. It should be an inspiration to Christians of all creeds to give more attention to that kind of work. It is a bit discouraging that so many are willing to leave that sort of work to others, but there is hope of better things so long as men in general are willing to acknowledge its true value. It is also encouraging to observe that an unfortunate break with an organization to which he had given his life was not sufficient to eclipse the glory of the service which he had rendered as head of the Salvation Army. This break may have been the result of honest misunderstanding. Great men sometimes fail to see that the organization through which they have worked successfully requires readjustments in order to meet new conditions and requirements. General Booth had been accorded richly deserved honors. Let us hope that the re-organized army may do its work as well as he did his.—The Presbyterian Advance.

BAPTISTS UNDAUNTED BY MAJOR

The Northern Baptist convention in session at Denver, Colorado, drew the fire of Major Alva J. Brasted, army chaplain and member of the convention, by the presentation of a resolution denouncing war and compulsory military training. The convention stood its ground courageously and adopted the resolution, despite the vigorous opposition of the Major and others, who maintained that by adopting it they would "make themselves fervid, conscientious objectors."—The Presbyterian Advance.

DRY ENFORCEMENT MORE EFFECTIVE

Prohibition enforcement is getting better results in Ohio and elsewhere the past few months than at any time since the Eighteenth Amendment became effective. President Hoover's inaugural address and his address before the publishers of the country put more pep and action into officials and people than any other one thing. The enactment of the Jones law was another wet blanket for the nullifiers. In Cincinnati, for instance, the Times-Star, wet as the Ohio river, said the price of bootleg liquor doubled in that city, and gave the Jones law as the cause. All over the country dry enforcement set a faster stride. The high-ups in New York City were made to realize that even there prohibition of booze exists. The dry law is more effective today and is being better enforced than ever before. This is evidenced by the long wails from the wet camp and the increased emphasis of wet denunciation of the dry law.

PAPAL CONCORDAT WITH RUMANIA

From its national political headquarters in the Capital City, the hierarchy of Rome gives out the information that the Papacy and Rumania have at last entered into a concordat. This step has been made possible by a political change which recently placed the Rumanian Government in the hands of Dr. Julius Maniu, a Roman Catholic. The former liberal Government had been unwilling to sign the concordat.

A concordat is a treaty between the Sovereign Pontiff and a civil state. Such pacts are sometimes called treaties, but they are more often designated as concordats.

For several years a papal nuncio has been accredited as diplomatic envoy to Rumania, though no ambassador or minister from that country is accredited to the Papacy. The Roman Catholic Maniu Government may now send an envoy to the Roman See.

The Papacy has diplomatic relations now with thirty-seven civil powers, and is exerting pressure constantly to increase the number. It is elementary in the law of nations that only an independent sovereign power has the right to send or receive diplomatic agents. It is equally elementary that none but sovereigns can become parties to a treaty. The fact that the Papacy has been accustomed for centuries to do both leaves no question as to its status as a sovereign power.

Under the canon law, every Roman Catholic is a subject of the pontifical throne in Rome. How can one be a subject or citizen at the same time of two sovereign powers in diplomatic relations with each other? Papal authorities claim nearly twenty millions of Roman Catholics in the United States, and all of them are bound to the Sovereign Pontiff by paramount ties of allegiance. —Gilbert ONations in Christian Standard.

RELIGIOUS PEACE IN MEXICO

Mexico has found a modus vivendi between Church and State. A controversy of three years' standing is ended, and the priestless churches will once again hear the intoning of Masses and the quiet office of the confessional. Conversations during the past month between the more tolerant President Portes Gil and the church leaders bore their fruit in a peace pact signed on Friday, June 21st.

By the new working agreement the government will allow the Church to designate those priests who are to register under the requirements of Mexican law; while religious instruction will be permitted within the churches; and Church representatives may apply at any time, like other citizens, for modification of the Constitution. The pact guaranteed independence of the Church to execute her spiritual functions without interference from the State in ecclesiastical administration, as long as no political activities against the Constitution are fostered by her. The attack of the Constitution upon Church-controlled religious instruction in primary and secondary schools is not yielded in the new declaration; but religious education assumes the status it holds in the United States. . . .—The Living Church.

WHAT PLACE HAVE CIVIL QUESTIONS IN THE CHURCH?

Much heated breath has been spent over the assertion by a United States Senator that the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church have attempted to influence his vote and other votes on the question of prohibition. Why the assertion is made we cannot see. Is it not the duty of the church to help men in office to recognize their moral responsibility toward an issue like prohibition, and why should the matter be a subject open for discussion? If the accused had sought to influence the mind and determine the vote on a question affecting the grant of large amounts toward particular institutions which appealed to the church representative, the reason for an unfavorable criticism would be more quickly detected. We all confess our conviction in that form of government which excludes the union of church and state, but the incident mentioned does not suggest a violation of that accepted principle. That oft shouted slogan, "Keep the church out of politics," may be used, and is often used, to keep the church from a firm stand against evils that menace the whole structure of morals and religion.—The Presbyterian.

"We do not need a new religion. Neither do we need to tamper with the faith handed down to us from the time of the Apostles. All that is needed is that we hold up the strong, loving Christ as the guide to love, joy, peace and eternal life."—Rev. Dr. Edward Charles Russell.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

The suggestions for this week's Worship Program are based on Eph. 1:18-23. Be sure to read this passage very carefully.

MONDAY

The Hope of his Calling.—By the revelation in the knowledge of him, which we have through the witness of the Spirit and the Word, the eyes of our understanding are enlightened and we know—as far as it is possible for the human mind to know—what is the hope of our calling. We thank thee, our Father, that our minds have been so enlightened, and we pray that thou wilt make us ever ready to give a reason for the hope that is in us. 1 Pet. 3:8-22.

TUESDAY

His Power to Usward.—It is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe. It is a sobering thought that the unbelief of man may limit the power of God; Jesus found it so. Even a measure of unbelief on the part of believers may limit his power in just that measure. As the anxious father said to Jesus (read Mark 9:14-29), "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." We are humbled, O God, that the exceeding greatness of thy power should be used for us, thy creatures; give us grace that we may in no wise limit it!

WEDNESDAY

Wrought in Christ.—The same power that raised Jesus from the dead and set him on high, is ours! Since the beginning of time there has been nothing like it. It is true, there have been legends that others arose from the dead, but the most casual examination convinces of the legendary nature of the tales. But the resurrection of Jesus has been called the most strongly attested fact in history. It cannot be explained away, and praise God! because HE lives, we know that through that same power we shall live also! John 14:15-24.

THURSDAY

At his own right hand.—The place of honor and the place of power! How men would rejoice to occupy such a position; in the early days of our Lord's ministry, his disciples quarreled over such honors, for selfish reasons. But the same unselfish love that caused our Savior to lay aside his equality with God and render service for us, still causes him to use his position of honor and power in our behalf. Read Romans 8:31-39, and rejoice in the love and power of him who maketh intercession FOR US at the right hand of God.

FRIDAY

Far above All.—After his humiliation in bearing our sin, he is now exalted high, far above all. This is also a figure of the position he should occupy in each human heart. It was God's plan (Col. 1:18), "that in all things he might have the preeminence." Read the entire chapter for your devotional passage. May we today give thee preeminence in all things!

SATURDAY

Which is to Come.—We are reminded again that this world is not all. We need to be reminded that there is to be another and better world, and that we should not set our affections upon the THINGS of this present world. Read Matt. 6:19-34. In this world which is to come, our Lord will be Lord over all: be thou now Lord over all in our lives!

SUNDAY

Which is His Body.—Men today are gathering in thy "churches" to worship thee. Help us to realize anew that thy church is not made of wood and stone, but of flesh and blood, of life and spirit. Help us all to realize that we are members of thy body, may we be more conscious of our close union with thee, sensitive to each impulse from our divine Head. And may we in no way bring dishonor or reproach upon the holy body of which we are a part. Read Eph. 5:22-33.

What Is Religious Education?

(From Sunday School Times, March 31, 1928)

There is only one true religion. Christ is that religion. He alone can bring men who are "dead in trespasses and sins" to life. All other religions leave dead men dead. It is a tragedy, therefore, that the Religious Education Association today is chiefly interested only in ways of death, offering men practically no education in matters of eternal life. This fact came out prominently in its recent convention held in Philadelphia. The prominent Professor of Psychology at Bryn Mawr College, Dr. James H. Leuba, was given place on its platform, and is reported to have said that religious worship as it is today is doomed to disappear as magic has passed away; that the God of the churches "is no more helpful today than he was to the savage" who prayed to him in superstition when he was sick. This address was "answered" by a Union Theological Seminary professor, who defended prayer, but who of course gave little evangelical Christian truth. Dr. Walter Albion Squires, of the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education, in reporting this convention speaks a needed word "If the R. E. A. leaders really desire to make their organization a clearing house for religious truth, a forum in which every sort of religious conviction shall have a chance to find expression, they missed the point in the Philadelphia convention. Nearly all the speakers on the main program were Liberals. They differed much, it is true, in their views, but they differed only as extreme Liberals differ from Liberals who are not so extreme. Liberalism had the right of way in the convention. This is a matter to which the leadership of the R. E. A. ought to give serious thought. If it is not to be an agency through which evangelical Protestantism may find any expression of its own views, but an agency for promoting theories which have long been the deadly foes of the evangelical types of the Christian religion, Protestant leaders ought to know this fact. If such is the case the R. E. A. ceases to be a general forum and clearing house and becomes an agency for propaganda." Christian people have long recognized that this is the fact, and that the Association does not even include evangelical Christianity as one of the various religions of which it is the mouthpiece.

Christ's Conditional Promises

Many good people seem to think that the Lord's promises to answer prayer are unconditional. There could not be a greater mistake. Salvation is God's free gift, offered to all who will receive Christ by simple faith in God's Word. But the rewards of prayer are quite different. They are not only conditioned on faith in Christ, but they have other clearly defined requirements. Dr. J. Stuart Holden has well said: "Remember that Jesus Christ our Lord now here promises to do anything for a man who will not let him do everything." This comes out in our Lord's conditional promise: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." (John 15:7). The unsundered Christian cannot be an abiding Christian. After receiving Christ as Savior by faith, such a one, if he hopes to have his prayers

On Friday, June 28, we closed a very successful Daily Vacation Bible School. The school was conducted in our new Sunday School Annex and our quarters proved to be conducive to the very best interests of all concerned. The children responded loyally to their leaders' efforts and we feel that an impression has been made that will have a tendency to build up our church school.

The school was entirely Brethren, the other schools of the city not seeing their way clear to co-operate, therefore our attendance was not large. We were quite well pleased however when we learned that 50 children had enrolled for the work. Our average attendance throughout the term was 43. The accompanying picture shows the likenesses of some 42 of our pupils and their leaders.

In our school we laid special emphasis upon the following: Bible Story and Dramatization; Missionary Stories giving a brief glimpse into the needs of different Mission Fields; the History of Sacred Hymns and the authors; Habit Stories with a Scripture Text which the children were required to learn bearing on the story; A 40 minute period for hand work. The Junior and Primary children also learned to be quite efficient in placing the different books in the Bible Library. We feel that a very constructive piece of work was accomplished.

The following assisted the pastor, who superintended the effort: Mrs. George Lil-answered, must yield himself unto God as one who is alive from the dead (Rom. 6:13); he must present his body a living sacrifice (Rom. 12:1). In full, unconditional surrender he must let the Lord do everything for him, remembering the word of the Lord, "Without me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5). "Either he is Lord of all, or he is not Lord at all." The prayer promises are made only to those who, in the power of the Holy Spirit, "can say that Jesus is the Lord" (1 Cor. 12:3).

PROSPECTIVE TOBACCO LEGISLATION

On June 10, the United States senate received a shock. Senator Smoot introduced a bill to amend the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, by extending its provisions to tobacco and tobacco products.

He said he introduced the bill because "the manufacture and sale of tobacco products are matters that affect the public health and welfare of millions of our population;" that "various drug products are contained in tobacco;" and that "false and deceptive statements made through advertising media in the interest of tobacco products should be brought under government regulation."

In introducing his bill the senator delivered a scathing address in which he charges the tobaccoists with indulging in "an orgy of buncombe, quackery, and downright falsehood and fraud to create a vast woman and child market for their products."

The No-Tobacco League prints the senator's address in full in the July issue of The No-Tobacco Journal. It has also organized a nationwide campaign to get individuals and groups of people in all the states to petition congress to pass the bill.

Any one interested in having a part in the campaign in this matter so vital to the "public health and welfare of millions of the population," can obtain copies of the senator's address and suggested form of petition by writing to the No-Tobacco League, Box 578, Indianapolis, Indiana, and enclosing five cents for postage.

(Lesson for July 21)

Ezekiel's Vision of Hope

Scripture Lesson—Ezek. 47:1-12.

Printed Text—Ezek. 47:1-9.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 100.

Golden Text—Of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end.—Isaiah 9:7.

Introductory Note

In our other lessons on Ezekiel we studied the warnings by which God, through his prophet Ezekiel, would persuade Israel to so repent and return to God that it would not be necessary to permit Jerusalem to be destroyed. Since the people refused, the calamity came.

Judah has fallen and her proud people are captives in a strange land.

All the treasures of the temple and all the best and strongest of the people are exiled in Babylon. Hope has fled from their hearts, for it has been twenty-five years since Ezekiel and his company have come into this captive land. Is it any wonder that in such a day the exiles by the river Chebar should sing such a song as the 137th Psalm?

"By the rivers of Babylon,
There we sat down, yea, we wept,
When we remembered Zion.

* * *

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem,
Let my right hand forget her skill,
Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth,
If I remember thee not."

But in the midst of all this despair, there comes the prophet with a vision of a new day and a song of hope. Jerusalem shall live again. The Kingdom of God shall come and his people shall live. As surely as the river runs to the sea, so surely shall God's promises be fulfilled and his people shall live in hope.

The one essential was a change of heart, a change of character, a chance of conduct, and an open mind and soul to receive the divine influences by which alone these things can be obtained.

So the second part of Ezekiel's prophecy was to prepare the people for their return to their home in Palestine. He preached on the heart of stone (Chap. 36); showed them the valley of dry bones turned into living persons (Chap. 37); and finally showed them the door of hope, the River of life which should accomplish their healing.—Selected.

Lines of Light

As a rivulet that widens into a river, so is a religious impulse that finds outlet in action. (Verse 1).

Every church should be the source of a life-giving stream of benevolent deeds. (Verse 1).

Despire not a movement in its ankle stage. (Verse 3).

Christian influences have a way of multiplying. (Verse 5).

The desert areas of life are made fruitful by the gospel. (Verse 7).

The waters of healing cannot and should not be confined. (Verse 8).

Stagnant waters breed disease; flowing streams are curative. (Verse 9).

Without the leavening function of Christianity world peace would be only a dream. (Golden text.)

"Hope is a vigorous principle; ... it sets the head and heart to work and animates a man to do his utmost."—Jeremy Collier. (Golden text.)—Lyndon B. Phifer.

Force Versus Love

Ezekiel's vision of the healing of the nations flowing from a spiritual source reinforces the truth that the ultimate good and supreme influence in life is love rather than force. History is filled with records of reliance on force to accomplish various ends. The Inquisition, persecutions, ecclesiastical courts, and similar methods have been used by misguided zealots who have "had a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge."

"Time was when, through clouds and rifts of ignorance and superstition, men fancied they saw an approving smile on the face of their Christ as they heaped the fagots around the stake, where their fellow believer in the Son of God's love perished in the fire. Time was when they were convinced that they beheld a gesture of assent on that all-loving countenance, while they racked and mangled, in his name, their fellow men who pronounced not their shibboleths. But never more will men dare to torture and destroy their fellow men for a diphthong or a metaphysical theory." (Berdoe.)

"Love is the only conduct favorable to the race; altruism is the necessary condition to human progress," says Vedder.

Nietzsche's philosophy was one of ruth-appropriation, the injury, the subduing of the alien and the weak. It is suppression, compulsion, the enforcing of its own forms. It is assimilation, and at the least and gentlest, exploitation." He scouted altruism, saying, "The weak and crippled should go to the wall: that is the first principle of our philanthropy." He preached unadulterated selfishness: "One must learn to love less self-interest. "Life is essentially the himself with a wholesome and healthy love, so that one is sufficient to himself, and does not run about in ways that are described as love of one's neighbor." He based his unchristian ethics on the laws of the survival of the fittest, saying: "Sympathy opposes in the main the law of development, which is the law of selection. It preserves what is ripe for destruction, it operates to defend the disinherited and condemned among men. This disheartening and contagious instinct ... is a chief instrument in the advance of decadence."—Church School Journal.

The Broadening Stream

The picture of a broadening stream symbolized that while the renewal of the kingdom of Israel, on the return from exile, would have a small and insignificant beginning, both in numbers and in prosperity, the spirit that would make it a great kingdom would increase on and on to the end, the outward blessings would become more abundant, the true life of the nation would deepen as well as broaden. This picture has been realized in history. The return was signalized by a truer spirit of worship, by stronger principles of righteousness, by renewed study of the Bible. The outward progress was slow, but through Christ the kingdom of God, then represented by the

BETTER CITIZENS

For Citizenship Committee

Would it not be a good thing for all societies, Junior, Intermediate, and Young People's, to invite to one meeting each year—or to a joint meeting of all three societies—the head of the traffic department of the city, or at least a traffic officer, to talk to the Endeavorers on the duty of obeying the law, and to explain to them some things about traffic and its dangers that they may not know?

Such a meeting could be made a real success if parents were also invited to attend. Part of the time could be given to Bible drills and to showing visitors what Christian Endeavor does for the young folks. If the officer's talk came early in the programme some of the Juniors, Intermediates, or Young People might ask him questions. It would be better to prepare for this beforehand. Have some questions ready to be asked, and let the officer answer them. In these days of danger and law-breaking a meeting like this would be welcomed by the authorities, and would do good.

COOPERATION WITH OTHER COMMITTEES

No one committee makes a society, and all working together can do more than all working independently.

The lookout committee can cooperate with the other committees in the observance of Christian Endeavor Day and Christian Endeavor Week.

It can, together with the prayer meeting committee, work for the goal of having each active member take part in the Christian Endeavor meeting, both by encouraging individually those who need it and by seeing that time or opportunity is provided in the meetings for all to take part and thus keep that part of the pledge.

It can get assistance from the social committee in making new members feel at home in the society meetings. A social might be used as a means of attracting new members or in honor of some members who have just come into the society. Both committees can work to make such social events successful.—C. E. ### Work for City Boys and Girls

The Neighborhood School of the Baptist Temple, Rochester

By Carl Dawkins, Rochester, N. Y.

The future leadership of State and Church is bound up in the flesh and blood and mind and heart of the child of today. Neglect him and the State and the Church and the home will suffer when he takes over responsibilities. Here is more than a challenge, it is an obligation.

Last year five hundred and twenty-seven boys and girls were enrolled in the Neighborhood School of the Baptist Temple, with an average attendance of one hundred and fifty. The ages of the boys and girls run from three to six. Those over thirteen are chosen as leaders. They are watched carefully as leaders are chosen on merit. A leadership class is organized where the boys and girls are taught the fundamental qualities of a leader, and are given specific tasks to prove their abilities. Many show special talent in music or drawing or some other line of work.

Last year twenty-two different nations were represented including: Italian, Ukrainian, American, Greek, Jewish, Assyrian, Polish, English, Serbian, Lithuanian, Dutch, Canadian, German, Syrian, Turkish, Hungarian, Bulgarian, Slavish, French, Irish, Spanish and Scotch.

The home life of these children is an interesting study. My first visit to this district was on a sultry summer afternoon when one of the neighborhood boys took me around to the homes of several children. Many boys knew me from our contacts in the school and soon quite a gang of them were following. In some of the places the parents would rush out and, in broken English, ask the cause of the trouble. Some thought I was a policeman, or a secret service man. Perhaps their consciences were not altogether clear for much of the crime comes from this district.

Most of the homes were dingy, very poorly furnished and illy kept. The hallways were dark and unpleasant odors greeted one at almost every turn. The women and men who came to the door were very often half-dressed and their clothes were ragged and dirty. Occasionally we came across a family who, even though poor, showed their belief that cleanliness is next to godliness.

The parents, although rather skeptical at first, became very cordial as soon as they discovered our mission. Some mothers would try to tell, in broken English, how much the school had done for her boy or girl, and showed pride in anything their children had made.

One of the problems is to keep the children off the streets. Fortunately for the most part they are back streets not much travelled. The Baptist Temple's Vacation Bible School recruits members from this same district, and the parents are glad to have their children go where they will be cared for, especially during the warmer season. Parents also attend different functions sponsored by the Neighborhood School and many appreciate all that the school has done for their children.

A new pupil from one of the poorer homes where cleanliness is given little attention, soon discovers that there is such a word, and observes that pupils can be clean, even if their clothes are ragged. Soon he will return like a new boy and find satisfaction in being clean, with teeth polished, shoes shined and clothes brushed.

Hygiene is a necessary co-partner of character building. Fair play in sports is taught as well as in all aspects of life. The children are constantly advised to make their homes a place to carry out the things they learn in the school, helping tired mother, and promoting harmony.

Many have confessed that they have stolen but will not do so any more. In many homes theft is passed over very lightly, and in some is even encouraged. Some boys have been leaders of gangs that have caused much trouble for officials but have led their gang to school, where they learn a better way of life.

Many of the children are undernourished. A little advice to the mothers as to the kind of food to buy and the best way to prepare it often makes a change in the entire home. Bad tempers caused from poorly digested food vanish when the cause is removed. The girls learn many things about the home and put these lessons into operation. They are taught to be unselfish, not only with their money but also with their time and strength. One of the boys who had a great desire to go to Buffalo and had saved enough money, gave it instead to his mother for a new dress, or to his father for a new pair of shoes. In many cases the children have denied themselves pleasure in order to help others.

There is an honor club for the boys and one for the girls, where good behavior is recognized and leadership is promoted. The members are appointed by the club leaders on merit, and their appointment is for a month at a time, to be annulled at any time the boy or girl proves unworthy. Boy Scout organizations and groups of Girl Reserves are in charge of competent leaders with charters from national and state organizations. There is also a Black Condors club for the boys above the scout age.

One of the eighty-five volunteer workers in the Neighborhood School, most of them are members of the Baptist Temple. Mrs. Parmenter, the director, has a genius for organization, and a knack for getting people interested in worthwhile work. The school is financed by the various women's clubs of the Temple and by special gifts.

One of the happiest times in the lives of these underprivileged children is that spent at Kamp Kontent, the Baptist Temple Summer Camp on Lake Conesus. The competition for a camp scholarship is very keen, for choice is made from those who have made the best records in attendance, behavior and quality of work.

Bigger plans for this school are being made for next year with a big general assembly once a month. There are special health examinations by a trained nurse, and there is to be a first-aid and home nursing course. More emphasis is to be placed on organization, program and leadership training. The "Nabor News," the school paper, is to be enlarged and more and better music is on the bill for next year. Other churches may adopt some of the ideas of this effective Christian service.—Missionary Review of the World.

A Quest or a Conquest?

By Robert E. Speer, New York

We are often told in these days that the foreign mission enterprise needs to be entirely reconceived. Formerly, it is said, Christianity regarded itself as the absolute and final religion and the work of foreign missions was conceived as a donation or displacement. Missionaries went out to give to other peoples a religion and religious values which these other people did not possess. They even went with the idea of setting Christ in the place of supremacy over all others, to "Crown him Lord of all." Now, however, it is held, Christianity must give up its exclusivism and recognize that each religion has its distinctive possession of truth and that Christianity has no right to go forth with the conquest or displacement idea. Foreign missions, accordingly, must now be regarded not as a conquest but as a quest, an effort to learn, not to teach, or to learn as much as to teach, with a view to one world-wide, inter-racial cooperative effort to assemble out of all religions the distinctive contribution of each to the ultimate synthetic and universal religion of mankind.

This conception is both futile and false. It is futile because such a conception would never have produced the foreign missions movement and cannot maintain it. Men and women might go out on this idea to make a world cruise or for brief and comfortable visits but not to spend their lives, often in hard and lonely places, at the sacrifice of home values and especially the education of their children. Nor will the missionary enterprise spring from religious doubt. The people who have not found what satisfies them in Christianity, and who propose that the church should send out the missionaries to find something better than Christianity or to supplement and improve Christianity, are not the people who supply the missionaries who go or who furnish the funds to send them. The foreign mission enterprise springs from and rests upon adequate convictions. Doubt as to the sufficiency and universality of Christianity is not a substitute for such convictions.

This new conception of foreign missions is also false. Christ needs nothing from any one. No other religious teacher has any contribution to make to him. In him dwells all the fullness of the Godhead. He is the final and sufficient revelation of God and the only Savior and Redeemer of man. This is the New Testament representation. It is the solid and unalterable foundation of foreign missions. Foreign missions are not a search for a new and better religion. They are not an attempt to find something that is not already in Christ. They are the effort of those who have heard of Christ to take what they have heard of the whole world in order that all men together may learn more of him.

We who know Christ do not claim that we know all that there is to know of him. We say just the opposite. But it is all there and we need all men to help in its discovery and its experience. One reason for bringing the knowledge of the Gospel to the whole world and bringing the whole world into the search for the infinite richness of God in Christ is that only so can we attain the fuller knowledge of Christ which is God's will for us. We do not go out to find something in the non-Christian religions that is not in Christianity. We go to enlist all men in the search for what is in Christ alone and in him in divine sufficiency and completeness. Foreign missions are indeed a great quest of the church. But they are not a quest for something to be added to Christianity. They are a quest for an ever enlarging and enriching understanding of the fulness of Christ.—From "Are Foreign Missions Done For?"

school and therefore right at home with their classes, but of course we had to do some little different grouping for this work, than in the regular classes.

Then on June 16th we held our Love Feast service and this was a very fine service. As visitors we had Brother and Sister Clum of Parsons, Kansas and Miss Jennie Garber of Sapulpa, Oklahoma, with us, and their presence was much appreciated by the local members. We had 37 at the tables and a real spiritual feast it was, and several new members were there for their first time. On Sunday evening, June 23, was given our Children's Day program, consisting of demonstrations of the Daily Bible school work and Children's Day numbers. This was a splendid program, well attended by parents and others. We do not have good attendance at all regular services, but good attendance is becoming much more frequent. Our lowest attendance, in Sunday school in June was 53 and the highest was 92 with an average of 69. But June was our best month in the point of attendance, and our D. V. B. S. and Children's Day program, had to do with the increase in numbers. We are to have a picnic, at one of the city parks in July, and hope to keep the attendance above the former average throughout the summer. Our work here is the most encouraging that it has been at any time since we have been here. We have many funerals here, because of old acquaintances, but we are here to "minister and not to be ministered unto." As the entire brotherhood is in a special way interested in this work we earnestly solicit your prayers. Visiting brethren are always appreciated.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

This is a mission church which has had a hard struggle and some very discouraging experiences, due largely to a wrong leadership. It is very pathetic to find a church that has taken years to build up and have a minister come in and tear down, bring in factions, grow angry and bitter, work havoc and scatter the flock. This is not the first church, in my visiting of the churches, that I have found all but wrecked by unchristian-like tactics. A man, self-willed, of uncontrollable temper, and of a rule or ruin spirit, combined with limited ability has no business representing the cause of Christ. Such men never do the cause any good and their trail is easily followed by the torn-up churches they serve. A pastor is called to work with the people he serves and not to elevate himself to the throne of lordship whose dictations must be received and obeyed.

Brother Wood, who spent years in building up this work, was called by the Mission Boards and is gradually making progress and with Wood on the field we may be sure of a good church in Fort Scott some day. There is no wealth in the congregation and with a financial load heavier than they can bear I did not canvass the congregation, but enjoyed preaching for them and meeting them. I received one gift of $10.00.

On the Way

I stopped on the way at the home of Brother and Sister Edd Millhisler of El-Dorado and found them true and loyal Brethren. Though isolated from any church, they take all our church publications and contribute to the different interests of the church. It does one good to find people with this kind of loyalty. The Lord has blessed them financially and they in turn feel their obligation to give support to the work. Their gift to the college was $500.00. If our people, who move where we have no churches, would practice this kind of loyalty, we would have no difficulty in opening new fields and building churches. But instead, most of them follow the course of the least resistance, unite with other denominations, or else take no interest in church work of any kind. We have in most of our large cities from fifty to two hundred members that have come from various churches and are almost a total loss as contributors to the work of our church.

The total gift of this report is $510.00.

W. S. BELL.

The last report from this mission church was March 30th, 1929 and since that time we have been as busy as usual, and have experienced some growth.

We have received two into the church by baptism and one renewal, and are holding our own along other lines, and the attendance is slowly increasing at all regular services. We were highly pleased to have Dr. Bell with us over one Sunday and a very rainy Sunday it was, but our small audience enjoyed his message very much. The next special feature was our Daily Vacation Bible School, which was by far the best we have had here. In this school we had 54 enrolled and an average attendance of 33, with five teachers and helpers. The success of this school was largely due to the cheerful voluntary service of these teachers. They were the teachers in the Sunday

ALTOONA, PENNSYLVANIA

We have nothing of the spectacular or exciting to report from this place. Nevertheless we are growing and growth is always interesting, and sometimes exciting. Where there is growth there is life and that is why it is interesting. The most interesting thing in this world is life. In every church there are two kinds of growth, first by accretion, that is extraneous addition, enlargement from without, something added to that which already is. Second, by quality as well as by quantity. Increase in size is not always accompanied by increase in quality. Bigness is not necessarily greatness. The church in Altoona is growing in both these ways. The Sunday school, up to this time, has made a very good average, for some weeks ninety per cent of the enrollment, one week a hundred per cent. The Missionary Society has made a splendid record this year. Besides meeting its obligations to the National Society it has made very substantial gifts to the local work. The Golden Rule Class, made up of the younger women, married and unmarried, remains true to its name, always keen to recognize the need and just as keen and quick to meet it. The Sisterhood Girls have had their regular monthly meetings. They have made a study of "Friends of Africa," and enjoyed it. Sister Gerhart is their efficient patroness and she is dearly loved by all the girls, and very naturally so. She is loyally true to all that is best in life.

Since my last report several have been added by baptism. Last Sunday night, June 30, at the close of the service, in response to the pastor's invitation, an entire family, father and mother, and daughter of about 20, made public confession, also a very fine high school boy; these await baptism. Part of the membership as a matter of course is indifferent, while others, the greater portion of them, are very faithful, devoted, and loyal to their Lord and church. During the next two months, July and August, the four churches, in this part of the city, including the Brethren, will join in Sunday evening union services, while Sunday school and morning preaching services continue in each of the four churches. In this way we are cultivating the spirit of fellowship and tolerance. Our Children's Day service was a splendid success. Everybody went away from this service feeling that the children are having a real part in the life of the church. Mother's Day was observed with an inspiring program, a program in which all could have and did have part. Many were the words of commendation overheard by the pastor.

Already plans for larger things are under way when the fall campaign begins. In a rather quiet way we have been cultivating the field and the reaping has not been without its encouragement. We are now looking forward to the enlargement of this work. It is not an easy field, no field is, and we are not asking for one. The Master and the Twelve did not have an "easy time of it" and no minister should look for one. The world is a great battlefield in which truth and error, right and wrong, good and evil are in conflict. It is a long-drawn out conflict, and sometimes evil seems to have the upper hand. Yet we are in the conflict with a confident hope, for nothing is more certain than that in the end righteousness will prevail. There is comfort and sweet content in the thought that the struggle will end in victory for truth and righteousness.

OUR PAST-TIME PASTORS

This communication has to do particularly with our benevolence work for the old ministers and their dependents whom we have undertaken to support and aims to plainly present the facts as the Benevolence Board has to meet them.

The writer believes that it is largely because of ignorance of these facts that the Board meets with much indifferent response to its appeals for funds to carry on the work.

Here are the plain facts: The Benevolence Board has asked for forty cents per member from all the churches of the brotherhood, which request was granted by the Conference.

This year we have received only twenty-two hundred and seventy-five dollars up to the present time, which is less than ten cents per member. Only seventy-one churches have sent in any offering at all, which is only a little more than half of the churches of the brotherhood. To make matters worse, this year and for the next three or four years to follow, we will get nothing from the Jesse Eyman estate, by reason of a provision of the will, which he left, to add to the estate by using the income of the estate to purchase some farm lands, thus stopping all beneficiaries until such purchase is paid for.

This reduces our yearly income about six hundred dollars until we again get our share of the estate income.

Please understand that the Board of Benevolences is helpless to extend the promised help to these worthy old ministers unless we can get the money.

Pastors and finance leaders, wake up! Present this matter to your people, if you have not already done so. We are firm in our belief that the people will respond heartily, if the matter is properly presented to them. Many of the churches have come across nobly. It is a certainty that this Board will have to cease to function when the money is all gone, which will be soon. Let us have your offering now so we can get it into our annual report to the conference next month.

Thanking you, I am sincerely yours,
J. J. WOLFE, Secretary,
North Manchester, Indiana.

FROM LEON, IOWA TO PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

I believe our classification would place us in a large class—those who like to read church news, but do not write much of it. We expect our secretary to send in a report of the work at this place soon so we have little to say, save a few words of appreciation for the very fine way in which the church received us, and is responding to our leadership. The beginning has been as good as we could expect. We knew it was the hot summer time and did not expect to do much more than get acquainted with the church and the city and be ready for the fall. We hope to be able to report some good constructive work done in our next letter. I find the Brethren here the same friendly, helpful type of folk you will find in every Brethren church where I have been. I do not believe any worthy Brethren minister has much ground to complain of the attitude of our church to her ministers. I believe the church is longsuffering and kind.

The hard part of making a change of pastorates is the leaving. Our pastorate at Leon was a blessed one—not all pleasant, but rich in real service, a large ingathering of new families, many calls for outside addresses, funeral services. We were called to every town in the county and to some of them a number of times, so our ministry had a large outreach. A regular Sunday evening service with a house well-filled was always a blessed experience. So, it was hard to leave Leon, but it was a great delight to have my successor on the field before I left and find him and his good wife such a fine type of splendid young leadership for the church. We held baptismal service, also a regular midweek Bible study with him present. Others are waiting baptism and others are ready to come into the church. We left feeling the church was in good hands with Brother Miles Taber and wife in charge and pray God's richest blessing upon them. May the church witness to the truth and reach many souls for Christ.

DELAYED PUBLICATION

My Dear Brother Baer:

In reading "Our Worship Program" by T. C. L. in the Brethren Evangelist No. 18, current volume, page 9; these words were found: Let us forget not all his benefits. Immediately the writer thought of a number of special benefits named in Psalm 103: 2-5. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." First, Who forgiveth all thine iniquities. Second, Who healeth all thy diseases. Third, Who redeemeth thy life from destruction. Fourth, Who crowneth with loving kindness and tender mercies, Fifth, Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles.

Let all of us praise the Lord with heart and soul for the daily reception of so many bodily and spiritual benefits.

SAMUEL KIEHL, Dayton, Ohio.

A SELF-WRITTEN OBITUARY

(It is not often that we receive an obituary written by the deceased, and so we venture to publish the following written by the late Brother Jacob Dye, an account of whom Brother L. G. Wood writes "In the Shadow" department.—Editor).

"I, Jacob Dye, was born near Somerset, Pulaski county, Kentucky, October 11, 1844. When about four years of age moved with my parents to Appanoose county, Iowa. In the winter of 1857 and 1858 moved with my parents to Saline county, Missouri. On the 9th day of August, 1862, I enlisted in company A, 7th Cavalry, Missouri Volunteers. Was discharged at Little Rock, Ark., June 17, 1865, having served two years, 10 months and 8 days. In the month of March, 1870, I, with my mother, sister and brother, moved to Bourbon county, Kansas. On the 21st day of November, 1875, was united in marriage to Elizabeth J. Beck, daughter of Joseph and Martha Beck. To this union was born six children, to-wit: Alice Maybel, Charles Edgar, Edith Lenore, Lillian Maude, William Lloyd, Martha Inez. My son, Lloyd, died July the 5th, 1919, at San Francisco, California. The two oldest children died in infancy.

"My wife died August 25, 1887. In June, 1909 I united with the Brethren church at Fort Scott, Kansas.

"I frankly confess that I have made many mistakes in life and have sinned against God and High Heaven, yet, notwithstanding my many shortcomings, I have tried in my weak and unassuming way to serve my God, my country and my fellow man. I harbor no ill will toward any one. If any of my fellow creatures have aught against me, I earnestly beseech them, to forgive wherein they have been held amiss within me. I am still trusting in God. He doeth all things well. His will and not mine be done."

THE NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

The 11th Annual Conference of the Northwest District of Brethren churches, consisting of the churches at Sunnyside, Harrah and Spokane, was held at Spokane June 26 to 30.

The Conference was well attended, having a large delegation from Sunnyside and also from Harrah.

Blessed fellowship was enjoyed by all together with the interesting program which was presented.

We were indeed fortunate in having with us as our principal speaker Rev. A. J. McClain, who brought us four most helpful and instructive addresses. He brought us also much enthusiasm and inspiration from the State Christian Endeavor Convention at Bellingham where he had been one of the principal speakers also.

Other speakers on our program were Rev. and Mrs. F. Kinkie, A. L. Moyer, Rev. T. H. Broad, and Rev. and Mrs. C. C. Grisso.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Rev. F. Kinzie of Harrah, Moderator; the Spokane pastor, Vice-Moderator; Lillian E. Bowers, Secretary and Treasurer.

Rev. F. Kinzie was elected to be our representative at General Conference and it was voted that since Rev. C. C. Grisso will be at the General Conference he represent the Northwest District there this year.

A motion prevailed that the Northwest Conference request the National Ministerial Association make a thorough study of the standards pertaining to doctrine, education and character which are now being used by the various districts in the matter of electing and ordaining elders with a view toward formulating uniform standards which may be recommended for adoption in all districts alike. We also suggest that this study be extended to include the election and ordination of deacons.

We are herewith asking the National Ministerial Association to take action on this matter from this insertion.

A Ministerial Examining Board, consisting of the pastors of the three churches was created for this district and Brother A. L. Moyer was ordained.

The following recommendations by the resolutions committee were read and adopted:

We recommend to the Northwest District that each church set aside 50 cents per member to defray the expenses of conference speakers in the future, one-half of which is to be paid in the first six months of the conference year and the rest before conference time.

We also recommend to the next program committee that they prepare a study of prophecy for the next conference which is to be at Harrah.

LILLIAN E. BOWERS, Secretary.

Why I am Returning to India

and to walk humbly with thy God," and he said it in such an assured manner that I am convinced he did not know that it was a quotation from the Christian Scriptures. He thought it was Hinduism, so deeply had it become his.

Christ is forcing modification, himself unmodified. That leads to the next.

Fifth.—It is the only movement that presents and embodies a Person who is inescapable in human living. I may be interested in other personalities, but I can escape them, they do not become an inevitable issue. Jesus Christ does. It is said that the tree of life was in the midst of the Garden of Eden so that any path you took converged upon it; Jesus Christ as Life in the midst of the garden of human living, every single road brings you face to face with him. An agnostic socialist said to me, "I was led to Christ by the very pressures of life. I wanted people to live and was led to Christ as Life." An English economist said these fact-hitting words: "Our economics and our politics make Jesus inevitable." A Hindu put it thus: "Begin at India and her needs and you will come out at the place of Christ." Begin with one's own heart needs, with his community and country needs, with world needs and you will come out at the place of Christ. He is inescapable. He stands facing each succeeding age and asks, "What do you think of me and of my way?" and each age knows that the answer to that question constitutes destiny—here and hereafter.

Sixth.—It is the only movement that presents a Person who seems capable of becoming the center of a world brotherhood. Humanity is one, so must become one. If we are really to be united as a race we certainly can not be divided at the deepest place of life, namely, in religion. Our modern broadness is very often sheer indifference and ennui. We have grown tired, therefore tolerant. Therefore we turn to syncretisms and patchworks. I prefer a Personality to a patchwork, for he gives me what the patchwork gives, in that he came not to destroy any truth found anywhere—he sums it up in himself, but he goes further than not destroying—he fulfils, is creative, presents all the good found elsewhere, but with something more—he is more than the sum total of those truths. He is so much more that he is "other." Around the Son of Man the sons of men can gather and find in him the brotherhood.

But last, and most important of all, foreign missions is the only movement that presents a Person who offers and actually gives to men the two great needs of the human heart; redemption from sin, and God. Men do need a savior, but they need more deeply a Savior. The gnawing sense of guilt upon the human spirit drives men to prayer and to expiation, to tortuous rite and weary pilgrimage, to lonely vigils in deep forests and to midnight hours of sleepless rest on downy pillows. Men want something to heal them at the heart. That adequate healing word comes from a Cross. His wounds answer my wounds. But there is no Cross in the non-Christian faiths. Hence they remain forever inadequate for human need.

But I need more than healing, I need fellowship. I need God. Christ brings me God. I deepen the Christ-consciousness and I deepen the God-consciousness. I do not argue, I testify. But outside of Christ the finding of God is uncertain and dim. So our Round Table Conferences revealed. So life reveals.

To conclude: I do not go back to India to impose Western Civilization upon the East, for Western Civilization is only partially Christianized; nor do I go to present an ecclesiasticism blocked off and unchangeable, for our Western ecclesiasticisms have been built up around Christ and may or may not be Christian—we put them at the disposal of the East and say take what is good, for some of it has come out of reality, but we do not make them the issue; again we do not go because the nations of the East are the worst in the world, but because they are a part of the world; nor do we go to manage their souls in their supposed interests, for we want the East to keep its own soul, for only thus can it be creative; but I do go to share Christ with them.

He has meant so much to me that I can not bear to think of men living without him.

I identify myself with the missionary movement because with all its faults it offers to me the best medium of bringing to bear redemptive influences upon the whole life of the nations. In the work of human redemption this movement has many critics, but no rivals. I am therefore with it.

Some one has compared party platforms to the platforms of a street car. They are meant to get in on, but not to stand on.—The Outlook.

Sunday School Notes

Jewish kingdom, has become a mighty river.

"Spencer Stanhope's great picture in the Manchester (England) Art Gallery represents the river of Lethé. On the one side of the river miserable, distorted, ghastly, withered carcasses drop into the flood, whilst on the opposite bank they emerge in sunshine and summer, young and beautiful, with music and song, walking in glory. In this river that Ezekiel and John saw, the painter's fancy becomes glorious fact; the morally diseased, paralyzed, loathsome, perishing, sinking into the crystal tide, suffer the most delightful of all changes, and henceforth walk in newness of life."

"From beneath the temple threshold comes the water of life; and wherever it is true that in any heart—or in any community—God dwells, there will be heard the tinkling of its ripples, and freshness and fertility will come from the stream. The dwelling of God with a man, like the dwelling of God in humanity in the incarnation of His own dear Son, is as it were, the opening of the fountain that it may pour out into the world. So, if we desire to have the blessings that are possible for us, we must comply with the conditions, and let God dwell in our hearts, and make them his temples; and then from beneath the threshold of that temple, too, will pour out, according to Christ's own promise, rivers of living water which will be first for ourselves to drink of and be blessed by, and then will refresh and gladden others. . . . So we come to a very sharp testing question. A mile from the source the river is unfordable. How many miles from the source of our first experience do we stand? How many of us, instead of having 'a river that could not be passed over, waters to swim in,' have but a poor and all but stagnant feeble trickle, as shallow as or shallower than it was at first?"—Alexander MacLaren.

THE FALLEN SPARROW

One Saturday afternoon as Joe and Susie Powell were on their way home from the cotton factory, where they worked, they found a dead sparrow on the grass by the roadside.

"Poor little bird!" cried Susie. Picking it up, she found that it was still warm. "Some bad boy has killed it with his sling shot."

"Yonder he goes now," said her brother as he caught sight of Tom Rice, son of the banker. "See, he's shooting into that tree trying to kill another bird. If I were near enough to him, I believe I'd choke him."

"Do you remember what Miss Christian told us down at the mission about the sparrows, that not one of them falls to the earth without our Heavenly Father's notice?"

"Yes, I remember it all right," said Joe, "and she said that we are worth more than many sparrows; but if that's true, why is it that we have to work like slaves in that dusty old factory when we should be in school? Why does mother have to break her back over the washtub and the sewing machine to earn our living? We can't live like other folks. Tom Rice yonder with that sling shot has everything he wants, and I have nothing. It's all we can do to feed ourselves and pay Tom's father the rent for the shack we live in. You need new dresses. . . my shoes are nearly gone, and mother hasn't had anything new in so long that she has forgotten about it. Sis, I wish I could believe all that 'falling sparrow' stuff as Miss Christian explained it to us."

"I believe it," broke in his sister, "because the Bible is God's Word, you know. He made the birds to sing for us. He loves them and cares for them as he cares for us. Maybe we don't pray right and trust him as we should. You remember Miss Christian said if we trust in the Lord and do good we shall be fed. We are to wait on the Lord, and he will bring it to pass."

"Well, we have been waiting for some time," said the doubting Joe, "and it seems to me that it's about time something were coming to pass."

"Let me tell you what lets' do, Joe," said Susie as a new idea seemed to come to her. "Let's pray about it. Let's begin tonight. You know Miss Christian said if two of us agree on anything we want and pray and have faith it will be done."

Joe who believed in his little sister and was always willing to risk her judgment, said: "Well, little Faithful, I am with you. We will pray the best we know; but if anything comes of it, you will have to bring it about, for I tell you, sis, I have about lost out on that bird story in the Bible."

Just then the notes of a song from a nearby-house reached the ears of the factory children and they stood still and listened. Miss Lovejoy was singing these words: "His eye is on the sparrow, and I know he watches me."

Joe and Susie walked home in silence, each one being occupied with his own thoughts; but that night, as they had agreed, they prayed, and all next day they were happier. The first song at the mission was "God Will Take Care of You;" and when they sang "His Eye is on the Sparrow," the children exchanged knowing glances. The closing song seemed to be intended for them. It was "Only Trust Him." That night they prayed again.

All day Monday the machinery in the cotton factory seemed to sing for Susie and Joe. They talked about it on the way home and agreed that they had heard the machinery singing all day long: "His eye is on the sparrow, and I know he watches me."

On reaching home their mother said: "Children, I've got some good news for you. Mary Whiting, an old schoolmate of mine, has just written me from Florida, where they live, and wants us to come there. Her husband has an orange grove, a vegetable farm, a big dairy and stock ranch, and they are opening up a new rooming house which they want me to oversee. She says they will pay me a good salary, and you children are to have all the work you want in his packing house and vegetable farm, and he will pay you well for it. She writes that we are to have a little bungalow to live in, and you are both to go to school, working during the afternoons and Saturdays. It looks like an opportunity sent from God," exclaimed the mother. "Children, we are not as grateful to him as we should be."

"I am so happy I could shout!" cried Susie, while Joe threw his cap into the air and shouted aloud: "Hurrah for Florida!"

Then coming close to their mother, the children told her about the dead sparrow, their covenant to pray, their happiness through the days, and how the machinery sang to them at the factory.

"And just to think," said Susie, "that the answer to our prayers was coming all the time. Just as Miss Christian says: 'Even before they call I will answer.'"

"I am the richest woman in the world," said Mrs. Powell, "to have such a son and daughter."

Then together they knelt in prayer and thanked the Lord for their good fortune and for answering their prayer.—D. B. Sweat, in Christian Advocate.

IN THE SHADOW

ROHRER—Mrs. Lillie May Rohrer, of Hagerstown, Md., went home to glory, June 11, 1929, aged 70 years. She was a faithful member of the church here and possessed a kind, sacrificing Christian disposition. She was a good mother and a real friend. Left to mourn are one son, Clarence H. Rohrer, four sisters and four grandchildren. The pastor being absent at State Conference, the funeral service was conducted by Rev. Roy Lee DeLoach, of Chambersburg. May all who remain find comfort in the Holy Spirit and be prepared for the final call as was Sister Rohrer. G. C. CARPENTER.

DYE—Jacob Dye was born near Sumners, Pulaski County, Kentucky, October 11th, 1844 and peacefully and very suddenly fell asleep in Christ, June 24th, 1929, at his home in Fort Scott, Kansas. Mrs. Dye was a large and well known, having lived in this county for 58 years and in Fort Scott about 40 years.

The writer had known Mr. Dye for 45 years, and on May 29th, 1909 had the privilege of baptizing him into the Brethren church, and later ordained him to the office of deacon. Brother Dye remained a highly esteemed member and officer of the church until death. Brother Dye has been quite feeble with age and heart trouble for several years, and therefore he was expecting to go and earnestly desiring to depart and to be with Christ. He made all of his funeral arrangements and wrote out his obituary, which I am enclosing. The funeral service was held from the Brethren church on June 26th, 1929. A large attendance of friends and neighbors assembled to pay their respects. He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Inez Thomas and Mrs. Maud Rice of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Mrs. Edith Harbert of Salt Lake City, Utah; eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. The rapidly diminishing ranks of the Civil War Veterans have lost an honored comrade. The community has lost a good citizen. The church has lost an esteemed member. The daughters have lost a kind and considerate father. We have all lost a friend and a Christian man. Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest in the National cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

PUCKETT—Joseph Wesley Puckett was born in Fayette County, Illinois, November 27, 1843 and departed this life at his home in Fort Scott, Kansas, June 27, 1929 at the age of 85 years and 7 months. In 1849 he moved with his parents to Butler, Missouri. And when 17 years of age he came across the State line and joined the Sixth Kansas Cavalry. This was in 1864 and he was honorably discharged in 1865.

Following the war he settled near Blue Mound, Kansas, and in March, 1866 was married to Elizabeth Osborn, to which union were born five children: Dr. J. W. Puckett and Joseph Z. Puckett of Denver, Colorado; Thomas E. Puckett of Beatrice, Nebraska; Mrs. J. R. Townsend, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mrs. L. E. Camp of Rogers, Ark.

His wife died June 16, 1883 and on May 26, 1885 he was married to Ester L. Foster at Mount City, Kan. To this union were born two children: Curtis E. Puckett of Denver, Col., and Mrs. Bessie Nestor of Fort Scott, Kan. There survive him his wife Esther and the above mentioned children.

Mr. Puckett was affiliated with the M. E. church for some years, then transferred his membership to the United Brethren church. He was a kind husband and father and a good citizen.

The funeral service was conducted from the Cheney Chapel, by the writer, and burial was made in the Evergreen Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

BURK—Edgar L. Burk was born in Morgan County, Illinois, and on May 9th, 1871, and departed this life at his home in Fort Scott, Kan., on June 7th, 1929, at the age of 58 years, one month and one day.

He was married to Nora S. Hess in Jasper County, Mo., February 27th, 1896. His wife and the following children survive him: Alvin, Walter, Mrs. Wesley Smith, Clifford Herald and Helen Burk of Fort Scott, Kan., and Mrs. John Weaver of Kansas City, Mo. He is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. James Thornburg of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Mrs. S. J. Buncort of Kansas City, Kan., and one brother, Elmer Burk of Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. Burk was very devoted to his home and family and was of a very kind disposition and had a good word for everybody. His wife has been an invalid for nine years and he spent much of his time caring for her. He departed this life very peacefully and in a moment of time. He had resided in Fort Scott about 40 years. Funeral by the writer conducted at his home. Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest in the Maple Grove Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XVII. THE BIBLE—THE REMEDY

By Dr. J. C. Beal

The world is sick; sick unto death. Crime is rampant. Today the young person is the law-breaker. Society has lost its poise. Government has lost the sense of justice. The home has lost its influence. The church has lost her power. The prospect for the future is not rosy, when the real situation is faced. The condition is recognized by statesmen, if not by social workers, educators, home-builders, and ministers.

What is the cause of the condition that confronts us? Results come from causes. We need not go far for our answer. The Word of God has been set aside. Evolution has been substituted for the direct creative act of an infinite God. Man's philosophy has taken the place of the "thus saith the Lord." Expediency has taken the place of the direct command. With no restraining command, man has become a "law unto himself." Prisons are full. Lust has taken the place of love. Companionate marriage is taking the place of the marriage vow. Home, in the real sense, is gone. Pleasure is god. Men and women are pleasure mad. The church is but little more than a playhouse; the pulpit a stage. Ministers have become exponents of "social uplift" and "community regeneration" rather than proclaimers of man's fallen nature and his need for regeneration.

What does the situation demand? But one thing will meet the situation. Back to "The Book." It is still "the power of God unto salvation." Its warnings are the needed deterrent, not prison walls. It, alone, shows the way to sobriety, law-observance, equality in government, happy homes, legitimate pleasures, and a powerful, virile church life. The "Book of Books" holds the key. Back to it, and may it become again, "the man of our counsel." It will speak its message and meet the need.

Canton, Ohio.

Signs of the Times

Alva J. McClain

FEARFULLY and Wonderfully Made"

The scientists have, in modern times, made astonishing progress in the field of the various physical sciences. Today, as a result of their work, we know a great deal about the heavens, the earth, the rocks, and the bodies of living organisms. The field has been well mapped and laws have been laid down which seem to be permanent.

Not much progress, however, has been made in the study of the mind of man. This in spite of the fact that psychology has been the most active and popular study of the last generation. The mental life of man has proven to be such a "hard nut" to the investigators that some got discouraged and proceeded to solve the troublesome problem by simply denying that man has any mental life. (This is the method of Eddysm in dealing with the problem of sin.) Such a method is, of course, very convenient and saves the investigator from any further mental strain, or whatever kind of strain it is that a man has who claims to have no "mind." But there is no promise to such a method. If man really has a "mind," as we Christians believe he has, it is certain that this method will never discover it. Denying the existence of what we cannot fully explain is a return to medievalism of the worst kind.

The Almighty has made some things which cannot be fully investigated and explained in a moment. Among these things is the "mind" of man. David, writing by inspiration, knew this much three thousand years ago. "I will give thanks unto thee," he says, "For I am fearfully and wonderfully made" (Psa. 139:14). We often quote the latter part of this verse and omit the first part. The fact that man is so wonderfully made as to defy complete explanation is something to be thankful for, not to get discouraged over. What a deadly dull world this would be if the scientists could finish the task of explaining everything in the Universe. The Universities would have to cease granting doctors' degrees because there would be nothing left to write theses about! About the only thing left to do would be to attend the movies, and that would kill off the really intelligent people.

But we need not worry. Even if the field of physical science should become exhausted, the mental life of man will keep us busy for a long time before we can explain everything about it. The psychological theories of "Behaviorism" only prove (if they prove anything, the remarkable powers of the mind in the realm of imagination. Original fiction is always interesting to be sure, but we ought not forget that it is fiction. And some day the psychologists, who now seek to explain man's mental life by denying its existence, will be compelled to confess with Job: "I uttered that which I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not" (Job 42:3).

The foregoing lines were inspired by an editorial in the "Morning Oregonian," leading newspaper of Portland, Oregon, where I am writing this material. The editorial is so interesting that I am enclosing it to the Editor hoping he can find room in another part of this week's issue. It is entitled "A place at the feet of Christ."

MURDER without Killing Anybody

Several weeks ago, the Mexican government uncovered a plot against the life of United States Ambassador Dwight W. Morrow. Five men were arrested and confessed that they had planned to blow up the Ambassador's train. On the basis of their confession, the five men were executed by a firing squad.

At first thought, it seems severe to execute men for merely intending to murder, where the intention was not actually carried out. But those who object should remember that the Mexican government, in its judgment, is in exact accord with our Lord's teaching in the so-called Sermon on the Mount. Intention to commit a crime, although never carried out, makes the man guilty of that crime and consequently liable to its penalty. "I say unto you, that everyone that looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart" (Matthew 5:27). This is the Judgment of God.

Some day, when Christ reigns in Person over the nations of the earth, men will be judged according to the provisions of the Sermon on the Mount. Intention to commit crime will constitute guilt and liability to the law's penalty. In the present age this method is seldom practical. The intention is an inner thing which no human process of jurisprudence can infallibly discover, except when it is confessed as in the case I have cited. Hence, we must wait until the intention is carried out in order to discover the criminal. Only the Eye of God can reveal the intention before the act. And when our Lord establishes his perfect kingdom upon the earth, the intentions of men will be uncovered by One who knows what is "in man" (John 2:25).

A Place at the Feet of Christ

(Editorial from the Morning Oregonian, of Portland, and selected by A. J. McClain. See his "Signs of the Times" this week.—Editor.)

One of the world's leading figures in the vexing field of the social sciences, Dr. Alfred Adler of Vienna, will be in the United States next fall to conduct a series of researches, with Columbia university, New York City, as his headquarters. He is the man credited with the "discovery" of inferiority and superiority complexes and so catchy are his phrases that they have become common in tea-party patter and in the conversation of shop girls. He will make a study here of the social development of our citizenry as compared to the citizenry of European countries, and attempt to learn something thereby, if any.

Far be it from us to throw one straw in the way of Dr. Adler or the thousands of others engaged, less pretentiously, in the same general endeavor, which endeavor is to make absolute sciences of psychology and sociology. By the pure methods of inductive or deductive reasoning, or by the method in vogue in the absolute sciences, that of wholesale experiment, they seek to lay down immutable laws for individual and mass minds. Perhaps one day they will succeed—and even if they make but one law for one short line of human conduct they will have done a great service to mankind—but thus far it is doubtful whether very much advance has been made over Aristotle.

This, no doubt, is lese majeste. Certainly the statement is set down here only after due pondering of its radicalism. It is no small matter to consider the sociological departments existing in practically every university and college in the modern world, and the students working outside of these institutions, and make the sweeping allegations that they have contributed nothing of major importance to the science of life. Yet while the existence of man was being changed in a thousand respects by discoveries in mechanics, chemistry and bacteriology, the inner being remained darkly mysterious. The names of modern inventors stand out far above the names of the ancients, but the names of the philosophers of hundreds and thousands of years ago are still written larger across the sky of history than the names of the wise men of our own age.

In fact, in the classrooms of today the professors have succeeded in little except giving names to traits long recognized. Our grandmothers did not know that they had "complexes," "inhibitions" and the like—under those names. They knew they had them just the same. All the fo-dol of psychoanalysis is as old as human thought. Freud simply gave a name to it and founded a school. The schools of thought have multiplied and vanished like houses of sand, from Babylon to Geneva. None has yet been absolute, and the thinkers of today seem engaged largely upon the refinement of old ideas rather than the development of new ones.

Surely in the realm of the mind there is a steam engine to be invented, electricity to be chained, a ship to be flown in the air and another to be sailed under the sea, bacteria to be conquered, and antiseptic methods to be discovered. When psychology and sociology have caught up with mechanical development we shall have a world to which we can point with pride. But we are often discouraged about the outlook for the next few years, seeing that the famous Dr. Adler and the almost equally famous American, John Broadus Watson, are now engaged, to the exclusion of almost everything else, on a problem that does not seem

Lengthening the Average Pastoral Term

The time of year is upon us when the customary labor turnover in the ministry is beginning to take place. We offer a word upon this timely topic not to censure any pastor or church desiring such a change, but to point out the fallacy of supposing that such frequent changing is either desirable or inevitable. There is not much need of arguing the case with the ministers any more, for there are very few who do not realize the importance of, and personally yearn for, a lengthening of the average pastoral term. And among the laity there is no small number who are beginning to be convinced of the wisdom of longer pastorates. As a result of this two-fold awakening, the number of longer and successful pastorates is increasing steadily, which is a fact for our encouragement.

Notwithstanding the growing sentiment in this direction, we are faced with the fact that the average length of the pastoral term is still disappointingly short. "The average clergyman in America," declares Rev. Orvis F. Jordan in Plain Talk Magazine, "stays a little more than two years on a job." Dr. Jordan, who is pastor of the Community Church, Park Ridge, Illinois, says that there is a greater labor turnover in the ministry today than in any other of the learned professions. He has in mind not merely the changing of pastorates, but the leaving of denominations also, and the leaving of the ministry for business and teaching. But our concern is the unusually short stay the average pastor makes in a particular field, which is working so much to the disadvantage of both pastor and people.

These frequent changes are a waste of time and energy, in the loss of which both pastor and people share alike. There are still not a few churches which cling because of custom to a pastoral term so short that the pastor barely has time to get acquainted when he is required to move on. And there are pastors who have yielded so readily to the demand of custom to move on that they seem to have fallen into the moving habit, and their ministry has been little more than a succession of packing and unpacking of household goods and of getting acquainted with new fields. They have been little more than itinerating preachers and consequently have suffered a grievous loss and experienced a disappointing lack of accomplishment.

The short pastorate works against the formulation and carrying out of a constructive program, one that looks into the future and builds for the future in the most substantial and permanent way. Each year's program is likely to be disjoined with what has gone before and what may follow. The pastor will want to make a showing during his stay on the field; he will want to produce some evidences of progress that can be seen and tabulated, and his time being short, he will be strongly tempted to place the emphasis on that which will bring quickest results. And work of a type that requires more patient and persistent effort and yields slower fruitage will be neglected, though it be the ground-work that is most necessary to the church's long future. But even if the pastor does not yield to the temptation to work for the quickest and biggest showing, the short term militates against the success of a connected, far-reaching building program. The long pastorate is conducive, if not necessary, to the tying of the efforts and plans of the years together into a coherent whole that makes for the church's most permanent good.

The short pastorate hinders the accumulation of a rich fund of pastoral experience, and of knowledge of individuals and of understanding of the community, on which fund one can draw for effective service and which naturally gives one a place of undisputed leadership in the community. A pastor's experience in a community is invested capital, and it is sheer wastefulness to cause it to be withdrawn by an untimely change of pastors.

The short pastorate prevents the building up of an intimate knowledge on the part of pastor and people each of the other, which makes for mutual understanding, harmony and smoothness of cooperation. Not infrequently a church's first or early impressions of a minister have been somewhat disappointing, but when by patience and time they came to understand him and became accustomed to his ways and methods, they were well pleased and developed an attachment for him. People can often learn to work together and become quite congenial, even in the face of some differences, if they have the mind to do so, and especially if they allow themselves to be much with each other.

The short pastorate tends to deny the pastor the privilege of enriching his life and ministry with a host of beautiful friendships and strong attachments such as are made by a pastorate of many years, during which time he has had opportunity of sharing with practically all of his parishioners some of their highest and most significant joys and their deepest and most severely testing sorrows. Such attachments mean more to the life of the minister than all material rewards, and more to the vitalizing of his message than all his training.

And finally, the short pastorate is economically wasteful. Moving is expensive and every distance he covers stretches his meager salary to the breaking point. It is good for pastors to ask churches to cover, or at least to share, their moving expenses; it helps the people to understand what it means to be continually on the move from town to town. Possibly nothing will bring the membership so quickly to realize the folly of this too frequent labor turnover in the ministry as being required to help pay the cost of it. (Some reasons why and some ways of avoiding it will be suggested in a later editorial.)

Movies Hamstringing the Public

It has been apparent to us for some time that Mr. Will Hays' function as head of the great movie organization of the country is to protect the movie industry against the public rather than to make the movie safe and clean for the people, and a non-conformist Dunker editor should take to himself no special credit for having spoken out about it, as it required no special courage. But it is reassuring and worthy of mention when the editor of "The Churchman," organ of the Protestant Episcopal church, writes boldly and plainly his opinion of Mr. Hays, calling him a "window dresser" for the films. He has a "gift for pious lamentation," says our contemporary, and uses "his sobbing piety to hamstring the public." We quote further:

Certainly the church journals have carried on no organized propaganda against the movies. They are willing, like other groups in America, to accept the statement of the motion picture industry that Will Hays has been employed to "clean up the movies." The editors are under not the slightest illusion that Mr. Hays has done so.

The Churchman is opposed to censorship on principle. The motion picture industry is opposed to censorship because of box office proba. It fears a dollar-and-cents fear, which is always repulsive. In spite of the liberal sentiment in the churches, however, the motion picture industry is going to get censorship, and real censorship, if it doesn't stop hamstringing the public.

The Evangelist is not opposed to censorship of the movies, as is this noble Episcopal organ. We believe it is right in principle and necessary to the protection of public morals. So powerful an institution so thoroughly commercialized cannot be trusted to wield unguarded so mighty an instrument as the motion picture for the moulding of the ideals of our nation.

There are those who pride themselves on their honesty and would not think for a moment of misappropriating funds entrusted to their care, but are able without any apparent compunctions of conscience to use the Lord's tithe for private purposes.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

If you have not received your portion of National Conference credentials, write immediately to Brother O. C. Starn, Gratis, Ohio, who is conference secretary.

The church at Grafton, West Virginia, has recently enjoyed a season of refreshing under the preaching of Brother H. W. Koontz of Masontown, Pennsylvania. As a result twelve were added to the church by baptism and three by relation, and also the morale of the church has been greatly strengthened. The Grafton Brethren are without the services of a pastor, and it seems that some arrangement ought to be made to take care of these people.

Brother W. R. Deeter's report of the work at Carleton, Nebraska, indicates the existence of a healthy condition and a persevering spirit. The various departments, as well as the pastor, are active, and when people are active they usually forget their differences and progress is the result. Three have been received into church membership since last report, making eighteen additions since the present pastor took charge.

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the churches at Vinco and Mundy's Corner in Pennsylvania, reports a successful meeting at Vinco with Brother C. H. Ashman as evangelist and resulting in fifteen additions to the church. At Mundy's Corner a meeting conducted by the pastor resulted in six additions. We are glad to note that there is a splendid fraternal spirit existing between our people and the Church of the Brethren at this place.

Our good friends at Lost Creek, Kentucky, celebrated "The Fourth" by having the Governor of Kentucky present for an address, who, after he was gone, wrote back in quite complimentary terms concerning the work they are doing there. Brother G. E. Drushal presents the strategic location and other arguments for the continued support of Riverside Institute. He says they could use a truck there to good advantage, if some one in the brotherhood has one not in use and would care to have it put in service for the Lord.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey, who is back from a week spent at Shipshewana Lake, is more enthusiastic than ever about the young people's camp which has been conducted there for several years. He says this was the best year yet. Prof. R. R. Haun, who has been one of the instructors at the camp from its beginning, is also highly pleased with the success of the project. Doubtless we shall hear more about it and the Bible Conference now going on, from some one delegated to make the report.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Elder in charge of the Dayton church in the interim of the leaving of Dr. Beachler and the coming of Rev. R. D. Barnard, says the church continues to make advancement. Several members have recently been added by baptism and by letter, and a revision of the church roll is being effected. Brother Gearhart also states that services have been resumed at the Fairview church near Washington C. H., though their numbers have been greatly depleted.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, our Business Manager, offers an inducement to special effort in behalf of new and renewed Evangelistic subscriptions. We hope many Evangelist friends will take an interest in extending the voice of our church paper, not merely for the sake of a premium, which is perfectly legitimate, but also for the sake of the good they may do thereby. We have been receiving some very favorable comment on the Evangelist, and we hope our church leaders will seek to enlarge its field of influence. The progress of the church largely depends on it.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, reports the receipts for that work for the period of March 1 to June 30. There are some indications of splendid support, and possibly that kind of support is even more wide-spread than appears on the surface, when we consider the number of churches where the acute farm situation is felt. But we are informed by Brother Gearhart's notice elsewhere that the Home Board is likely to be a thousand dollars short of their needs to meet the budget for the year. Nothing but the most absolute necessity should cause any church to fail to do its duty to Home Missions, for this is the point of most urgent advancement right now.

Dr. W. S. Bell gives another report this week of his travels in behalf of College Endowment. He found some loyal friends of the college in Kansas City, where he picked up $300.00 in gifts and in Iowa at Udell and Pleasant Grove he added enough to make an addition of $376.00 to the Endowment Fund. The total figure is now $213,262.20. Brother Bell again urges the importance of the church taking some steps to care for our isolated members and thus avoid much of the heavy loss numerically and financially to which our church has been subjected. Our next Conference ought to consider it.

From the Field Council of our Kentucky missions comes an expression of appreciation of the work of Brother and Sister Fred V. Kinzie, who spent the first five years of their ministry at Krypton and were very successful in building up the Lord's work in that community. Their sacrificial service was an inspiration to their fellow workers. The Lord continues to bless his work there under the direction of Sister Grace P. Srack and her associates, as she wrote in a not accompanying the resolutions. These resolutions are appropos the splendid letter which Brother Kinzie writes this week from his new field of labor at Harrah, Washington. The Kinzies had a most enjoyable trip by auto through some of God's most beautiful country on their way to Washington, where they are now well settled in their work, and well received by the people.

President Jacobs reports fifty-eight graduates at the mid-summer commencement exercises of Ashland College, five of whom received the bachelor's degree. There were 337 in attendance during the first term, which, as Dr. Jacobs remarks, makes Ashland one of Ohio's major summer schools. A most commendable type of college loyalty is shown by these summer students as evidenced by the fact that the graduating class made a gift of $1,200.00 to the Endowment Fund. The steadily increasing size of the school is pressing strongly upon the church the urgent need of a new chapel for the student body. Prof. Jacobs reports the receipt of $1,000.00 recently from an unnamed donor. If an epidemic of such spontaneous giving should seize the brotherhood, and the community of Ashland, perhaps the new chapel would soon be forthcoming.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

The man who has no place for mystery in religion, has no sense of his own limitations.

The finest friendship is built on qualities of personal worth mutually discerned.

The man who is self-willed cannot be God-led until he sinks his will into the will of God.

God commands men to do many things that go against human nature, but he requires nothing that is unreasonable.

The man who does not believe in the possibility of miracles has no God worth believing in.

God's promises are not for one age and for one people only, but for all ages and for all people, and their fulfillment is being continually realized.

The hardest battle any man has to face—that of gaining the victory over self—is too difficult to achieve single-handed; it can only be accomplished by the empowering grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

When Paul said, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day," he struck the rock-bottom argument for the validity of our religion, for no proof is so unassailable as a deep and vital personal religious experience.

The Trinity of Triumph

By Daniel A. Poling, D.D., LL.D., President International Society of Christian Endeavor

(Substance of address at opening of International Christian Endeavor Convention at Kansas City, Missouri, Wednesday evening, July 3, 1929)

The thirty-second International Convention of the Christian Endeavor movement opens under auspicious circumstances. The report of our General Secretary, Mr. E. P. Gates, will reveal progress, definite and in some respects quite remarkable, along all lines and in every department. Our correspondence from overseas indicates that the work in America but reflects the state of Christian Endeavor abroad. The next World's Convention is to be held in Berlin one year from this month. We shall then be rapidly approaching our Fiftieth Anniversary, our Golden Jubilee.

The problems we face—and there are problems—are problems of progress. If we are as true to the principles of this movement as were those we follow, the program of Christian Endeavor has an expanding future. Her genius in adaptability as well as in direct service commands her now, as perhaps never before, to the individual church. We believe that her response to both denominational leadership and denominational control, with the world-wide Christian fellowship and the united Christian service which are her peculiar glory, have brought her to the kingdom for such a time as this.

Crusade with Christ

At the Cleveland International Convention two years ago Christian Endeavor gave to the youth of the whole church the Crusade with Christ. It is estimated that more than ten million young persons in more than forty associated groups are now united in this great enterprise. The Crusade with Christ has already done something to lift "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God" out of the realm of poetic fancy.

During the recent Lenten period more than ten thousand Easter sunrise services were conducted by young people under the Crusade auspices. A National Loyalty Sunday was observed, and the enthusiasm of young people was concentrated upon a national election so as to raise the constitution and the law above partisan politics.

The Crusade with Christ has materially affected the attitude of adults toward young people. Here we have made just a beginning, but a real beginning. We hold that youth are as intrinsically fine as they have ever been and that the Christian challenge is not only their hope of salvation, but their way to larger living. In the Crusade with Christ this challenge is delivered with directness and power.

Fifteen men and women, serving without remuneration, have comprised the General Committee of the Crusade. The total expense incurred has been pitifully small, but they have materially affected the atmosphere surrounding denominational relationships and the attitude of young men and women toward the world-wide ministry of Jesus Christ.

What of the future? We present the Crusade with Christ tonight as the imperative of the hour and as the challenge for the next two years. In its program we find the sufficient answer to the question of both the individual Endeavorer and the organization.

Trinity of Triumph

Evangelism, citizenship, and peace—this is the trinity of triumph. Personalized in the words of Mr. Fred W. Ramsey, they bring home to the heart of each of us the driving dynamic, "Myself, my country, and my world." Again evangelism is first—this profound, this timeless challenge to personal religion and for personal rightness, this clear call to personal devotion and personal allegiance. One man can change a community; one woman can revolutionize a city; but it must be a new man and a new woman. The new world, with its Christianized social order, waits forever on these. Here lies the supreme business of Christian Endeavor; for here is the fundamental reason for Christianity itself. To lead young people to Jesus Christ, to strengthen and train them in the Christian life, to relate them definitely to the service of Christ and his cause—thus we express the fundamental business of our Society, which is Christian first, preeminently, and always!

During the next two years it shall be our purpose to cooperate with all communions associated in the Christian Endeavor movement in order that Christian missions may feel a new tide of life flowing from Christian youth. Our conventions shall carry an even stronger evangelical emphasis. The time has come again when the student generation should be brought more definitely face to face with the world's need—the need that cannot be met at any station short of Calvary.

This International Convention is at one with the Jerusalem message. The work of the missionary may have changed. His place in the life of the peoples to whom he goes may be different now from what it was a generation ago, but the vital business of the missionary has not changed. While ancient civilizations are in the travail pains of a new birth and while indigenous churches rise through social convulsions, the missionary is needed as never before, needed to counsel and to inspire, as well as to teach and direct.

From Christian Endeavor thousands of young persons have gone to the missionary field at home and abroad. Tonight let us join our lives to the greater missionary task ahead. Let this be at the heart of our passion and program for evangelism.

To make our missionary purpose definite and the plan practical, we propose a special covenant declaration. We shall ask this Convention to give the declaration its first public indorsement.

A unique feature of the Crusade with Christ is this: That each church, each denomination or communion, may make the Crusade peculiarly its own. There are no restrictions as to organized procedure. The Crusade with Christ is at once the crusade of the particular organization, while its unity is a unity of spirit in a common cause. Christian Endeavor has only the profound joy of its origin and of a place with all others in its plan.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling

Christian Endeavor and Organic Union

As to organic unity, Christian Endeavor calls the youth of the whole church to support the commissions on union that have been authorized by practically every denomination and communion. Our movement is in itself a commission for unity—spiritual unity first, that unity which must precede and accompany any organic plan. Christian Endeavor is also a vital factor in bringing about those physical contacts and organizational relationships that open and prepare the way for organic union.

But it is in our own field, the field of fellowship and co-operation, that we shall continue to operate. Our functional life is not without and apart from the church; it is within the churches in which our societies are established and to which we belong. Christian Endeavor is not a young people's church. Christian Endeavor is a part of the church; Christian Endeavor is a youth agency of the church, loyal to the church and responsible to the church. It is for this reason that Christian Endeavor does not have a special commission on church union. It is for this reason that we serve the great principle and ideal of union at the call and under the leadership of our denominations. Such a gathering as this is the outward and visible expression of the spirit that in God's own time shall bring to pass the fulfillment of Christ's prayer that his children should be one. To this glorious consummation youth will bring increasingly the enthusiasm and faith that dispute with schism and that are impatient with delay.

Citizenship

We present at this Convention the beginning of a new citizenship library. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" is the basis of every great educational enterprise of the Christian church. We shall strive to discharge our trust more effectually in the future than we ever have discharged it in the past.

Fundamentally the Christian Endeavor Society is in its citizenship emphasis a Christian citizenship group.

While I shall allow the Convention itself to unfold the details of our program, I do particularly call your attention to the fact that we have a responsibility for law-observance and law-enforcement all our own. We dare not lightly regard the implications of our slogan of eighteen years ago, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." By our private practice and public testimony we must challenge lawlessness. We must throw our whole influence behind the Government and in support of the Constitution and law. The words "observance" and "enforcement" have for us a special significance. The initiation of the President of the United States does not fall upon deaf ears to-night. We shall call you to personal, definite commitment.

"Evangelism, citizenship, and peace"—aye, and let me remind you that not only in evangelism, but in citizenship and in the campaign for world peace, the missionary program of Christian Endeavor finds its expression. I think of the message of Christian missions as strengthening us for each of these vital tasks, and the spirit, the veritable miracle of missions, as binding the tasks into one.

World Peace

With us world peace can never be an empty phrase. We do not forget that it was our beloved founder, Francis E. Clark, who at the New York International Convention in 1921 launched the Christian Endeavor Crusade for a Warless World. Our field is the world. Our associates are of all nations and all tongues. Our program for more than two generations has carried us, in the flesh as in the spirit, to the ends of the earth. We shall never escape the horror that brought Christian Endeavorers face to face upon the field of battle in bloody throes of war. To-night our vow to have a part in ending war comprehends at once the passion of a personal Christian testimony and the fervor of a fellowship that has made of the world a Christian Endeavor community. We are of one faith, one tongue, one objective, and we have a single High Command. "For Christ and the Church" is more than a motto. It is a program for service and the expression of personal dedication.

But, aside from all else that we may do through our individual societies and our unions, by means of study-courses and the conferences and conventions that are to be held in half a hundred countries in all quarters of the globe, let us tonight launch a campaign that shall be a veritable crusade, a crusade more significant than any that ever swept forward towards the sepulcher of Christ, a crusade to bring the young people of the world first to think peace and then so to practice peace that nations shall learn war no more forever.

We Launch a World Movement

Let us launch a world-wide movement to make prompt and effective use of that most promising instrument for peace, peace among all peoples—that most promising instrument yet devised by human statesmanship. Let us request the Executive Committee of the International Society of Christian Endeavor to bring our action to the attention of all national Christian Endeavor Unions. Let us set in motion a program that shall call to a common purpose and plan Christian Endeavorers of every land, of every race, and of every tongue. The providential instrument of this advance is the Pact of Paris, which we tonight rechristen the Pact of Peace.

This Pact has changed completely the psychology and the basis of the crusade for a warless world. Now youth campaigns for peace as a crusade of national honor. Our banners in North America are not the flags of "pacifism"; they are the flags of our countries—the Union Jack, the Stars and Stripes, and the banner of Mexico.

Yesterday we strove against age-old traditions to overcome precedents and to change law. Now we strive to vindicate national honor, to make law effective, and that our countries shall not be found either in failure or in falsehood. Surely God is in this matter.

Every national Christian Endeavor organization, particularly every national society in the countries of the sixty sovereign powers ratifying the Pact, may unite with us, as we unite with them, in this new war to end war.

Christian Endeavor formally accepts the Pact of Peace. We take it in full earnest. To it we give our indorsement. With it we pledge our personal—aye, and our Christian Endeavor—honor. It is our individual and collective declaration of faith. It is equally our platform of principle and our field of action. It renounces armed conflict as a means for settling all differences between the high contracting nations. By it we are authoritatively committed to the proposition that henceforth all questions between nations, all disagreements, shall be settled by conference and arbitration; that there shall never come again any dispute that shall not be submitted to a proper tribunal for peaceful adjudication. The Pact outlaws war forever. It is British. It is German. It is French. It is American. It is the covenant of each and of all. It is Christian Endeavor!

Finally, from this Pact of Peace and as the next step towards organizing the machinery of peace, let us move forward to the World Court. Let us enter here without delay.

I call you to a threefold covenant which is at once a personal vow and a world program.

The Burning of the Magical Books

By Rev. C. R. Sensenbaugh

Text: Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men; and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.—Acts 19:19.

The scene of this ardent annihilation was in Ephesus, an ancient and celebrated city of Asia Minor. The classic celebrity of Phidias and his Ionic architectural masterpiece, "The Temple of Diana," contributed chiefly to the arousal of Ephesian interest. This magnificent structure ranked as one of the seven wonders of the world. It was erected to confer reverence and honor upon the goddess, "Diana of the Ephesians." The inhabitants of Ephesus were greatly addicted to the study and practice of curious arts, magic and sorcery. Even though these superstitious customs prevailed, the two-edged Pauline Gospel altered their religious conception and experience, wielded an extensive influence, and yielded a very flourishing church as the reward for his untiring efforts.

Certain Jews were traveling the country as exorcistic persons, who boastfully professed to be able to expel evil spirits. These intentionally employed the name of the Lord Jesus in their endeavors to eject demons, having observed with what striking success his name was utilized by Paul in his expulsion. Seven men endeavored to cast out a demon from an individual, and the spirit answered, "Jesus I know, Paul I know, but who are ye?" Thus the demon professed itself ready to submit to the requests of Jesus and Paul, but not to the exorcists. Incidentally the man possessing the spirit received supernatural strength, so that he leaped upon the seven magicians, overcoming and forcing them to flee out of the house naked and wounded. This was quickly noised abroad and produced quite an effect in favor of Paul and his co-workers. As the ultimate result the Ephesians were saturated with Godly fear, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

These Ephesians really exhibited striking evidence of their conversion. In the first place they changed their reading matter. They manifested extreme detestation toward their former volumes of magic and superstition. There could not have been any better evidence of the reality of their conversion than was given by their committing these enchanted volumes to the flames. They thus revealed a thorough consciousness of the unlawfulness of the arts, of which the discarded volumes treated, and an utter abhorrence to the practices therein described. It is always a logical proof of the genuineness and the sincerity of the whole conversion process, when anyone proves that the things, in which he once took delight, are regarded by him with hatred and aversion. A real Christian should become "a new creature." Light and darkness are no more opposed to each other than is the state existing before conversion and that after. Although you may perhaps be doubtful as to the specific time of your conversion, "What you are and what you once were," is the significant consideration. Individuals who have experienced "the new birth," are to hate what they once loved, and to love what they once hated.

This age is imbued with books of magic. The detriment is done by the failure to burn them. Have you burned your books of magic? We do not accuse you of having, like the Ephesians, practiced the arts of the sorcerer. You do not exercise captivations by enchantment or muttered incantations; but nevertheless you have been in communion with the "God of this world," and have submitted to his illusions and surrendered yourself to his service. We have our books of magic on every hand. What are half the volumes, with which the land is deluged, but volumes which can teach nothing but how to serve the devil better? What treatises on the acquisition of wealth, as though money were the one increase needful; what histories of the ambitious and daring, as though human honor deserved our chief aspirations; what pictures of pleasure, as though earthly gratifications could satisfy our every longing!

The scenes and places of magic are numerous and varied. We have many stages and posts where fallen spirits may be declared the presiding deities. Meditate upon the crowded mart, where Mammon is almost literally worshipped; the gorgeous theater, where the very air is that of corruptness; the more secret haunts of licentiousness; the mirthful gatherings, where the chief object is to forget God; the philosophical, where the chief endeavor is to extol man.

The brilliancy, warmth and glow of the blaze must be aroused and enlarged by sacrificing the books of our own particular art. Collect the admired books, practices and experiences of darkness, superstition and sin, and toss them gladly into the fire. Unless the fire be kindled with them, we may burn volumes, library upon library, and yet not furnish any evidence of conversion. Thousands are favorably disposed to protest against all arts, but their own, and what they delight in and love best. Every individual, physical existence that we most enjoyed, must compose the material to be used in producing the ardor.

This group made a public confession of their sinful procedures, by collecting the books and burning them before all men. They openly proclaimed hatred and adjuration toward the sin which they previously loved and practiced. The public acknowledgment of your sinful state is essential in the acceptance of Christ, and until then, there is no evidence that you are a Child of God.

The books were utterly destroyed to prevent any probability of returning to them. They had their security in view. They might have candidly renounced the arts without rendering them desolate with flames. Lacking the demolishment of them, would keep the persons continually exposed to temptation. In addition, there would be a possibility, that, as soon as the initial animation of religious enthusiasm would become history, there would be the inclination to revert to the curious pamphlets. Many retain their petty idols and procedures very near the boundary, so that the act of sinning by trespassing may be periodically possible. This can readily be accomplished, because Christians possess the tendency to dwell in the land just across the boundary. It is expedient and beneficial for all to strive to move to the land farthest away from the quicksand, which is the character of the land near the boundary. The quicksand is very uncertain and may give way at any time and you will go down with it.

The ex-magicians distrusted their own strength and resolution. They destroyed every temptation by burning the admired sinful past. Have you burned your books of temptation? Do you make a point of shunning what you have discovered to be injurious? Have you given up the associates who encouraged you to sin? Have you ceased to read vicious writings and to look upon base pictures that excite the passions and suggest sinful thought and life? Have you given up the worldly amusements—the theatre with its licentious suggestions and accompaniments; the masquerade and dance with their temptations to evil; the card table with its trial of temper and excitement of the spirit of gambling? Really, have you burned your personal library of evil associations and inducements to guard against the temptation to return to the old life?

These converted exercists had a consideration for the future. They prevented anyone from concentrating upon the magical books later by burning them. The man of the world may be willing to keep earthly riches to himself, but the man of God must be anxious to communicate heavenly things to others. Any person who has been injured by sin, ought to feel inclined to exert all energy to turn or keep others from the same sin. Anyone who was morally harmed by bad company ought to do all in his power to isolate the unwary from evil companions. Contrasted to this, if we have experienced something edifying and good, we ought to broadcast the influence to others likewise. Why not tell others concerning our personal experience with our maker? Our neighbors need our greatest consideration from both the above aspects.

By way of summary, they burned the books to give evidence of their conversion; to manifest detestation toward their contents; to make a public confession of their former sinful state; to prevent any possibility of returning to the study of them and to prevent future meditation upon their contents.

A Few Remarks

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

About a Man

This friend of mine made an automobile journey from coast to coast and return, the object being to "See America First." That in itself is no longer remarkable, but the unusual thing was that he went to church every Sunday while he was on the trip. How many tourists are that loyal to Christ and the church? This is a timely suggestion to all our readers who may be fortunate enough to have a vacation this summer.

About a Woman

For several years this good woman could scarcely see at all because of an affliction of the eyes, but after an operation she can now see very well. Is she happy and thankful? Yes, a thousand times, yes! The remarkable thing is that there are so many people who are spiritually blind and who could be fully cured by a spiritual operation according to the directions in Holy Scripture, but they will not. They choose darkness rather than light. Why are not people as wise and prudent in relation to spiritual things as they are in relation to physical and material things?

About Girls

It is reported that seventeen boys have been taking a course in cooking in a Buffalo High School, and the Albany News remarks that the time is coming soon when no girl will marry a man who cannot cook. Is it coming to that? Let us hope not, for loyalty to the home by the mothers and daughters of America is our country's greatest need. Each high school and college ought to provide a course in home making, taught by one who has made a home.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

COLLEGE STUDENTS AND SELF-SUPPORT

There has been a gradual mounting of expense throughout the world in connection with college education. The children of the rich have easily met these additional expenses, and received the college training. Many without financial backing have felt it impossible, in the face of these conditions, to secure such a training. Others with double faith have gone to college and by outside labor paid their expenses during the college years. According to the Bureau of Education, one-half of the men and one-fourth of the women in the colleges and universities of the United States are, by working, meeting the expenses of their education. According to this report, in a recent school year, over thirty-three million dollars were earned by students. They were employed in a great variety of tasks, including professional and semi-professional work, instruction, publishing, recreation, household, agriculture, automobile repairing, specialty selling, clerical work, food handling and odd jobs. Most colleges and universities maintain an employment office for the aid and direction of such students, and arrange their class schedules to meet the needs of this worthy group. Where the student is physically strong and determined, an opportunity for education is afforded by American colleges.—Religious Telescope.

PROHIBITION'S DEFENSE

After all, prohibition may be defended without hesitation by those who believe in it. Recently we received the following figures concerning its economic value: "Based on the average yearly expenditure of pre-war days, with no allowance for increased consumption or increased prices, $35,919,000,000 would have been spent for alcoholic drink in the last ten years but for prohibition. In the years of 1914, 1915, and 1916, the American people out of their annual average earnings of $34,000,000,000 spent $3,591,000,000, or about ten per cent, for alcoholic drinks. Were it not for prohibition, the people still would be spending ten per cent of their earnings for liquor, which in 1928 would have meant an expenditure of $8,100,000,000. The resulting savings have gone into bank accounts, building and loan societies, stock investments, automobiles, homes, and life insurance."—Western Christian Advocate.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM OF THE HILARIOUS ALUMNI

The newest thing in the field of education is the "alumni college." Lafayette College is announcing what, with pardonable pride, it calls "the first session of the first alumni college in the country," to be held during the week following commencement. It is no secret that academic authorities have often found the returning alumni more or less of a nuisance. The college is glad to have them come, of course. It prizes their loyalty, it desires their continuing interest, and it wants their money. But not infrequently they come apparently to prove to themselves that, though "old grads," they are just as young as they used to be. They reenact, with rather grotesque over-emphasis, the more frivolous features of college life, make much indecorous whoopee, and set a bad example to the young. The college welcomes them—and breathes a sigh of relief when they are gone. The "alumni college" idea is based on the presumption that graduates may desire to be students again for a week, not merely to be rah-rah boys under a handicap of gray hairs, rheumatism, and a thickened waist line. It seems a reasonable hypothesis. It actually is true, in spite of some evidence to the contrary, that one of the principal student activities in college is study, and there are a great many graduates whose memories of college life include the fact that there the birth of permanent intellectual interests took place. To all such the alumni college appeals. There will be regular courses of lectures and round table discussions. The alumni students will be housed in the college dormitories and will eat at the college commons. The whole round of college life will be revived for them. This is a real idea. If it has the success it deserves, the example ought to be widely imitated.—Christian Century.

FIND HOMEMADE LIVER EXTRACT EFFECTIVE AS ANEMIA CURE

A liver extract that will be effective in treating pernicious anemia can be made at home with very little effort, Dr. William B. Castle, and Morris A. Bowie of Harvard University Medical School, have reported to the American Medical Association.

This will prove a great boon to sufferers from this disease who are unable to afford the high price of the commercial liver extracts or of the more palatable calf's liver. Eating half a pound of beef liver a day soon becomes a tiresome ordeal, yet this has been the only chance for life and health for many of the poor who suffer from pernicious anemia.

The domestic extract is as effective as the commercial ones and may be made in the ordinary kitchen by any reasonably intelligent person, the Harvard scientists declared. Only the usual domestic utensils are needed. The cost of beef liver is practically the only cost. The extract is palatable and may be drunk hot or cold with or without salt. It is said to taste something like beef broth.

The process in general consists in grinding the liver, soaking it in cold water, straining, heating and re-straining. The ordinary meat grinder, strainer, enamel pots, glass jars and jelly bags found in most kitchens are the only utensils required. The success of the procedure depends on the care and exactness with which the directions for the various steps in the process are followed. Dr. Castle and Mr. Bowie gave these in detail in their report.

FORMER SALVATION ARMY LEADER DEAD

Gen. William Bramwell Booth, former head of the Salvation Army, died on June 16th. The militant religious leader had celebrated his seventy-third birthday on March 8. His wife and family, with the exception of his daughter, Commissioner Mary, who had shared largely in his work with the army and supported him when he fought to maintain control of it, were with him. The absence of Mary Booth was due to her being in Germany in charge of the army there.—C. M. Elderdice in Methodist Protestant.

SALVATION ARMY ENTERS A HARD FIELD

The Salvation Army is planning to send workers to the famous Devil's Island, the French penal colony in Guiana. According to reports this is "the most hopeless and depraved assemblage of men to be found in the world as well as one of the worst climates in the world." General Higgins, of the Salvation Army, realizes the conditions when he says, "We know we are to deal with fiends and desperadoes and also with mental deficient," but we hope to win them with kindness and helpfulness." Devil's Island will be remembered as the prison of Captain Alfred Dreyfus who was illegally imprisoned there for five years.—The Evangelical Messenger.

The man who loves this world for its shine, may not yet know the secret of God's world. Out of the travail of soul is born the beauty of holiness, over the darkness of night God has spread his coverlet of stars.—Methodist Protestant.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Eph. 2:1-11. The Changed Walk. "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men are," prayed the Pharisee, and his self-righteousness earned the condemnation of Jesus. However, the same words with a slight shift of emphasis make a very acceptable prayer for the Christian: "Lord, I thank THEE that I am not as other men!" It is by no merit of our own that we have left our former ways and no longer desire to walk in them. It is God, who is rich in mercy, that has raised us up and has promised us fellowship with him throughout the ages to come. Let us praise him!

TUESDAY

Eph. 2:12-18. He is Our Peace. Before the atonement, there was Circumcision and Uncircumcision; there could be no fellowship between them. Through faith in Christ, both were reconciled to God, and also to each other. So with our warring sects in Christendom: if they were truly nigh unto Christ, they would find they were nigh unto each other as well. "That they may be one," was our Lord's prayer. God hasten the day when thy children may be one, and the reproach of schisms shall be taken away.

WEDNESDAY

Eph. 2:19-22. An Holy Temple. Our bodies, we are taught, are the temples of the Holy Spirit, and are therefore holy. Just so we read of the Church, which is his body. We are all members or parts of that holy body, which is rendered doubly sacred because our Lord himself is a part thereof. We are "builted together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Grant, our Father, that we may faithfully perform whatever service may be ours as a part of this holy body!

THURSDAY

Eph. 3:1-12. The Wisdom of God. Elsewhere we are taught that the angels have desired to look into these things which have been revealed unto us. The inference of v. 10 is that the hosts of heaven may even have questioned the wisdom of God, but as they see the wonderful workings of grace through the church, his wisdom has been vindicated. May no one, either in heaven or on earth, be able to question the wisdom of God because of failure on our part. Having access with confidence, by the faith of him, let us daily seek for strength and guidance.

FRIDAY

Eph. 3:13-21. All the Fullness of God. That we should ever be filled with all the fullness of God, passes human knowledge. Yet that is his promise to those who KNOW, in a personal, experimental way, the love of Christ. Help us, our Father, being rooted and grounded in love, to comprehend something more of the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of thy love for us all. No good thing wilt thou withhold from thy children, and we shall be filled with all the fullness of God.

SATURDAY

Eph. 4:1-8. Walk Worthy. Whatever else we may do, we cannot walk worthy if we do not keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. A lady who professed to be living the higher life was finding fault with the treatment she had received. She was reminded that the fruit of the Spirit included long-suffering. "I've been long-suffering," she retorted; "I've suffered a long time." May we bear with one another, in the bond of peace, until seventy times seven, even as thou hast borne with us, that we may walk worthy of the high calling that is ours in Christ Jesus.

SUNDAY

Eph. 4:9-16. When he ascended up on high, he led Death captive, and gave gifts unto men; some of these gifts are mentioned in v. 11, others are mentioned throughout the passage. Let us no longer be tossed to and fro, but let us this day praise him in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God.

The Cradle Roll Department

By Hazel A. Lewis

Why does the Sunday school have a Cradle Roll? Sometimes it is looked upon as an opportunity for reaching many homes that would not otherwise be open to the influence of the church. This is undoubtedly the case, but it is not the object of this department. Let us find it in the very first paragraph of the Cradle Roll Standard used by the Sunday school leaders of North America.

"The church and Sunday school may assist in the religious nurture of little children in the home and insure their future membership in the Sunday school."

We have been fairly successful in accomplishing the latter half of this aim, but the first we have almost entirely overlooked. If those six words, "the religious nurture of little children" could be written upon the hearts of Christian leaders everywhere, untold wonders could be accomplished.

There is so much charm and fascination about these babies that it is sometimes possible to do very attractive work without accomplishing the real purpose of the Cradle Roll Department. None of this charm should be lost, but through it all there should be sincere and earnest effort to provide religious influences for the early years of the baby's life. A child may receive religious impressions before he can receive religious instruction. It is quite probable that the former is the more important.

There are at least three elements in successful Cradle Roll work: (1) ideals of Christian nurture; (2) attractive methods and materials; (3) continuous effort.

Since this article is to take its place in manual setting forth equipment and plans, it is quite appropriate that we consider the work of the department from that viewpoint. Whether you are starting a new Cradle Roll, reviving an old one, or simply endeavoring to improve work that is already established, it is necessary to give careful consideration to the question of equipment. This should be frequently renewed, for nothing is so inappropriate to the work with little children as soiled or ugly materials. The church that does not provide a clean, beautiful roll upon which to write these names, and the other necessary equipment in good condition, does not presage careful provision for the future religious instruction of these little children.

The organization of the Cradle Roll may be very simple. In small schools, a superintendent may be the only officer necessary. In other cases, assistants or visitors may be necessary, and sometimes girls and boys are called into service as "big sisters" and messengers. As many workers should be enlisted as the work requires, but the organization should not be allowed to become unwieldy for the sake of elaborateness.

Could anything be more delightful than this Rosebud Series of Cradle Roll materials? (See pages 22-26.) It expresses the unfolding possibilities of childhood, the pink and white freshness of a baby's hand waiting to be placed in that of its friends, and it is the very spirit of childhood itself.

The first equipment which the Cradle Roll superintendent will need will be enough invitation cards to meet the needs for at least three months. Attached to this card is a blank to be filled in by the parents and returned to the Cradle Roll superintendent. These may be kept and serve as the enrollment of the department, although some superintendents prefer to keep the names in a record book. It is well to have an alphabetical list, giving also the addresses and other information, and to have in addition, a birthday list by months and dates for easy reference in sending out greetings. Perhaps some other member of the Sunday school or one of the assistants will make the first call and leave the invitation card, but it is always best for the Cradle Roll superintendent herself, to follow this with a call, making the acquaintance of the mother, if she has not known her previously, and getting into personal touch with the home interests. Very soon after the application card is received, the Cradle Roll certificate should be sent or taken to the home. This is worthy of framing and has great significance in that it indicates a vital connection between that home and the church.

Somewhere in the church, possibly in the Primary room, should be the Wall Roll. To this are added from time to time the names of the babies as they become members of the Cradle Roll, the names being written on the attractive Rosebud cards and attached with ribbon. It would be well to move this Wall Roll into various parts of the church building, for it is quite probable that the members of the men's and women's classes might be very much interested in the names it contains. It is also well to renew this Wall Roll from time to time. Some schools follow the plan of having a new one every year, filing the old one away. On the annual Cradle Roll Day or Reception, these various Wall Rolls may be put in place and it will be a matter of much interest to read the names on the old rolls.

When a child is reported as removed for any cause, the fact and date should be noted on the card bearing his name, as well as in the record book of the Cradle Roll superintendent. It is a good plan to take down the Wall Roll during the week and put it away, for it becomes very much soiled by hanging week after week upon the walls. Of course there are many special occasions beside the Sunday school service when the roll can be put in place.

When new names are added to the Cradle Roll, it is well to give special observance to this fact. This may be done in the Primary Department or in the main assembly of the school. In some schools the service is observed in the Primary Department whenever the names are added, but once each quarter all the Cradle Roll members are honored in a service with the older school. The Beginners children are too young to appreciate such a service and it is best to relate the work more closely to the Primary Department. A suggested service in this connection may be found in "Ways of Working" by Daisy D. Stephenson.

One of the most interesting things connected with every baby's life, is his first birthday. In fact, he has many birthdays when he is very young. Who has not witnessed the proud happiness of the household when the baby is "six weeks old today?" But when he attains the dignity of one year, it is an important occasion, indeed.

The Cradle Roll superintendent must be very sure that the birthday card she sends arrives at the right time. Cards for different ages are to be found in this attractive Rosebud Series. These charming verses and dainty cards mean much to the mother and will be cherished by the child in the years to come. If the baby can be brought to the Sunday school at a time near his birthday, this fact may be recognized in a most simple, but charming way. See suggested service, in "Ways of Working."

If the Cradle Roll is to really have a share in the religious nurture of these little children, it must find some way by which the mother can be helped to a realization of this great opportunity. Some mothers can be reached only through the call made in the home, but the Cradle Roll superintendent should be a messenger of helpfulness there. She should have a few books which she can lend to the mothers and the following are perhaps the best for this purpose:

"The Dawn of Religion in the Mind of a Child," Mumford.

"A Study of Child Nature," Harrison.

"Children's Rights," Wiggins.

"As the Twig is Bent," Cheney.

The Cradle Roll superintendent should be very familiar with the contents of these books and sometimes she will suggest only one chapter or a special incident in the book, though it is quite likely when the mother has read this, she will wish to read more. Magazine articles may be clipped and bound in heavy paper and these may also form a little circulating library. The right suggestion at the right time may be a turning point in the child's life.

If the mothers can be brought together in informal meetings frequently or regularly, at least occasionally, they will be very helpful to each other. It is well to have two or three of the Cradle Roll mothers serve as a committee on program and arrangements, together with the Cradle Roll superintendent. In addition to interesting topics for discussion, the review of books and chapters, stories for very little children may be told, finger games taught, and simple songs learned by the mothers.

Some of these meetings may be informal parties when provision is made for both babies and mothers. Happy suggestions for babies, including the attractive invitation and other plans, at different seasons of the year may be found in "Ways of Working." These may be very simple occasions, without confusion or complexity of plans, for neither the baby nor his mother must be made tired or nervous.

There are special days during the year when the Cradle Roll babies should be invited (with their mothers and fathers) to attend the session of the school. Attractive stationery and cleverly worded invitations will help to bring this about.

The regular Promotion Day of the Bible school is usually the last Sunday in September. The children will be promoted who are four years old or will be that age within six months.

A brief and simple service should mark their entrance to the Beginners' Department.

The question of finances sometimes comes up in connection with the work of the Cradle Roll Department. It would seem that the church, through the Sunday school, should provide all of the necessary equipment and materials. If the mothers wish to make an offering of any kind, they may be given an opportunity to do so, but this should be made a very inconspicuous part of the work.—Taken from "The Workers' Manual," Page 18, Revised Edition, 1929, by Ida M. Irvin—Christian Board of Publication.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for July 28)

The Story of Daniel

Scripture Lesson—Dan. 1:1-21; 2:13-24; 4:19; 7:28; 8:15-18; 9:20-23; 10:1-19; 12:9.

Printed Text—Dan. 1:1-4, 19, 20; 2:17-24.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 46.

Golden Text—They that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.—Dan. 12:3.

Introductory Note

Ezekiel the priest, had not yet begun prophesying to the poor captives in Babylon, when Daniel a young prince begins to officiate as a prophet at court in Babylon, and continued about 70 years. He was early famous for wisdom and piety, chs. 1 and 2; mentioned twice by Ezekiel, 28:3; 14:14, 20, Daniel was one of the first who were carried to Babylon, and lived to see its deliverance. These dates may be helpful in the study of the lesson: Daniel taken into exile, B. C. 605. Daniel interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan. 2.) B. C. 603. Jerusalem burned B. C. 586. Daniel's vision of the four beasts, B. C. 541, of the ram, B. C. 539. Daniel's last vision, B. C. 536.

The Object of the Book of Daniel

"The Book is not intended to give an account of the life of Daniel. It gives neither his lineage, nor his age, and recounts but a few of the events of his long career. Nor is it meant to give a record of the history of Israel during the exile, nor even of the captivity in Babylon. Its purpose is to show how by his providential guidance, his miraculous interventions, his foreknowledge and almighty power, the God of heaven controls and directs the forces of nature and the history of nations, the lives of Hebrew captives and of the mightiest of kings of the earth, for the accomplishment of his divine and beneficent plans for his servants and people."—Prof. R. Dick Wilson. "One of the most impressive features of the Book is its utter confidence in God and its refusal to appeal to the sword (Ps. 149:6). It counsels to patience (Dan. 12:12). Without human hands, God's kingdom comes (Dan. 2:34), and his enemies are destroyed (Dan. 8:25). In the most skilful way, the Book reaches its splendid climax. It moves steadily on, from a distant past in which God's servants had been rewarded and his enemies crushed, down through the centuries in which successive empires were all unconsciously working out his predetermined plan, and on to the darkest days in history—so dark, because the glorious and everlasting kingdom of God was so soon to dawn."—Prof. John Edgar McFayden.

The first six chapters are descriptive of six successive conflicts between the children of God and their heathen captors, with as many conquests on the part of believers in Jehovah over even the wise men and the mighty men, the magi and kings of the east. The other six chapters are of prophecy, with as many visions of future events given, specially to Daniel as one that was greatly beloved, and constitute the apocalypse (Revelation of the O. T.)

Lessons from Daniel

We have in ch. 1, the first of these six conflicts which occupy the first half of the book, and it is no accident that the primary conflict is that which is waged with the flesh.—Pierson. In the practice of temperance (i. e., total abstinence from intoxicants) we see what was the foundation of his character and the traits which made him so grand a man in his fidelity to his God and his conscience.—Sandham. Even our Lord Jesus quotes him as a "prophet." Mt. 24:15; Da. 9:27.—Green. Temptations of young people today are not severer than those of Daniel. A more discouraging, subtle, dangerous environment than his cannot be conceived of.—V. Happy would it be for the world, if all the boys and girls who study Daniel's example would follow it, and resolve that "I like" shall always wait upon "I choose." Resolve to live without the king's dainties, and determine only to eat and drink in such quantities and of such quality as will help to make the best output of life.—Meyer. Many persons doubtless injure themselves by the use of strong tea and coffee. In some instances these things lead up to stronger stimulants, tobacco and snuff, and thence to beer and whiskey. Cigarettes and tobacco in every form should be shunned as one would shun vipers. The example and influence of day-school teachers, Sunday school teachers, parents, preachers and all men, should be enlisted against tobacco in every form. The grace of God should be invoked that the Spirit may triumph over the flesh. By prayer and living in the Spirit men may be conquerors, and "more than conquerors." Ro. 8:37.—Vella. Parents who are trying to save their boys from the tobacco habit and rescue others already in its grip can use the following to some purpose. "The Popular Science Monthly"—a magazine devoted, as its name indicates, to scientific questions has been investigating the tobacco question in relation to education and general health. In its findings it says that of the lowest marks 71 per cent are smokers with 29 per cent nonsmokers. In the highest marks 69 per cent of the boys do not smoke and 31 per cent do. When it comes to conditions and failures, the smokers furnish twice as many as the nonsmokers. When it comes to physical tests in the "tryouts" for football squad, only half as many are successful who use tobacco as those who do not. In otherwise able-bodied men smoking causes a loss of lung capacity amounting to 10 per cent. Still further, the report says: "Smoking is invariably associated with low scholarship." Not that all smokers are poor scholars (for the figures quoted prove differently), but all boys low in scholar-grade smoke. For parents to bring such facts before their intelligent boys is to make a decided and decisive impression on some. It certainly is worth another try with all, especially where the practice has not begun.—Christian Witness.

The Mission of a Captive

"This interpreter was found in unexpected places, as all interpreters are found. Said Arioch, 'I have found a man of the captives of Judah.' That is God's inscrutable way. It was not a brother-king that told Nebuchadnezzar what had troubled him; nor was it some man that drove to the king's house in a chariot of gold, with steeds of fire, whose scarlet nostrils were distended as if in pride that they were called upon to enter such lofty service: it was a man among the captives of Judah. How wondrously events touch and interrelate in life! Thus captivity is made true freedom, and thus men far from home established a second nativity, and thus persons who suppose themselves to be instances of humiliation find that those circumstances are but a stairway up to primacy, to sovereignty."

IS YOUR ROLL-CALL RECORD RIGHT?

For Society Secretaries

If you have the right system to begin with, you can keep an exact record of the attendance of the members at the monthly consecration meeting, the record showing not only the attendance of each individual member of the society, but also number of members present, visitors present, and the total attendance each night.

A practical book for this purpose is "Christian Endeavor Roll-Call and Record of Attendance." It is sold by the International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, at $1. It is ruled so that all the information mentioned above is given at a glance. Every secretary should have a copy. When the record is kept in this way year after year, the books become valuable, because attendance and performance can be compared year by year, and it is easy to see whether or not the society is going forward or drifting behind.

A FUNNY-PAPER PARTY

For Social Committees

If you want something out of the ordinary, try a funny-paper party. As the name indicates, each one came dressed like a character on the funny page, and in spite of the fact that "Lester De Pester" discovered two "Betty's" a good time was had by all.

The invitations were penny postal cards, a funny-paper cut-out pasted in the left hand corner, and the invitation typed in rhyme.

Scalloped funny-paper doilies decorated the piano and tables. One corner of the room was partitioned off for a dining room.

For games we used some of Edna Geister's clever suggestions, ending with a unique intelligence test. When all questions were answered correctly, the result read, "Refreshments are Ready."

When we marched into the dining room we found a huge box in the center of a funny-paper-covered table. The box was labelled "Corned Beef and Cabbage," but when each had received his paper bag he found it contained sandwiches, cakes, and "Dixie" cups of ice-cream.

As even the napkins were cut from funny papers, there was no laundry bill as well as no dishes to wash.—Geneva Horn.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

"The 4th of July" has always been one of the high tides of life at Riverside Institute. The day's program has always been sponsored by the Sunday school. This year we observed the day as usual, and yet not as usual, for we had Governor Sampson of Kentucky with us for the principal address. We have always tried to keep the day clean, and to have nothing he would be ashamed of if our Lord came that day. The purpose has been spiritual, social, and patriotic uplift. The Governor gave us a wonderful address along these lines, seemingly sensing the purpose of the day exactly. In his prefatory remarks he said that he had been invited to different places for the day, but somehow felt it his duty to accept the invitation to come here. He had a large crowd to address, and seemed to be well pleased with his choice for in a letter from him since getting home we quote: "Allow me to thank you again for your very kind invitation to come to your fourth of July celebration, and for all the courtesies extended us while there. You have a wonderful people, and you have been doing a great thing for them. . . . Your institution should progress and grow so that its radius of good may be increased and I believe it will increase." The crowd was large, the weather fine, and the order of the very best.

We have requests from Chicago, Newport, and Ashland for room in our dormitories. The two latter cities are in Kentucky on the Ohio river. These people have come to find out what we have here, that it is not an ordinary high school. They have them in these cities, but a real Christian Bible training school, with the Bible as the predominant Book, and the other work necessary also. Well, we have told them that the place was built for the Mountain boys and girls, and that we could not take them. Riverside Institute has been dedicated to the people of the Southern Mountains, and the demand for it today is just as strong as it ever was, and the need just as great.

But why was Riverside Institute located where it is? It came about in this way. God called two folks to the place. After they had been there for a few months, the Home Board sent an elder, who is still living, to come here to investigate and report. He came. Other places were visited, and when he reported he recommended what has come to pass, i. e., that the school work be done along with the church work. This is directly in line with all the mission work of this Mountain White Field. If there is any doubt in any minds about this, investigate. Thus the place was founded, and thus it has grown. The location for the work is IDEAL. It is just far enough from the railroad to be free from that attraction, and then on the new highway giving it the necessary conveniences in that way. Visitors have told us that a better location could not be had in the Southern Mountains.

But how about the high waters which have given so much trouble, etc., etc.? Well, what trouble? There has been no loss much from that source, and rains we have had, and rains we will have, until our Lord comes, and changes the present order of things. But these have not caused anyone to doubt the logic of the location. The rains the last three years have been very unusual. The cutting of forests does not account for it here, as there were less forests ten or fifteen years ago than for the last three years. There has been a great deal of new growth the last few years, which has really increased the forests in this section of the state. And then what if we do have some high waters occasionally? Do we enjoy it? No, but we just can't help it. So we grin, and bear it, for we are the "Children of the King," who permits no evil to befall his children. Then, why should we get the least bit discouraged over the high waters that our God has seen fit to permit during the last few years? There have been three times the water has gone over the campus during the last three years. The last visitation was the last days of last March. Then we had no water on our first floors here. But over at Buckhorn, at the same time, they had eighteen inches of water over their new church floor, and a fine one it is, too. This place was founded six years before Riverside by the Presbyterians. This church was just built the last year. Thus you see that we are not as low down here as they are there, and they are older in this mountain work than we.

The work now could use a truck to very good advantage. We wonder if some of the Brethren might have one standing about not in use, and you would like to see it work for the Lord. We do not care about the appearance, just so it works, and has a capacity of about one ton. We believe that we could arrange to get it here very economically. If this finds the eyes of anyone who might have something of the kind we would be glad to correspond with you about it.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

McLOUTH, KANSAS

Finding no one in the district that seemed to know anything about this group, I stopped to find out. In years gone by our people here had a working agreement with the Church of the Brethren. During the past several years the Church of the Brethren has been in control of the work and our people have attended their services. The building was jointly built by the church groups, the Church of the Brethren holding title to the building and our people being given a long lease of years to its use. There are only a few families left of our members but found them interested in the work. It occurs to me that the district should take some oversight and care of this group and as they have no organization of their own, they should place their membership in some one of our churches near them and that church should have the pastoral care of them.

Kansas City

While we have no church in this city, yet we have some families living here. Dr. Hickocks gave $100.00 and the Livengood family gave $100.00, which I placed to the credit of the Carleton church of which they had been members. I met Norman Kime who was on a visit from Pennsylvania and Brother Earl Musser, formerly of Berlin, Pennsylvania, each giving $50.00. This is the second gift of Norman Kime, who gave a much larger gift the first time.

I had a pleasant visit with these good people and again I want to drive home the importance of the church working out a complete list of our isolated and non-resident members and have them classified by city—We are losing thousands of dollars every year to the cause by not following up, besides the possibilities of new church locations and the holding of our members. There is no excuse for this. It is as important to hold people in the church as to secure new recruits.

Udell, Iowa

This church requested me to not visit them when I was in that district on account of financial conditions and being without a pastor. As I was passing near there on my return East, I dropped off over Sunday and presented the College interests in the evening. I found Brother Howell had recently taken the work. This is a small village, with only a few members, who are struggling along to keep the work going. On account of local conditions I did not canvass the congregation, but received $26.00.

I went some out of my way to visit Sister Studebaker who lives at Mulberry Grove, Illinois and found a saint of God, who has given two sons to the ministry and who is deeply interested in the work of the church. Years ago we had a small work here, but by death and removals we have no church now. Sister Studebaker has however remained faithful to the church of her choice and takes our church literature. We also have a few members who lived a short distance from here. It occurs to me our members here, like at McLouth should place their membership with our nearest church and that church should have pastoral responsibility, either Cerro Gordo or Clay City could do this.

Sister Studebaker gave $50.00, with the promise of doing more later.

The total amount of this report is $376.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Last Saturday, July 13, we held the mid-summer commencement exercises in the college chapel. There were fifty-eight graduates, five of whom received the bachelor's degree, the rest being two year education graduates. The room was overflowing with many chairs in all the aisles and many people in the halls.

After the exercises were over, we served, as usual, ice cream on the front campus. We had prepared for 450 and there were that many served.

The next term began July 15 and will last for five weeks. The enrollment for the past term was 337, which was more than we had hoped for. There were at least 9

Ohio colleges represented among the students. Our enrollment makes Ashland one of the major Ohio summer schools. Some Ohio colleges do not keep open during the summer, and one is reported as having as few as twenty students. Our summer school here is a very big factor in many ways, viz., financially, in matters of advertisement, and as a business asset to the city. It has been built up with patience and great care and I am not very anxious to see it in any way decline.

The graduating class made a gift of $1,200.00 to the endowment. I call your attention to this fact. Just now we need every cent. This gift was from a group of students, given without pressure and in good spirit, not one of whom was a member of our church.

All told, since graduating classes have been making gifts to the College, I should judge that we have received somewhere close to $15,000 from this source.

Acting Dean Mason announced that the advanced enrollment was so large that it looked as if we would have to limit the number of Freshmen. We desire about 300 high grade students, not more than half of whom should be Freshmen.

Indeed, everything looks good just now, especially if the churches send in appropriate educational day offerings. The response has been good, but not up to our need, or to my expectations.

Professors Haun and Stuckey were at Shipshewana last week. Their classes were taken care of her by others. Dean Miller is gone this week to the same place. His work must also be provided for.

I spoke recently to the Optimist Club at Mansfield and also the Exchange Club of that city. This Thursday I am to address the Lions at Wooster.

Already one of the new teachers has bought a home here. Others are looking for houses to rent. We will need your earnest prayers and cooperation during the coming year. Pray that we may stand true to our mission in these days of uncertainty. Education and religion must still be driven abreast and that takes skill and faith.

My son Cassel is spending the summer in California and recently wrote me that he passed through the thrill of experiencing an earthquake where he is in the chemical laboratories of the Standard Oil at Santa Fe Springs, California. Some damage was done and several fatalities were reported.

As my readers know, I am retiring Moderator of Conference, and in that capacity I should like to urge the churches to be enthusiastic in sending large delegations to Winona. I take it that our National Conference is a sort of thermometer of our enthusiasm and earnestness. It certainly is no time to let down in our support of this meeting. Every church needs all the support it can get these days and our church is no exception.

Dr. Charles Bame made the Fourth of July address at Shipshewana. Dr. Bell also was there recently and he gave some lectures in Northern Indiana.

Recently I drove to a nearby city where a good sister, whose name I was asked to withhold, gave the College a gift of $1,000.00. I mention this only as a matter of encouragement. If this had been done for the fifty years the College has been in existence, we would be farther on the way than we are today.

We need a chapel building here very much. In this we could have such religious services as a body of believers who are members of our church should have, and what is more, we would have them daily. Churches are used at best not every day and yet we erect them costing many thousands of dollars. Ashland College Chapel would see religious services almost daily.

Our Chapel holds 200 without extra chairs. We have 337 students. How can we even get them into any one group for the ordinary announcements? I have pictured many, many times just what dignified, exalted, and spiritual services we could have if we had a suitable building. This would also give us many more class rooms in Founders' Hall. This will certainly be one of our next objectives.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

VINCO AND MUNDY'S CORNER

Since our last report to the Evangelist we have had our pre-communion evangelistic services at Vinco. Brother Charles Ashman led us in these services. He is a splendid leader and as we listened to him from night to night we were persuaded that "The faith once for all delivered unto the saints" was indeed worth contending for. He not only presented the doctrine in a most pleasing way but his evangelistic sermons were very fine. His work and visitation showed him to be a man of wide evangelistic ability. He made many friends in the homes as well as from the pulpit. We had never worked with him before but we found him to be most genial and companionable. We are surely indebted to the Johnstown church for sparing their pastor and aiding us in our work at Vinco. All told I think there were about fifteen additions to the church, mostly by baptism. I think there will be others who will unite with the church as a result of the meeting. Our communion service followed and was well attended by our faithful little band.

Our membership here is mostly made up of people in their teens, and they showed commendable zeal by their faithful attendance and personal work and by participating in the communion service.

The pastor held a week's meeting at Mundy's Corner (The Pike church) which resulted in six additions and one baptized who had previously made a confession. This pre-communion service was very well attended and a splendid interest prevailed. Brother Hess, the pastor of the Nanty Glo Church of the Brethren assisted in the confirmation service and also assisted in the communion service. We appreciate the fraternal spirit of the Nanty Glo Church of the Brethren people and trust that very shortly the thin partition that separates the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren may be taken down and that we may be one church and one people. Brother Hess and I are going to exchange pulpits in the not distant future.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY TO HARRAH, WASHINGTON

The last letter to these pages came from the midst of the Cumberland Highlands; today we write from the Cascade region, with an approximate 3,000-mile separation. Many wheels have turned and numerous incidents transpired since last May 1, when we bid good-bye to Krypton loved ones and set our faces toward the West.

Indeed, many things transpired in the busy days of preparation, and then we think of those nearly five years of labor in interesting and needy Appalachia. This short epoch is now a sealed history. During those years we are confident we gave forth no "uncertain sound" in the preached word, and of this there is no regret; many were taught more perfectly (yet so imperfectly) the Word; a goodly number were led into the baptismal flood, and this was one of the greatest joys; some were anointed and received life anew through Jesus Christ; others were laid away in the little cemetery on the hilltop, to await the call of the archangel; some were united in the marriage tie; new Sunday schools were established and encouraged; and shortly before our leave taking we aided in the ordination to the ministry of our Brother Manuel Davidson, native of that district, who had attended Riverside Institute. In God's own time, when the seals of these years are broken may we find many of his children who have been faithful, who have "fought the good fight," and "finished the course."

It is no secret that we are persuaded that we expect to find no friends more staunch, more demanding of our affection than these to whom we bade farewell, after a wonderful prayer service, on that Wednesday night. We pray that they may go forward in the Master's name and that the church might lend a strong and sympathetic hand towards the furtherance of that work as has been proven practicable for that particular field. We are made to rejoice that Miss Carter, teacher in the school, last year, placed herself in God's will and said, "Here am I; use me." And she is being used as she has taken the burden of the responsibility upon her shoulders, and yet not hers, for she knows the Great Burden-Bearer! Aiding, of course, are Sister Strack, whose health and strength are far from perfect, but who toils on in Christ's strength, when many others would be defeated. Also Brother Davidson, while employed daily in the mines some distance away, lives in the parsonage and helps keep up the property. May many pray very definitely for these bearing responsibility, and for future plans, for Krypton hangs in the balance, and much of spiritual value is at stake in the weighing.

Despite all the chords of attachment, and the tangled threads of uncertainty, God has very definitely led us hence.

After some three weeks amidst old scenes and amongst old friends in Indiana, we left Valparaiso, Indiana, on the Lincoln Highway for the real journey. In the new Chevy were our own family of four and one of those several girls who desired so much to accompany us. We found it impossible to transport all of them, so decided on this one because of her orphaned condition, and our having had her with us for more than two years previous.

Purposely detouring to the south we threaded our way through that wonderful state of God's marvels—Colorado—and were again entranced with the majestic beauty of which an easterner seldom tires of thinking or talking. To try to describe any of it would be simply to make another grand literary failure. It might be well to point out that of all of America already visited we believe we were more impressed with the Glenwood Canyon, for a distance of fifteen miles east of Glenwood Springs, Colorado. If the Grand Canyon in Arizona is much more sublime than a physician should accompany those visitors who really admire and adore the works of the Creator. In this Glenwood Canyon, it seems to us, the action of the picturesque Colorado River rivals by far the renowned whirlpool rapids of old Niagara.

Up through Utah's mighty deserts to the city of the "prophet" and the "saint," and sojourning one night in President Young's own town—Brigham. We spent a delightful hour one noonday eating lunch on the rim of the Snake River's mighty gulch, in view of the beautiful Shoshone Falls, near Twin Falls, Idaho. Not traveling on the Lord's Day, we were glad to find ourselves one Saturday night at Nampa, Idaho. That name brought to us remembrances from the sister church, and on this Sunday we worshipped with our friends of the Church of the Brethren, who have many strong congregations throughout this northwest region. We gladly accepted the invitation to bring them the evening message, which was listened to by a large and appreciative audience.

Then through the corner of Oregon, wending through her valuable forests of spruce and fir, we came to the first glimpse of Washington's wealth and glory. As we neared Wallawalla, we found ourselves in avenues of wondrous orchards, the cherries just coming into their own—and what trees, what crops, and what CHERRIES! Not these little sour ones we used to so dearly love in Indiana, but great "plum" sized ones, sweet as any tooth would desire. Another day brought us to Sunnyside and near our destination. Here we were welcomed by Brother Grisso, pastor of the Sunnyside church, and his family. That same day he accompanied us the remaining 35 miles to Harrah, where we began and are still getting acquainted with an exceedingly interesting and fruitful country and a still more fascinating group of folks who are laboring for Christ and the church.

In a later installment more of the information which you desire concerning our findings in this field will be given.

In the meantime will you not pray that we might be used of the Lord to extend the borders of the Brethren faith throughout this great northwest, which is indeed a land of opportunity—for industry—yes, and for the church!

FRED V. KINZIE.

RESOLUTIONS IN THE APPRECIATION OF THE LABORS OF ELDER AND MRS. FRED V. KINZIE AT KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

Whereas in prompt obedience to the call of the Master, Brother and Sister Kinzie came directly to Krypton, Kentucky, from their work at Tshland College, and

Whereas their lives were fully surrendered to do whatever the Lord led them to do, and

Whereas they put their very best, heart, thought and strength into the work the Lord opened up for them at Krypton and the neighboring communities, and

Whereas God wonderfully blessed their efforts in the salvation of many souls, the building up of Christian character through the church activities, the school work, the personal visitation, and the medical assistance which Sister Kinzie was able to render.

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the Field Council of the Brethren Missions of Southeastern Kentucky, express our most hearty appreciation of the work the Kinzies have been enabled to accomplish for Jesus Christ in this part of God's harvest field. They have been an inspiration to all of us who have been privileged to labor with them. We realize that our loss will be the gain of those with whom they are now to serve. We commend them to the Lord, and pray for his continued blessing on them and their work.

Signed:

GRACE P. SRACK, LYDA CARTER,
E. M. DAVIDSON,
Resolutions Committee.

GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA

The Brethren church of Grafton was honored with having H. W. Koontz of Mason town, Pennsylvania, with us from the 17th to the 29th of May in a revival effort. Brother Koontz is a very earnest and enthusiastic expounder of the Word. As a mixer with the people he is hard to excel. The meetings were not largely attended, but the results were good. Twelve confessed Christ and were baptized and received into the church. Three were received from other churches by relation. We feel that the church has been not only increased in numbers but greatly strengthened also. Most of the converts were young folks who had been brought up in the Sunday school. We hope that the Home Mission Board will be able in the near future to help us secure a pastor, as the church is suffering much from lack of pastoral care. We need a full time, or at least a part time pastor.

J. B. SHAFFER.

DAYTON, OHIO

We are going forward in the Dayton church and Bible school work slowly but surely, even if we have no pastor on the field. We have added several to our membership roll since April, by letter, several by baptism and one awaiting baptism. We are revising our church membership roll by visitation and by sending out hundreds of letters to ascertain correct addresses, etc., hoping thereby to have things in pretty fine shape for our new pastor, Rev. R. D. Barnard, when he arrives on the field August 1st. The good women of our church expect to clean up the pastor's study and the parsonage tomorrow. We want Brother Barnard to feel very much at home with us and I am sure our people will do their best to make him happy. We had over four hundred in our church school last Sunday and we feel that is not a poor attendance for a hot summer day. We are securing able preachers from the Presbyterians, United Brethren, Methodists, Brethren, etc., and we find all of them preaching good old Gospel messages. We surely are forgetting denominational differences and getting closer together every year. Are we as Brethren doing all we can to encourage closer co-operation and affiliation?

Fairview Church, Washington, C. H., Ohio

After the passing of Sister Finn last winter to be with her Lord, the work suffered very much for lack of leadership, especially in the Bible school work. Sister Finn was the Superintendent of the school. Sisters Junk and Himiller were too ill to attend during the winter months, and there seemed to be quite a bit of sickness which made it almost impossible to carry on the work and for a time there was no Bible school or preaching service, but the work is resumed again and we had our Love Feast occasion some time ago and there is preaching every other Sunday. I have been unable to go every time since the Dayton work requires much of my time, but we aim to see that they have someone to preach for them. The two churches and my Home Mission work, keep me pretty busy and we are waiting anxiously for Brother Barnard's arrival to take up the BIG JOB, at Dayton. Pray for us.

WM. A. GEARHART.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

After many "moons" we come back to the Evangelist columns with some news from this Mid-western church—one of the best in the group of other good ones. Being somewhat remiss in our duty to the Evangelist Editor, is no indication that our work has been neglected. We have tried to be busy for the Lord in many ways, both in the church and its work, and in the community. We observe all special days with somewhat good results. Two have been baptized and received into membership since our last report; one also by letter. This makes 18 added since on the field. We have lost two by death and two by letter.

The church school attendance is holding up commandably well, yet, we have fallen slightly below the average of our previous quarter, due largely to rainy Sundays and mud roads—for not many people use energy enough to go to church through the mud.

The W. M. S. meets each week for work, and they hold their devotional meetings regularly. They are a strong arm of the church. The membership is 46.

The S. M. M. is active and will likely make its goals for the year—or nearly so. It is a bit early to know for sure. The membership is over two dozen.

The Senior Christian Endeavor is still doing good work, holding meetings the year round, being an evergreen society, and we have many good interesting meetings. We have a good group of workers.

The Junior Christian Endeavor has an enrollment of 27, holding meetings each week. Five of these have joined the church since our organization. This is a community affair, and a live one. We have two camping periods scheduled, one for July and one for August. We like to work with boys and they afford an interesting study. We gave one public demonstration program some time ago, with a good attendance at the city auditorium.

One feature of our summer pulpit work is a series of sermons on Biblical characters, and a series of expositions on New Testament books. We also use the easel a good bit for cartoons in song and message. Both young and old like pictures.

Best wishes to the Evangelist family, and all the churches over the brotherhood. Our prayers are with you. Yours till we meet again, on paper, or in glory.

A PLACE AT THE FEET OF CHRIST

destined to do for the mind what the steam engine did for the body.

Dr. Watson lays it down that man's conduct is the direct result of external stimuli which "condition" him to certain types of action impossible of escape, while Dr. Adler replies with Viennese heat that the pattern of human behavior has its inception from within instead of from without. Perhaps this is of moment to them but it will have little effect upon the homes of John Smith in New York or Oravanen Pagargorge in Astoria, Or. What is needed is something so simple and true that it can be taught to children in the schools of 1935, and they will be wiser and brighter for hearing it. And whoever finds it will have a statue beside the statue of Liberty and a place at the feet of Christ.

OUR LITTLE READERS

TWO LITTLE GIRLS AND A DOLL

One little girl was the daughter of an Apache Indian chief. The other little girl was the daughter of a United States Army officer. The doll had rosy cheeks, blue eyes, and had traveled in a box all the way from "back East."

It all happened years ago, when the United States Government was trying to allot certain lands to the Indians. Some of the Apaches were not satisfied with their share, so they made ready for war and gathered from every direction to fight the white man.

"The Apaches are gathering for war," was the message sent to the Government. Immediately large numbers of soldiers were ordered to the nearest fort to keep constant watch on the Indians.

The first Apache captured by the soldiers was very small. She was a little girl, who strayed too far from her wigwam and could not find her way back. The Government soldiers found her, tired and frightened, and took her on to their own fort. They tried to show her that they wanted to be friends, but their strange white faces terrified her, and she cried and cried. One soldier after another tried to comfort her, but the more they tried the louder she wailed. The commanding officer did not know what to do next. He shook his head in despair. Then he said to his men, "Wait a minute! I have an idea."

He called his little daughter. "Here's a little girl who has come to visit you," he said, as he led the little lost Apache toward her. She walked shyly up to the little Indian girl, hugging in her arms the new doll, which had come in the box from friends in the East. As soon as the little Indian saw the doll she forgot to cry any more, and held out both her arms for it.

At first it seemed there would be another war. The little girls were like their fathers. Both wanted the same doll, as their fathers wanted the same land.

"Won't you let your little friend play with your doll awhile?" asked the officer coaxingly.

Then he waited until his daughter politely handed her doll to the daughter of the Apache chief. After that they were friends. They sat down together, they ate together, and then went to sleep together. When the little Apache awoke, some of the soldiers took her back to her father's wigwam, marching under a flag of truce. She was delighted to be back home and ran around showing all her friends the doll which the little "pale-face" had given her.

At the fort the soldiers waited for the attack of the Indians. Everything was very still, and soon the message came that the various bands of Apaches were breaking up and going in peace to the land which the Government had set apart for them. The soldiers could not understand.

"Seems like the red men aren't going to fight us after all. What do you suppose has happened?"

"Do you suppose it could be the doll that has charmed 'em?"

The soldiers laughed, but this was exactly what had happened. The Apache chief was so pleased with the doll and the kindness of the white man to his little daughter, that he declared the war off.—Mrs. E. C. Cronk.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

ARMSTRONG-WEARIN—At the bride's home in Carlisle, Nebraska, on May 2, 1929 occurred the marriage of Mr. Verr Armstrong and Miss Edna Wearin. Both are college graduates and highly respected. They are at home in Big Springs, Nebraska, where he conducts an insurance business and looks after a large ranch. The best wishes of the community go with them. W. B. DEETER.

HUFFORD-TUCKER—The marriage of Miss Berthe B. Tucker to Mr. LeRoy J. Hufford was solemnized at the Brethren Parsonage, Fremont, Ohio, on Saturday, June eighth, the double ring ceremony being used. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Tucker, and a member of Fremont church. Both are estimable young people and have the best wishes of a large circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Hufford went at once to their newly acquired and attractively furnished home where they have been receiving the congratulations of friends. REV. W. S. CRICK.

IN THE SHADOW

CLAYS—The funeral of Mrs. Anna Clays, widow of Jacob Clays was held from the Brethren church, Fremont, Ohio, May 13, 1929. Sister Clays had reached the age of four score years, and during her long life had been a consistent, humble, and generous servant of her Lord and Master. She the local congregation and the Brotherhood at large have been beneficiaries of her bounty, by the means of which Brother and Sister Clays "though dead yet speak." Sister Clays was loyal to her church to the very last, and was blessed in having been able to be about her home until within a few weeks of her death. Just six weeks before the funeral she had come the twenty-two miles from her home to attend the Communion services. At the close of the service she requested to be anointed. Dr. J. C. Beal of Canton, who was closing our evangelistic campaign and this writer, her pastor, officiated at this service.

Having no children of her own, Brother and Sister Clays reared a girl who survives along with one sister, one sister-in-law, and one half-brother. She had been a member of the Fremont congregation for twenty-six years—almost since its founding. Internment was in the cemetery near Castalia, Ohio, in the vicinity of the Clays estate. REV. W. S. CRICK.

MERRICK—William Atton Merrick was born a few miles from Manchester, England, on November 10, 1868 and departed this life July 1, 1929, at Sibley Hospital, Washington, D. C., at the age of 60 years, 7 months, 21 days. He came to the United States at 18 years of age. After short periods in various sections of the country he settled in Wilmington, Delaware, where he resided until 22 years ago when he came to Washington. Mr. Merrick was employed in different branches of telephone work practically ever since arriving in this country. He was a devoted husband, a noble father, a Christian gentleman. He was a member of the First Brethren church of this city and active in its services, being President of the W. M. Lyon Bible class for several years. He is survived by his wife, Elsie T.; two sons, Harold L. and Robert Lee, who is now a student at Ashland; a daughter, Mary A., and two grandchildren, William B. and Edith Ann Merrick.

Funeral services were held from the home, July 4, the undersigned officiating, and internment was made at Cedar Hill Cemetery. HOMER A. KENT.

FISHER—William J. Fisher was born in Delaware township, Hunterdon county, New Jersey, on March 15, 1861 and died at his home in Sergeantsville, New Jersey, on Sunday morning, June 30, 1929, his age being 68 years, 3 months and 15 days.

Brother Fisher was a faithful member of the Brethren church for more than 35 years. It was his custom to attend church every Sunday. For a number of years he served as a trustee of the church in a most efficient manner. The church suffers a great loss in his death. He leaves to mourn their loss, his faithful companion and two daughters. Funeral services conducted from the Sergeantsville Brethren church by the undersigned. R. F. PORTE.

HOSPELHORN—George W. Hospelhorn, of near Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, was called to the great beyond May 18, 1929, at the age of 76 years, 5 months and 14 days. Brother Hospelhorn, though he had a long and busy life, was not a church man, having accepted Christ and uniting with the church just last February. Though not a church member, a Christian, he repeatedly gave witness to the blessing in his life. The conversion of our brother is a proof of the power of our Lord to save even the aged.

Brother Hospelhorn is survived by one brother, one son and one grandson, as well as a host of friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the First Brethren church of Waynesboro. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. W. C. BENSHOFF.

A LAST CALL

Last summer we made a special offer of an Aluminum Pressure Cooker at half the agent's price as a premium for subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist at the regular price, making the total seven dollars and twenty-five cents.

This offer was made possible because we were obliged to take a number of these cookers in settlement for a goodly sized printing bill that we had against the manufacturer who went broke.

All but two of the cookers were disposed of last summer, and when these two are disposed of the account will have been paid in full.

These cookers are of special value to the ladies of any church that serves meals to the public. The Ashland ladies have two or three of them.

In order to get these remaining ones off our hands quickly we will give them to the first two Women's Missionary Societies that send us a list of TEN subscriptions to the Evangelist, either old or new at two dollars each, with the money accompanying the order.

Should more than two societies send us such a list we will try to "dig up" another cooker from some one who may have a supply and make a third presentation of the premium.

This offer is also made to any individual who will send us a list of ten subscriptions at two dollars each. Subscriptions may be either old or new. The fact that these subscriptions must be at the regular rate excludes all churches that are now on the Honor Roll as they have a special rate which will not apply in this.

As our financial year closes July thirty-first we would like to have this done before that date.

This has been a very good year for the Publishing House, and we believe we will be able to make a very creditable report at its end.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE WHOLE GOSPEL

By Freeman Ankrum

We have adopted a large program when we take our stand upon, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." Through the experience of the Apostle Paul, as recorded in Romans 15:19, there followed when he fully preached the Gospel of Christ, mighty signs and wonders by the power of the Spirit of God. Can we conscientiously believe that some of the problems we face as a church today have followed our carrying forth the plea we have made? Will not prayerful introspection show us that we have not lived up to our program? There are no doubt temptations to temper the Gospel, or to trim it to meet modern conditions. This when it has been done submerges the one who has mutilated the Word. If the world could not be halted in the days of our forefathers with excerpts from the book, are modern preachers so much more powerful and wiser that they can curtail the Word and achieve results? There has never been a time recorded in all the pages of history, when there has been a greater need for that which we hold dear, than this modern and ungodly age. If there are those who have not secured results, and if there are churches that have failed, perhaps an investigation will show that they have proceeded to edit that which God gave to us finished.

In the words of another, "Anything more is too much and anything less is not enough." Let every Brethren pastor preach that which we have associated with our believing body and then see if the signs and wonders will not appear upon the fields of our labors. Not one single interest of the church would go begging, churches that are merely existing would become set on fire for God. May the God who has entrusted us with as large a program as was ever given to any church fully infill us with his Spirit that there may never come from a single Brethren pulpit an uncertain, compromising sound. The world then will know that we are in all reality a Whole Gospel Church, because of the signs which follow. Oak Hill, West Virginia.

STREAMS in Dry Places

This is being written in camp beside the Metolius River of Oregon. It is a remarkable stream. Like the River Jordan, it issues a full stream out of the base of a mountain called Black Butte. We are camped about one-fourth of a mile below the point where it breaks suddenly from the ground, and here it is over one hundred feet wide of water so cold one can scarcely drink it. We have just finished a dinner of trout taken from the river this morning.

The peculiar origin of the Metolius River is doubtless due to the contour of the rock strata. Great changes have taken place in this region, very recently from the geological standpoint. While crossing the mountains yesterday we drove through miles of black lava flow which looked as if it might have streamed out of the earth only a few years ago.

Doubtless, some mighty geological changes will take place just prior to the Millennial reign of our Lord. Read the record in Revelation, chapters 6 to 19. Perhaps this method will be used in making streams break forth in the desert. The Metolius River is a sample of what God can do through this method. Whatever the method, we know the desert will be made to blossom as the rose.

The prophet Isaiah describes that blessed age in terms of surpassing beauty. "I will open rivers on the bare heights, and fountains in the midst of the valleys; I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water. I will put in the wilderness the cedar, the acacia, and the myrtle, and the oil tree. I will set in the desert the fir-tree, the pine and the box-tree together, that they may see, and know and consider, and understand together, that the Hand of Jehovah hath done this." (Isa. 41: 18-20).

How wonderful it will be when streams like the Metolius break forth in the desert. The city of Los Angeles would pay four hundred million dollars for such a stream as this. That is what she is proposing to spend for a new aqueduct to bring water several hundred miles from the Colorado River. As an engineering feat it will almost rival the Panama Canal. One proposed route would require 170 miles of tunnel, with a few earthquakes and geological changes of the right kind the Lord could give Los Angeles all the water she needs, and it would be better water than she will get from the muddy Colorado. But the present age is "Man's Day," hence we must go on building aqueducts. But the "Day of the Lord" is coming. Don't forget that.

A PROBLEM for the Sociologist

A young man recently arrested in Portland, Oregon, said to the police, "I have never worked in my life. I don't intend to make an honest living. I have always made my way by robbing people, and I intend to keep on doing it."

What would you do with such a man? The Christian might preach the Gospel to him and try to bring him to the experience of the New Birth. That would solve the problem. But suppose he refused to accept Christ, then what? The scientific method would segregate him from the rest of society as an anti-social person. The best minds are advocating this very thing. Under present laws it cannot be done. We must wait until he robs somebody, then catch him, convict him, and put him in prison for the number of years specified for that particular crime. After that we must turn him loose to go on with his robbing. In one or two states, we could put him away for life when he has committed four offenses.

But what would you do with such a man in the next world? Some sentimentalists say we should turn him loose in heaven. Others say he should be annihilated. The Bible teaches that all such persistently anti-social individuals will be segregated from the rest of society FOREVER. And all those who reject Jesus Christ are anti-social individuals.

THE Dangers of Human Life

A man in Walla Walla was walking about his yard, and suddenly his shoes caught fire. He had been working in a spray factory and some sodium chlorate had gotten on his shoes. He jumped into a duck pond, escaping with some severe burns.

Another man in San Francisco, pricked his finger while pinning a bouquet of flowers on his bride just before the marriage cere-

EXPENDITURES CLIMB BENEVOLENCES DROP SINCE CHURCH "DRIVES"

An exhaustive study of Protestant church finances in the United States, especially in relation to benevolent giving, is just published by the Institute of Social and Religious Research under the title TRENDS IN PROTESTANT GIVING. The author is Charles H. Fahs, one of the compilers of the "World Missionary Atlas" and now in charge of the Missionary Research Library.

Partial and tentative results of this inquiry were presented at the Foreign Missions Conference at Detroit last January. The complete investigation as now published reveals that the total picture is somewhat less gloomy than was painted in the presentation at Detroit, when the figures then available seemed to tell a story of continually mounting congregational expenses side by side with dwindling contributions for total benevolences and especially for foreign missions.

The story as told in the completed report shows that while, for the eleven major denominations most intensively studied, there has been a steady decline in benevolent giving since the peak year of 1920, representing the culmination of several denominational "drives," nevertheless, as compared with the year before the World War, 1913, benevolent giving has shown a marked increase both in actual amount and in relation to the cost of living. During the same period congregational expenditures have risen steadily and reached their highest point in the latest year considered by the study, 1927. The ratio of per capita giving for total benevolences and per capita giving for congregational expenditures, which was 21 to 79 in 1913, had shifted in favor of benevolences by 1920 until it stood at 35 to 65, since which year the decline in benevolent giving and the upward climb of congregational expenditures have combined almost to restore the ratio of 1913.

The results of a study of receipts for foreign missions for fifteen Protestant denominations are summed up as follows: "A study of total receipts for foreign missions from all sources for fifteen Protestant denominations for the period 1901-1927 shows a growth in such receipts from 5,300,100, in 1901 to $29,833,727, in 1921, and with a total for 1927 for these fifteen bodies of $27,179,594. If these fifteen denominations can be classed as three groups—the first a group of three church bodies having more than two million members each; the second a group of four bodies having more than one million but less than two million each; and the third a group of eight bodies having more than 100,000 but less than a million each—it is found that the greatest fluctuations in receipts are in relation to the size of the denominations, the drop in total receipts from the peak points to 1927 of the three groups being respectively, 33, 9 and 2 per cent."

The study was undertaken by the Institute of Social and Religious Research at the request of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and is the first study ever made that shows figures of foreign missionary giving for the various Protestant denominations on a comparable basis. It was designed, the report says, expressly to answer such questions as:

"Have church expenditures, whether for local expenses or for benevolences, kept pace in recent years with the increased cost of living?"

"As local church expenses have mounted has the increase been at the expense of benevolences?"

"Has there been any marked change in the percentage of the total gifts which went for foreign missions?"

Whatever Christ is worth to you, he is worth giving to some one else.

Why the Short Pastorate and How Prolong It

Last week we considered the importance of lengthening the average pastoral term. This week we will endeavor to point out some things that contribute to the shortness of pastorates. Why is it, in the face of the obvious advantages of the longer pastorate, that the average term of service continues so short? In our endeavor to answer briefly this question, we shall hope also to gather some suggestions for lengthening the pastorate. Along with our suggestions, however, we shall bear in mind the uncertainty as to the workability of any theory, no matter how logical it may seem, because of the human element entering in. It is easier to offer a remedy than it is to effect a cure. In a theoretical situation one can figure out exactly what will be the outcome, but in a practical case he must deal with people and they do not always act as might be expected under a given situation. Yet people can be influenced, if not predetermined, for a certain course, and the more they are encouraged in the right way of thinking about this matter, the more they will be inclined to make at least some progress in the right direction.

Prominent, if not foremost, among the causes ascribed for the short pastorate is the economic one. Salaries are too low and are irregularly paid, and churches are generally indisposed to improve the situation as long as the minister will stay on the field. Few preachers will make demands for better financial consideration, and the church would not think well of them if they did, so the only chance for relief is to accept a better salary offered by some other church. Very often a church will let a pastor go with regrets at losing him and with congratulations on his promotion to a "larger field," then after several pastorless months they find themselves compelled to pay an increased salary to get a man equal to the one they lost for lack of adequate salary. If they had given the increase to the man who left them, they might have kept him and had the benefit of his experience on the field.

The pointing out of this economic factor does not suggest that ministers are greatly inclined to be grasping or to be actuated by pecuniary motives, but that they are in large numbers, about ninety per cent in fact, getting less than a living wage, considering the standard they are compelled to maintain. It does not mean that ministers are unwilling to make sacrifices, but that the required sacrifices of the minister are out of proportion to those the church is willing to make. It means that the minister's salary has not received the attention that it deserves at the hands of the church. Rev. Orvis F. Jordan, writing in "Plain Talk Magazine," said, "The denominational leaders have had big national drives for missions, for education, for ministerial pensions, but no big drives to settle the unrest of the men who are fundamental to everything in church administration. There are thousands of rural churches that expect to find a minister and his family who will live in the parsonage and get twelve hundred dollars a year or less. When these figures are worked out in human terms, it means that the minister's wife, usually an educated woman, is sentenced to forms of domestic slavery that usually fall only to the lot of women without education."

The time will never come, nor is it desirable, when the ministry will not call for sacrifice, but the time ought speedily to come when the underpaid minister will no longer be compelled to sacrifice the physical welfare and culture of himself and family, nor the proper education of his children. And until it comes the church can expect a continued restlessness among its ministry. It is poor policy for a congregation to persistently ignore the financial strain of its minister until he is compelled to move to a new parish to get relief. And such a policy is as unnecessary as it is unwise, if church members in large numbers would cease to rob God, but would "bring all the tithes into the storehouse." There is to be found the secret to financial improvement among the churches, and as well to spiritual growth and power. And the pastor himself must lead the way.

Restrictions to pulpit liberty have been pointed out as a reason for the short pastorate. Dr. Jordan thinks this is not far behind the economic factor for influence on the problem in question, and our observation leads us to give considerable credit to such a view. But we believe that such pulpit restrictions apply not so much to theological interpretation as to the dealing with the practical problems of sin. The church members are not so numerous who will get wrought up over matters of orthodoxy, and such are usually confined to groups that have received specially intensive Biblical instruction, but there are many who are inclined to be sensitive about the type of preaching that touches their manner of living, or that influences their business, or that lays bare the sin of their social affairs, or their indulgences, or their pleasure pursuits. On this point Mr. Jordan agrees, for he says, "The minister usually is an idealist. He goes into his work with a 'message,' or he would have chosen a more lucrative profession. But he is warned on all sides 'not to be a trouble-maker.'" But the true prophet of God cannot be muzzled, and if people will not hear him in one field, he will shake the dust off his feet against them and go on to another. A church that desires the benefit of a long pastorate, especially of a man who has a positive, constructive, untrimmed message from the Lord, must cultivate a willingness to hear sin denounced, repentance insisted upon and a calling for the fruits of the Christian life. And the pastor, on his part, while he will not tone down the message to ease the conscience of any worldly-minded parishioner, should speak his message not in bitterness and stinging sarcasm, but in that tender, compassionate spirit that characterized the ministry of Jesus. Such consideration for the Word on the one hand and for the people on the other will make for a long and successful pastorate.

Lack of cooperation on the part of the people with the pastor often causes the pastor to become discouraged, give up in despair and leave the field before his work has really begun. Building the kingdom of God in any community is a cooperative affair and no pastor will be able, or will long attempt, to accomplish the task alone. Or, to change the figure, the church that hitches a preacher to the gospel wagon and expects him to pull it into glory while they ride on top with folded hands, is doomed to disappointment and speedy failure. There is a place for every shoulder at the wheels.

Over against the preceding point we place another factor that, when it is present, makes for a short pastorate and little real accomplishment, and that is, the lack of a spiritual passion on the part of the pastor, or the failure on his part to take his task seriously, sincerely, earnestly. Even when he begins with earnestness, there is the danger of losing much of the spirit. A great seriousness is necessary to the highest success in the Christian ministry, but that attitude of mind is burdensome, and there is the constant danger of seeking to lighten the load by performing the task in an official or professional manner. People soon detect the difference between the more or less perfunctory service of the official and the deeply in earnest effort of the servant to share and to bear their burdens. The official minister will be treated as an official by his people, and it will not be difficult to let him go, but he who finds his way down deep into their spiritual lives and thought will not be easily moved. Great passion wins and holds the hearts of the people.

Then, there is just plain incompatibility that contributes to the shortness of pastorates. This term might be made to cover a multitude of sins, but we have in mind not any lack of proper effort or interest on the part of pastor or people, but merely that lack of being suited to each other. Sometimes pastor and people do not seem to fit together, or there is a lack of ability or of willingness to adapt themselves to each other's peculiarities and ways. Sometimes there is a lack of tactfulness or of sympathy on the part of the preacher, or a tendency to irritability and impatience, or an inclination to personal carelessness, or an extremist attitude, any one or all of which may make for disagreeableness. Or on the part of the church there may be a spirit of aloofness, or an aristocratic air, or a lack of reverence for the office of the ministry and of respect for the minister, or an unteachable attitude that makes for a lack of smoothness between pastor and people. Or there may be some domineering church officers, or some touchy, unconverted church members, or perchance some little cliques within the church that contribute to a lack of harmony. There are any number of ways in which the spirit of incompatibility and unsuitability may show itself and grow into disaffection and spoil the

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Herman Koontz, of Masontown, Pennsylvania, writes of his visit to the Brethren church at Grafton, West Virginia, where he conducted an evangelistic campaign, which resulted, according to our report in last week's paper, in fifteen additions to the church. Brother Koontz sees here a large and challenging field for Brethrenism, which needs adequate pastoral leadership to bring splendid results.

Brother Henry Rinehart, treasurer of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, makes his first report of gifts received since the time for the taking of the offering in February. There are some gifts that are indicative of interest, but they are not many. Perhaps the same story applies here as to other special offerings taken this year, which is, that the stringent financial situation in many localities is hindering the generosity of the people.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, the new pastor of the church at Harrah, Washington, writes the sequel of last week's letter. He has been busy getting acquainted with the situation as well as with the people. He likes the spirit and hospitality of the great west. The Harrah church is composed of people who are loyal and sacrificing, and are determined to build up the Brethren cause in spite of financial handicaps.

Our good correspondent from Elkhart, Indiana, reports a very satisfactory closing of the years' work, and along with the election of other church officers, the pastor, Brother W. I. Duker, was retained for his eighth year of service with these people. Their recent quarterly cash offering brought in over a thousand dollars to apply on their building debt; these offerings keep up in a commendable way. Brother Duker is said to be regaining his health following his operation and is now able to fill his pulpit.

Brother W. R. Deeter, who is completing his first year as pastor of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, informs us that he is staying on for further service at that place as he was called for an indeterminate period. He is delighted with the well equipped church plant, including parsonage and church building. He has a boys' organization of twenty-seven members, and they meet every week for work and play. They put on an attractive demonstration this spring, and they have two camp periods scheduled for the summer. It pays to take care of the boys of the congregation.

Our correspondent from Clay City, Indiana, points out a very vital element and requisite to the propagation of our faith when he says pastors should so thoroughly indoctrinate their members that when they are compelled to move into a community where we have no church, they will become missionaries of the whole gospel faith. That is a historic method of expansion among Dunker people and perhaps we need to re-learn it. Brother H. M. Oberholtzer has been retained for his second year as pastor of this church. A well attended and richly enjoyed communion service was recently held.

Brother R. Paul Miller writes us that he is leaving his pastorate in Philadelphia and that after August 1st his address will be Berne, Indiana. He says he is going back to the farm for a while and that he has sufficient Bible conferences and evangelistic meetings scheduled to keep him going until July 1st, 1930. Any one desiring dates after that time should write him at his new address. Brother Miller has performed a notable service in Philadelphia. As he goes forth into evangelistic work he is not entering a new field, but one with which he is well acquainted and in which he has been used of God to win many victories.

Brother James S. Cook reports a splendid spirit existing among the people of his parish at the Martinsburg and McKee churches, in Pennsylvania, also 37 confessions at the recent meeting conducted by Brother R. I. Humberd, twenty-five of which represented additions to the church, twenty-two coming by baptism and three by letter. At Brother Cook's return meeting at Campbell, Michigan, where Brother Humberd is pastor, we are informed that there were four received by baptism and eight to be received by letter. At a consecration service practically the entire membership expressed a willingness to reconsecrate their lives to the service of Christ.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of his work in Delaware, where he is hoping to lead the people in erecting a new church house, as they are being compelled to worship in the homes of the members. He has been doing supply preaching every other Sunday in South Philadelphia near where he preached for twenty years in what was known as the "Whole Gospel Missions." Brother Bowman says he and his wife expect to celebrate their golden wedding on the 28th of August. It is our hope that they live and keep in health and have a most happy celebration on that occasion. They will have a large number of well-wishers throughout the brotherhood.

We are quite familiar with the "editorial 'we'", but Brother C. R. Sensenbaugh in his news article explains his use of "we" as having a trinity of significance, which is not bad for news writers to keep in mind. The pastor speaks with appreciation of the splendid work this congregation has done and is doing. It is one of our younger Indiana churches, has a membership of 150 and a Sunday school attendance of some less, a goodly percentage of which consists of children and young people. A church with young people has a future. And the character of the field adds to this church's outlook. Brother Sensenbaugh has accepted a call for a second year of service with this church.

Dr. W. S. Bell, secretary of the College Endowment Campaign, tells of his visit to Oak Hill, West Virginia, where he enjoyed and took part in the district conference program and canvassed the Oak Hill church for Endowment gifts. Notwithstanding their heavy financial load incident to their new church building debt, they did what they could for the college. Brother Freeman Ankrum, the pastor, has led his people forward in fine style and is building well and strong, according to the personally expressed opinion of Brother Bell, during a revisit to the editor's office. The total gift of Oak Hill and nearby Brethren was $405.00, leaving the total of the Endowment Fund stand at $213,667.20.

We are in receipt of a couple of very attractively printed posters giving the text of the General Pact for the Renunciation of War signed at Paris last August. One is a large poster, twenty-seven inches by forty-four inches and the other a small poster, eleven and a half inches by eighteen and a quarter inches. Both of them are printed with the text in blue ink and a red border. The small poster can be read from a distance of ten feet and the large one from a much greater distance. The same text is also printed, on post cards in the same coloring as the posters. For the benefit of those who have inquired, we will state that the post card sells for one cent each or 75 cents for 100. The small poster sells for 10 cents each or one dollar for 15, and the larger poster for 15 cents each and one dollar for 10. They may be secured through the National Council for the Prevention of War, 532 Seventeenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Dr. R. R. Teeter tells of one minister's wife who got the first cooker offered as a prize for getting Evangelist subscriptions. He has another to offer for the same kind of work. But whether you do it for a prize, which any one may properly do, or whether you do it just to get the Evangelist into more homes of our church, we hope many others will go about it "straightway." By helping to increase the Evangelist circulation among your people you are helping your church. Every home needs the church paper to keep informed and to keep church loyalty and spiritual interest up to the proper point. Every pastor ought to feel it a personal duty to boost his own church paper and to encourage his people to read it. Some are neglectful of this matter, but not a few are giving commendable cooperation. Where pastors urge it upon their people we usually maintain a very respectable subscription list, and the influence upon the church is quite noticeable.

Non-conformity to the World

By J. F. Garber

Text: And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.—Rom. 12:2.

The epistle from which this text was taken was written to the church at Rome: which had a membership, the greater part of which were Gentiles, and had never known any religion intimately, except perhaps their idolatrous worship, and they were not really religious at all, so far as personal helpfulness is concerned. They had nothing whatever to do with a changed life. They worshipped their gods and committed every sin known to humanity without the least compunction of conscience. In other words, they could conform to the wicked ways of the world without the least infringement on the tenets of their religions.

One of the hardest tasks that our missionaries in heathen lands have today is to get their converts to be Christians, to leave off their wickedness and to conduct themselves as civilized Christian people. It is not so hard to get them to accept Christianity, as it is to get them to live it. I am wondering if that is not true to some extent in our own Christian land. Many join the church without being truly converted, or changed.

It seems that the church at Rome had made this unfortunate mistake, and Paul was attempting to right them. He says in the first verse: "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," which is nothing more than a reasonable service. For his redeeming love should be answered by a life of purity, self-denial, and true work for God.

He then makes use of the words of my text. In this scripture the word conform means to comply with, or yield to; to live or act according to; to conform to the customs, or fashions of the world.

Then, Paul as our inspired writer, is saying to us as well as the church at Rome: Do not follow the customs of those who indulge in the vice and sins of the world: And do not follow the ungodly fashions of worldly society. But let your heart be so changed by the Holy Spirit that you will look for, and recognize God's will, and love to do it.

John in his first epistle says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

The world to which John refers is not the world of nature, so wonderful, and perfectly complete and harmless, nor the world of humanity which God so loved that he gave his only begotten Son, that they might not perish. But he has reference to the present order of things which appeals to the soul of man, and leads him away from God—things that are opposed to God. All that is thus antagonistic to God, is summed up under three heads, as separate avenues through which the world, or evil Spirit—the Prince of this world—reaches the soul of man. They are the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life; and they will pass away with the world.

We usually do not want to conform to the ways, or look like things, that we do not love: therefore if we love not the sinful ways or fashions of the world, we will not want to be conformed to them. If we love God we will rejoice in being conformed to his will, and want to do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

I am fully convinced that when Paul said, "Be not conformed to this world." He was not thinking of outward appearance alone; for we read in Holy Writ that "the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. I believe that Paul was thinking of the things of the heart that really contaminate the soul and make their outward appearance in the life of the individual; for he uses the greater part of the twelfth and thirteenth chapters of Romans immediately following my text, in telling how to live a life of non-conformity to the world, and he says nothing whatever about outward appearance, in this admonition.

But Jesus said: "We shall know the tree by its fruits." If you should plant what you supposed to be a "Delicious Apple" tree, and at time of harvest you came to it to gather fruit, and you found it loaded with wild crab-apples, you would know without any argument that it was not a "Delicious apple" tree. So it is with the life of an individual. If the life yields the fruit of unrighteousness, we know that that life has not been "transformed by the renewing of his mind, that he may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

As my time is limited I cannot discuss all three of the avenues through which sin reaches and contaminates the soul, and as I desire to notice briefly the avenue referred by John as "the pride of life," I will direct your thoughts to that part of the subject.

The pride of life is the avenue through which comes the proud and haughty spirit—the spirit that causes a person to want to conform to the customs, and fashions of worldly society. Too much time and money are wasted in trying to "Keep up with the Joneses." If we become proud, and haughty, because of the possession of lands, money, stocks, bonds, automobiles, houses, natural abilities, or social accomplishments, as well as fashionable dress, and we set our affections on them, then our soul has become contaminated by the pride of life: and I cannot see that any one of these things is any worse than the other, when carried to the same extreme, but we will notice briefly the last one named—fashionable dress.

I never was an extremist on the dress question: choosing rather, to adopt a garb that would suit my own taste, granting to other people the same privilege that I claim for myself. Yet with this freedom on the subject, there are certain questions for each individual to settle in his own mind, and these questions should be settled in accordance with the Word of God.

Now, what does our guidebook, the Bible, say about it? It tells us that our fore-parents, Adam and Eve, sewed fig leaves together and made themselves aprons, because, when they discovered that they were naked they were ashamed. After that the Lord made coats of skin, and clothed them. Clothing, then, has a twofold purpose: to hide our nakedness, and to protect our bodies. And if you will read 1 Timothy 2:9 and 1 Peter 3:3, 4, you will discover that if we are to follow our Guide Book, our clothes should be modest in appearance—not gaudy, avoiding gold, pearls, and costly array, and instead of using our clothes to decorate our outward appearance, we should ornament the inner man of the heart with a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God, of great price.

But Dame Fashion does not always take into consideration the vital essentials of clothing in fashioning the garb for people in this-day and age of the world. I have never yet felt inclined to conform to every foolish whim of fashion. If it should become style for men to chop their clothing off at the knees, and wear nothing on their limbs from knees to shoe tops but silk stockings, and cut their coat and shirt sleeves off at the shoulders, and leave out the greater part of their shirt front, I most certainly would be one man that would not dress in the style: for that sort of clothes would not fulfill the purpose for which they are worn. They would not be modest, would not hide nakedness, or protect the body: and most assuredly there would be nothing about them to ornament the inner man with a meek and quiet spirit. The question as to whether a garment is in style or not, never enters my mind. But does it measure up to the physical and Biblical requirements of clothing?

We ought to adorn ourselves, as Paul said, "with good works," avoiding extremes in anything—be temperate. Obey the injunction, "Let your moderation be known unto all men."

What Should Be Required of an African Before Baptism?

By William Haas

I have never been able to refuse baptism to one who gives convincing proof of having passed from death unto life. It has seemed to me that one who knows the Gospel with such heavenly wisdom as is necessary to make him turn with true heart-sorrow from the sins that caused the Son of God to be given to die for them, and to rejoice in the belief that his blood has washed these sins away ought to know enough to be baptized. If he has not had this experimental knowledge, I cannot baptize him, although he may have been under years of instruction, "ever learning but never able to come to a knowledge of the truth." In the Great Commission the order is (1) Make disciples, (2) Baptize them and (3) Teach them. The Greek word used means to make disciples and not to teach them and the American Revision respects this distinction wherever the word in its various forms occurs. The failure to do so in the Common Version has been the cause of much, if not of most, of our misunderstanding concerning the great commission order. Making disciples or scholars is for the purpose of instructing them; but one does not master what is in the curriculum in order to matriculate. Thus baptism properly begins the school of the Christian life.

2. A careful reading of Acts never gives one the impression that a line of teaching requiring a prescribed length of time was ever a pre-requisite of baptism. On the contrary, the words "straightway," "Why tarriest thou?" "What doth hinder?" "Who can forbid water?" and "Who was I that I should resist God?" and other statements referring to almost immediate baptism of both learned Jews and newly converted Gentiles seem to indicate that repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ only were required. Of course I respect the full Scriptural meaning of repentance. It is that change of mind about God, worked by Godly sorrow that makes one turn with true heart-sorrow and hate from the sins for which Christ died;—and of faith as that belief in the heart which results in righteousness. I do not make profession and confession synonymous.

3. There is no more outstanding and formal confession of Christ than that which confesses faith in his death for our sins and his resurrection for our evidence of justification. Colossians 2:12 connects this truth with baptism. But Jesus says, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before the Father." Should we deny this definite privilege of confession, (and, may I add, its benefit in the heavenly complement) to one who can sincerely make it, but has not fulfilled our course, or prescribed time of instruction? "Take heed that ye cause not to stumble one of these little ones," it were better that our ministry abruptly end than that we should attempt to close the door of blessing to one prepared for it by a heart changed.

4. "By grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, etc." Surely we want to hold clear that grace appropriated by faith and not any kind of works is that which saves. Doubtless those who require a certain line of teaching before baptism seek to insure it by the conversion of the catechumen. But if the truly converted native is led to believe that works also must be added as a proof of conversion, in the way of a term of instruction, is he not liable to fall into an error like that of the Galatians and seek to imitate the superficial and thus suppress or choke his real growth in the Spirit? One recognizes various degrees of harm in this method of delay in baptism, but it is almost inevitable that the catechumen shall unconsciously gain the impression that baptism is a benefit whose price consists of certain requirements not necessarily and exclusively, of faith alone.

5. Among other vital reasons why one should be admitted to fellowship as soon as born again, that of discipline should not be overlooked. As long as one is unbaptized, he is outside the visible organization. He may be in a certain kind of fellowship but he is not in the church. Such an one cannot be scripturally disciplined, for what have I to do with them that are without? It is only in the church that we can exercise the Spirit given privilege of disciplining the newborn babe. It may often subject us to identification with weak, faltering babes in Christ, but who dare grieve the Spirit even in one of them? It is only in "the body" that the wayward ones may be dealt with in such spirit and power that the Spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, and surely Africans as well as others need the benefit of loving corrective discipline. It is to be feared that church discipline is often considered as a kind of punishment, a fine for bad behavior instead of the tender, spiritual application of the Word and prayer with exhortation even when he fails to hear the church . . . I truly sympathize with those whose love for a pure church leads them to perfect the newly converted somewhat before running the risk of his weaknesses bringing trouble and stain upon the church . . . But I cannot refrain from sympathizing also with the young convert who having passed from death unto life needs the closest, warmest fellowship we can give him. Now I am conscious of the fact that judged by our standards, the birth of most Africans into the spiritual life is very weak and sometimes the signs of life are almost imperceptible. We are fully justified in refusing baptism to those who give no signs of the new life. Without going into the causes of this perplexing question and common problem, for the present let us confine ourselves to the treatment.

What is the physiological process and practice when the child is inactive at birth? The utmost care, for birth presupposes life as a rule. The whole question then resolves itself into the supreme one, "How may we know there has been a spiritual birth? By many tests, I have found that tried and true native members have been able to discern this change by more infallible rules than I have been able to formulate. I do not baptize any professed converts that the whole body cannot agree upon as having been born again. . . . The conclusive statement of the elders or deacons that the church is satisfied that the applicant believes in his heart, . . . I accept unless I see something the church does not, and in such a case I have yielded where the testimony of the applicant is clear as the candidate is to be joined to the church, not to me.

It is impossible to here recount all the questions asked a candidate, but the following is a summary: (1) When, where and from whom did you first hear the gospel? What were you told?

2. What effect did it have upon your mind as to God's goodness and love? As to your sinfulness? as to what God requires? as to what your past life has been, of your ignorance of the truth? As to God's way of cleansing? of the sufferings of Jesus for your sins? as to other effects of the message on your heart?

3. How do you now feel as to your past life? as to the sufferings your sins have caused Jesus to have? as to his love for you, as to the forgiveness of your sins and your love to him?

4. Are you sure he has washed you in his blood and why are you sure? Is it your heart's desire to do all he asks of you, to turn from every evil practice?

5. Is there any one whom you do not love? Do you desire God's blessing upon all? These questions are supplemented by various related ones to bring out the state of the heart toward God and man. Finally the applicant is asked if he thinks that baptism helps to wash away his sins in God's sight, and to add some merit aside from the confession of Christ's death and resurrection for him, and of his death to the old life and resurrection to the new. These questions are put in such a way as to focus continually upon the one great fact of his heart attitude towards the death of Christ for his sins and his resurrection power while all these involve the great doctrines comprised in regeneration, yet the points sought for are whether he wants to be a Christian in order to escape punishment alone, or because of sorrow toward God for the suffering his sins have caused to the heart of God. In all our evangelism the purpose is to bring the hearer face to face with what his sons have done in piercing the heart of Christ when he poured out his soul unto death as an offering for sin. This is emphasized more than punishment to be avoided or heaven to be gained. These are spoken of in order to show the need of salvation and the wonderful love of God in saving from the awful separation and punishment of hell, and in making them his children to live with him in his happy home.

The conviction leading us to this course is that only a heart touched with the love-sufferings of Jesus can ever have godly sorrow, and thus be able to respond in like love to him; to do his will through love alone unmixed with self love or selfish fears. This evangel has produced startling conversions in the face of severe persecution, as it seems to find the vital part of witchcraft and the fundamental superstitions of the native life and lay them open. The life of the unconverted native is one of such fear on every hand—danger on the path, in the village, from reptiles, beasts, diseases, evil spirits and from the uncanny deeds of his enemies who practice secret medicine against him: he knows little of real love, being suspected and suspicious. The medicine he seeks in order to counteract these fearsome evils is often worse than the evil itself. To believe that, as a mother's heart is wrung with the death throes of her child because of her love for it, so the heart of God in Christ has suffered for his sins—sins which would have meant eternal death and separation from God—To believe this is to accept a spirit which has no use for counter witchcraft, but to leave himself without revenge, like unto his Lord—only asking the Lord to shield and defend him.

Our experience has been that such a gospel and such a method of presenting it makes it comparatively easy to discover who has really accepted it, and the resulting conversions are often marked.

The most awful crime of sin against God leads us to show by every feasible illustration from their daily lives and from nature what God's love for the sinner has led him to suffer on account of the sinner's sins. The holiness of God which cannot permit sin of any kind in his presence more than the light can permit darkness to dwell where it shines; his love for the sinner while he utterly hates his sins, . . . makes God seek to cleanse the sinner rather than destroying him, just as we wash a garment rather than burning it. The cleansing blood of the Lord Jesus may it be presented with only one design—to sicken the natives' heart toward sin and fill it with love for God.

Briefly, God's revealed order of grace is—1st, Faith; 2nd, Baptism; 3rd, Works and Growth; he blesses this order and the book of Acts illustrates it. If we require works before baptism the native will always be weak in the grace of faith and he will be tempted to substitute his clever imitations for the genuine fruits of the Spirit. Live faith produces live works, but to reverse the order produces the dead works of a dead faith.

My Ideal Church

By Mrs. J. R. Laughlin

(Address at the Southeastern District Conference, Oak Hill, West Virginia, June 11-13, 1929)

When I first began to consider this subject, a picture of a very fine group of people assembled in a magnificent church, with stately music, gorgeous furnishings beautiful in every detail, presented itself to me. But realizing that the work of the church is to seek the lost, help the poor, and guide the blind, the scene changed, and I began to think of an ideal church as one which most effectively fulfills its obligations to the community in which it happens to be located. We will think of the church as a company of people rather than a building.

First, the question of size arises. Should it be large or small? Let us say medium, not less than 500. Larger churches have more work but less help. With this number we could have a fairly well organized body of workers, a group of all ages and all kinds, that is, in intellect, finances, etc.

We would have our folks attend regularly regardless of distance or weather, regardless of business—I mean church business—or pleasure. There was a time when business meetings were most uninteresting to me but if I asked too many questions of those who had attended I received this reply, "Why don't you go and see for yourself?" It is desirable that all members of a church be interested in all the activities of the church. Those who live some distance from the church and attend services regularly are a great inspiration.

What should be the finances of our ideal church? To be consistent the wealth of the church should be distributed in about the same proportion as it is in the community. It is hard to say this, in a way, because we could find so many uses for money. Surely we will have a few rich members and we shall have the whole membership honest and generous enough to give proportionately and systematically. That is God's way—one-tenth—and we cannot improve that. It has been said that poverty is caused by the misuse of wealth so this is another reason why we need families who have accumulated riches, because if they are successful in managing their own affairs well, they will be valuable in managing church affairs.

The church ought to provide for the instruction of children and youth in Christian truth and for their training in Christian life and service. Here we would lead for trained leaders—people who will dedicate their talents to be used in religious education and who will devote their lives to the problems of training children. A good leader will train others for leaders. This calls for such traits as loyalty, courage, energy, determination, faithfulness, cheerfulness, reverence and respect for wishes of elders. It is very important that workers possess these qualities because they are being imitated by younger folks.

Sociability is desirable among church folk but not to the extent that it interferes with reverence. "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise." It seems to me that we should be immediately aware that we are entering the house of God, that material things be left behind and our minds be in an attitude of worship, when we go into the church. We sometimes hear folks criticize sermons and we are made to wonder how much they have really heard—they have been so busy talking. Worship is a reach after God and should help us to live purely, to speak truly, to follow Christ as our Master.

There must also be unity in our purpose and plans for the church—no factions or divisions. Hear Paul's exhortation in First Corinthians 1:10, "Now I beseech you brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions among you; but that you be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. Here we may draw a lesson from the Quakers both in their little speaking and their willingness to agree. Unity may not mean unanimity. (I have seen splendid examples of those who were on the losing side keep right on in church work and this is as it should be. On the other hand, we are made to feel sorry for those, who, when some action is taken which does not meet their approval, express their thoughts too freely, making others unhappy and themselves more so. We would have the members of an ideal church united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity—more charity, more self-denial for the comfort and welfare of others. We would have them gentle in their judgments, reflecting on their own shortcomings before they pronounce judgment, in other words, practicing constantly the Golden Rule. Faultfinding becomes a habit with some folks; they do not spare even the pastor. I think this is a very helpful motto:

"Do not look for wrong and evil,

You will find fault if you do.

If you find fault with your neighbor,

He may see some fault in you."

Self-control is one of the distinguishing marks of a Christian. Kind speech is the overflow of a kind heart. The story is told of the pagan chiefs who refused to have their right hand baptized. The sword hand never was made Christian but remained pagan. The one who gives this story says also that often it is the tongue that seems not to have been baptized and made Christian. "The fruit of the spirit" should be manifest in every Christian's life and they are "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith meekness, temperance."

We would have the services dignified and impressive so as to bring out the best that is in folks and that all may cultivate "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." Grace is hard to define. It is the refined element which shows in our speech and conduct; the element which helps us to "endure hardness like a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Those who cultivate the spirit of grace are the pastor's helpers. There is a great need for persons so qualified that it might not need be said of our preacher as was said of one in a little story: Walter had heard considerable talk about installing the new preacher. He asked, "What does that mean—does it mean to put him in a stall and shut him in?" "No," replied the father, "it means to hitch him to the church so that he can pull the congregation who are seated inside." Persons who have a desire to be used, without ambition to be conspicuous, are a great help to the pastor, to the church and to the community in making the teachings of Christ a reality in the world.

One holy church, one army strong,

One steadfast, high intent,

One working band, one harvest-song,

One King omnipotent.

FRENCH CATHOLICS SEEK PAPAL RESIDENCE

French Catholics, impelled by the strongest yearning toward Rome that has gripped them since the separation of the Church and States twenty-five years ago, have started a movement to offer the Palace of Popes at Avignon to the Papal State. If their wishes become a reality Pope Pius XI will bring back to the banks of the Rhone River the splendor which departed in 1377 when Pope Clement VII relinquished the palace as the seat of Catholicism. According to a tentative plan of religious fervents, the government would be asked to give the historical palace to the Vatican with the understanding that the Pope be invited to spend a substantial part of the year within its high walled enclosure.—Methodist Protestant.

"CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER" OPINIONS

Two years ago the Illinois legislature gave Governor Len Small an "immunity bath" during his tax accounting difficulties by repealing the act for ouster by quo warranto proceedings of public officials whose eligibility was questioned. Now that the Small rule is over, the legislature has restored the former rule. Of course, it is a partly new legislature, but it is estimated that about seventy-five former members of the legislature changed their votes. Only six members stood for retaining the "immunity" law. It would seem that circumstances alter opinions as well as cases. It is acrobatic feats like this which lowers the confidence of the public in the integrity of legislators.—Presbyterian Advance.

DR. OZORA DAVIS FACES THE FUTURE WITH CHEER

Dr. Ozora S. Davis retired as moderator of the Congregational Council at its present session and, because of ill health, has resigned from the presidency of the Chicago Theological Seminary, effective October 1. He has been elected professor emeritus for life by the institution which, in 20 years, he has built up from a small school of 100 students to one of 500, and with a home costing more than a million dollars. But Dr. Davis, although pronounced by surgeons the victim of an incurable malady, expects during the next few months to write some books, especially a biography of the late Victor F. Lawson, for a generation the editor of the Chicago Daily News, and a philanthropist who made possible the new home of the seminary. Dr. Davis is 62 now, but as he puts it, he has been "a plaything for the surgeons," and cannot look forward to health. Speaking of death to an interviewer, he said a few days ago: "Of course, I don't want to go—this is a mighty interesting world and I'm having a mighty good time in it. But I'm no more afraid of going than of going through the door of this study. For I know that I shall have a spiritual body to do with as I please and I won't have to worry about the aches and pains of the poor physical body." Dr. Davis thinks there is more religion in the popular mind today than ever before, and sees modern young people as "the finest I have ever known."—Christian Century.

DECEPTIVE ARMY INDUCEMENTS

Posters showing the advantages and delights of army life, designed to induce young men to enlist, come in for criticism at the hands of the "World Tomorrow." It notes that the posters discreetly omit the statistics of suicide in the army. Suicide is the highest cause of death, the next highest being pneumonia; the rate of suicide is said to be about 2.5 per thousand, while in the general population the rate is nearly .13 per thousand. These figures would make the rate in the army nearly twenty times that in the general population. Whatever the facts may be with regard to army life, our young men ought to know them, the bad as well as the attractive. It is not fair to a young and loyal citizen for his own government to decoy him into service by a deceptive showing. In private business such representation carries a hard name.—The Baptist.

DENOMINATIONS VERSUS UNION OR DENOMINATION PLUS UNION

Before any satisfactory approach can be made toward that general union of Christians which all Christians long to see, one point needs clarification. Are denominations in their essential nature consistent or inconsistent with true Christian union? At one extreme are those who oppose all proposals for union on the ground that all the advocacy of union is disloyalty to the denomination. At the other extreme are those who denounce all denominations on the ground that they destroy Christian unity. Which is right? Neither. A denomination is a religious group associated under a distinctive name to maintain some specific principle or practice of religion. Such groups are natural, necessary, valuable and right. They may or may not be accompanied by schism. But if they are so accompanied, the schism is due not to the existence of the denomination but to the attitude which persons hold toward one another with regard to it. Denominations as such do not prevent union. They may even promote union. They are largely used as agencies for the promotion of common religious purposes, and may be more largely so used. No program of union based on opposition to denominations as such is valid or can succeed. True Christian unity finds a place for them and uses them.—The Baptist.

Why the Short Pastorate and How Prolong It

chances of continued and effective service. What can be done to save the church from such a situation? What can counteract the tendency toward the development and the spread of the feeling that the pastor does not suit and that a change ought to be made just when he might be rendering the church his best service? There is just one thing that will stop that evil influence, and that is the spirit of Christian love. We need just to heed the words of the Lord Jesus when he says, "A new commandment give I unto you that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." A revival of Christian love will make for the spirit of agreement in the church, prove the genuineness of discipleship to the Lord Jesus and save the pastor in many cases to an indefinitely lengthened pastorate of invaluable service.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Eph. 4:17-32. The Walk with God. We thank thee, our Father, that thou hast given us such intensely practical rules for living; that thou hast made it so plain that even a foolish one need not err therein. As we begin this new week's work, may each one walk in accordance with the teachings of this passage. May no corrupt communications proceed from our mouths; may we remember that money is not the only thing that may be stolen; and above all, may we in no way grieve the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. Amen.

TUESDAY

Eph. 5:1-6. As Children. Just as a dear child has learned to have complete trust and confidence in a loving father, so should we learn to trust and obey our Father in heaven. And just as children are ignorant and wholly innocent of the terrible things enumerated in this passage, so may each one of us remain free from their taint. May we also realize the serious and importance of the so-called "little sins," when foolish talking and jesting are classed as unbecoming, along with idolatry and whore-mongering.

WEDNESDAY

Eph. 5:7-16. Unfruitful. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." There is no greater condemnation of the works of darkness than that they are "unfruitful." The unfruitful branch, we know, shall be cut off and cast into the fire. May we ever be found redeeming the time, that we may not be ashamed before him at his coming.

THURSDAY

Eph. 5:17-21. Giving Thanks. Always, and for all things! "Oh, it's easy enough to be happy," wrote the poet, "when life flows along like a song." But when the way seems dark and forbidding, and we see no way out—can we give thanks then? Happy the man who walks so close with God that at such times he may feel the "touch of his hand on mine," and may know that HE is leading and will bring us through to the light, and that we shall be the better and stronger for having trod this path with him. Let us give thanks always for all things!

FRIDAY

Eph. 5:22-33. The Bride of Christ. It is a little difficult to know whether the greater emphasis of this passage is upon the relationship of husband and wife, or of Christ and his church. It makes little difference: there is no higher ideal of home life than that represented in this passage, and there is no better illustration of the close sympathy and communion between Christ and his church than the home that is ordered after this pattern. May each home be so ordered. Amen.

SATURDAY

Eph. 6:1-9. As Unto Christ. The solution of all labor troubles is bound up in these verses. Whether our masters are just or unjust, so long as they are our masters and we follow Christ, we must serve them not only with eye service, but serve them even as we would serve Christ himself. Of course, as masters, we must show every consideration for those in our employ if we expect any consideration from the Master of all. God hasten the day when such understanding may obtain among men!

SUNDAY

Eph. 6:10-24. Warfare. May we realize as never before that there is a real conflict between the forces of righteousness and the forces of Satan. May we acquit ourselves therein as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. And as we fight on, in the midst of the warfare, may we have that inward peace, and love with faith, that is from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.—T. C. L.

The Bible in Education

By Wilbert W. White, President, The Biblical Seminary in New York

We can put the Bible into education once we really believe it to be worth while to do so. To the worthwhileness I address myself.

The Bible is the product of the highest type of education. An amazing amount of the finest physical, mental, social and moral, as well as spiritual discipline is evidently back of the emergence of the Bible into history. Thus only can the Bible's existence be accounted for. What has not the Bible done in history since it came into existence? We meet it at every turn. In a very real sense it has made history. The Bible cannot be studied apart from history, nor can history be understood apart from the Bible: Produced by life it in turn has made everything live whithersoever it has gone. And yet we exclude the Bible from education: Is there any need of support of our proposition? Witness the high estimate of the Bible by the masters in practically every department of high accomplishment. Can I better make a powerful plea for the Bible in education, which it is my earnest desire to do, than by extensive quotations concerning it from masters in world leadership? Like responds to like. Deep calls to deep. Life recognizes itself. The thoughtful, the true, the expectant, the adventurous, pioneers, pathfinders, the sacrificial, the suppliant—these flock together in scorn of time and space. No boundaries can keep them apart.

Immanuel Kant says: "The existence of the Bible as a book for the people is the greatest benefit which the human race has ever experienced. Every attempt to belittle is a crime against humanity."

Lord Bacon says: "There never was found in any age of the world, either religion or law that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible."

Ralph Waldo Emerson says: "The most original book in the world is the Bible. Shakespeare, the first literary genius of the world, the highest in whom the moral is not the predominating element, leans on the Bible; his poetry presupposes it. People imagine that the place the Bible holds in the world it owes to miracles. It owes it simply to the fact that it came out of profounder depths of thought than any other book."

It will interest you to follow this testimony of Emerson by his lovely report of contact with Carlyle at Craigen Puttock, Scotland. In his "English Traits" Emerson says: "We went out to walk over long hills, and looked at Crippel, then without his cap, and down into Wordsworth's country. Then we sat down and talked of the immortality of the soul. It was not Carlyle's fault that we talked on that topic, for he had the natural disinclination of every nimble spirit to bruse itself against walls, and did not like to place himself where no step could be taken. But he was honest and true, and cognizant of the subtle links that bind the ages together, and he saw how every event affects all the future. 'Christ died on the tree,' said he, 'that built Donscore Kirk yonder, that brought you and me together. Time has only a relative existence.'"

Carlyle's own words about the Bible, in part, are as follows: "The period of the Reformation was a judgment day for Europe, when all the nations were presented with the open Bible and all the emancipation of heart and intellect which an open Bible involves." Of the Book of Job he says: "There is no book in the Bible or out of it of equal literary merit." Here belongs Victor Hugo's estimate of Job. He says: "Tomorrow, if all literature was to be destroyed and it was left to me to retain one work only, I should save Job."

"While the Bible has never numbered among its religious believers a fourth part of the human race," says Professor Phelps, "yet it has swayed a greater amount of mind than any other volume the world has ever known. It has the singular faculty of attracting to itself the thinkers of the world either as friends or foes always and everywhere."

I shall insert here a summary of what the noted Jurist Wines, in his commentary on "The Laws of the Ancient Hebrews," says are the fundamental ideas at the basis of the Hebrew State. These he finds in the Old Testament portion of the Bible. I submit, are they not challenging to the educationalist?

They are:

1. The unity of God.
2. The unity of the state.
3. Civil liberty.
4. Political equality.
5. An elective magistracy.
6. The sovereignty of the people.
7. The responsibility of public officers to their constituents.
8. A prompt, cheap and impartial administration of justice.
9. Peace and friendship with other people.
10. Encouragement of agriculture.
11. Universal industry.
12. The inviolability of private property.
13. The sacredness of the family relation.
14. The sanctity of human life.
15. Universal education.
16. Social union.
17. A well adjusted balance of power.
18. An enlightened, dignified, venerable public opinion.

The words of Chief Justice Taft fit in here. They are: "The classic English of the Bible has given shape to American literature. Its spirit has influenced American ideals in life and laws and government."

So also those of Whitelaw Reid: "The Bible has been the basis and main-spring of Anglo-Saxon development for the last three centuries, having moulded its morals, lifted its legislation and its jurisprudence, and inspired its literature."

Daniel Webster falls in line with a word to be soberly heeded: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity."

Webster is supported by Professor Edward Koenig, of the University of Bonn, thus: "The guarding of the people's moral and religious interests is the greatest factor in the promoting of civilization."

Hear also Chancellor Kent, one of the greatest jurists of America: "The general diffusion of the Bible is the most effectual way to civilize and humanize mankind, to purify and exalt the general system of public morals, to give efficiency to the just principles of international and municipal law, to endorse the observance of prudence, temperance, justice, and fortitude, and to improve all the relations of social and domestic life."

For further emphasis of literary values provided by the Bible, note the following:

Edmund Gosse, the eminent English critic.—"When young men ask me for advice in the formation of a prose style, I have no counsel for them except this: Read aloud a portion of the Old and another of the New Testament as often as you possibly can."

Sir William Jones (familiar with the literature of twenty-eight languages—1746-1794).—"I have carefully and regularly perused the Scriptures and am of the opinion that this volume, independent of its Divine origin, contains more sublimity, purer morals, more important history and finer strains of eloquence than can be collected from all the other books in whatsoever language they may be written."

Richard Hurrell Froude.—"This Bible thoroughly understood is a literature in itself—the rarest and richest in all departments of thought and imagination."

In this same line is a striking testimonial to the Bible uttered by George A. Dana, the illustrious Editor of the New York Sun, in an address at Union College to a graduating class of journalists. He said: "There are some books that are absolutely indispensable to the kind of education that we are contemplating, and to the profession that we are considering; and of all those the most indispensable, the most useful, the one whose knowledge is most effective is the Bible. There is no book from which more valuable lessons can be learned. I am considering it now not as a religious book, but as a manual of utility, of professional preparation and professional use for a journalist. There is perhaps no book whose style is more suggestive and more instructive, from which you learn more directly that sublime simplicity which never exaggerates, which recounts the greatest event, with solemnity, of course, but without sentimentality or affectation, none which you open with such confidence and lay down with such reverence; there is no book like the Bible."

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for August 4)

Belshazzar's Feast

Scripture Lesson—Daniel 5:1-31.
Printed Text—Daniel 5:17-28.
Devotional Reading—Psalm 1.

Golden Text—Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot.—Ephesians 5:18.

Introductory Note

Nebuchadnezzar had taken the gold and silver vessels from the temple at Jerusalem when he destroyed that building with the major part of the city itself. He put them into his treasury as his own property, but we hear of nothing worse being done by him to them. It remained for one of his least powerful successors to the Chaldean throne, Belshazzar, his grandson, to desecrate them. His forces having been routed by Cyrus the Persian, he had retired within the city walls, where he had laid up provision for twenty years. For two years Cyrus has in vain laid siege to Babylon when Belshazzar and his lords celebrated an idolatrous feast and drink wine in the sacred vessels taken from the Jewish temple. "It was the inspiration of a mind essentially profane, to propose the prostitution of consecrated vessels to the vile use of a drunkard's orgy. It argued a radically blasphemous heart. Soon the reeling guests, led by the king, are quaffing deep out of the holy cups with shouts of scurrilous merriment and rowdy acclamations of their own leering gods. Belshazzar well pleased has thrown himself back on the cushions of his couch. His eyes rolling in the wideness of excited intoxication are suddenly caught and fixed by a sight at which his fevered heart stands still. Just above him a hand appears, dreadfully impersonal, yet instinct with life. The fingers curve themselves as though holding a stylus, and slowly begin to write upon that part of the whitened wall which was thrown into strong illumination by the golden candlesticks beside him. With an awestricken fascination he follows the ghostly hand till, having finished its task, it disappears."

The writing was in terms that none of the magicians could read or explain. Through the influence of Nicrotis, the queen mother, Daniel was sent for, and after faithfully and fearlessly reproving the king for his wickedness, he reads the hand-writing and explains to Belshazzar that his kingdom has come to an end. And the impending doom fell on the city that night by the seizure of the empire by the Medes and the Persians.

According to Herodotus, the gates opening towards the river Euphrates were left open and unguarded because of the drunkenness of soldiers, and the Persian prince Cyrus had no difficulty in entering with the troops he had marched down the river's bed after drawing off the waters in an artificial channel.

Touch Not the Unclean Thing

"Touch not the unclean thing" should sound into the heart-depths of every child of God in reference to this matter. Intoxicating drink writes God's curse upon the whole nature of man in lines undeniable and terrible to see. God's providential government agrees with his Word. There is no contradiction between them. And God's Word very often finds its grandest comment in human experience.—Dickson. A gentleman took his son to a drunken row in a tavern in England some years ago, and there the inmates were fighting and swearing, and he said, "Do you know what causes all this?" "No, sir." His father pointed to the decanters sparkling with wine and rum and said, "That is the cause; will you take a drink?" The boy started back with terror and exclaimed "No!" Then he took the child to the cage of a man with delirium tremens. The boy gazed upon him affrighted as the drunkard raved and tore, thinking the demons were after him, he howled, "Leave me alone! ... I see 'em, they're coming." "Do you know the cause of this, my boy?" "No, sir." "This is caused by excessive drink; will you have some?" and the boy shrank with a shudder as he refused the cup. Next they called at the miserable hovel of a drunkard where was squalid poverty, the drunken father beating his wife and with oaths knocking down his children. "What has caused this?" The son was silent. When told that it was whiskey, he declared he would never touch a drop in his life. But suppose the lad should be invited to a wedding feast, where with fruit and cake the wine-cup is passed amid scenes of cheerfulness and gayety, where all the friends are respectable, beloved and kind to each other, and he should be asked to drink, would he refuse? Or suppose him walking out with father on New Year's Day to call upon his young lady friends to enjoy the festivities of the ushering of the new year. With other things, wine is handed to him by a smiling girl. His sociable father, whom he loves and has been taught to respect, presses the wine-glass to his own lips, and compliments the young lady upon the excellence of its quality; what wonder if the son follows example? "Touch not, taste not, handle not."

Prohibition of the Saloon

I regard the cause of Prohibition as virtually settled, although it may take as long to release a community from the curse of drink as it is likely to do in the case of murder and burglary.

"A community has a right to rid itself of social pests the same as other dangers to health and property. This nation has taken this step in defense, as a great experiment. I see no evidence of its failure among law-abiding people; and these constitute the vast majority of us. If we do not like a law, there are very simple and direct ways of changing it, not through defiance.

"We head a good deal of the modification of the Volstead Law, accompanied by the admission that the saloon has been a monstrous evil which must be checked. As a matter of fact, there is no way by which alcohol for drinking purposes can be made acceptable and accessible. There is no substitute for the saloon, short of its suppression. In fact, things are going on as well as could be expected. Whether we wish it or not, Prohibition has become a national issue. The American people have decided and will never turn backward, although minor details may be subject sometimes to change, but not, I believe, through the methods that have been thus far put forward."—David Starr Jordan, Leland Stanford University. Reprinted from "Signs of the Times."

"Liquor Control" in Canada

The use of liquor has alarmingly increased and alcoholism in its various manifestations has become correspondingly prevalent. Manufacturers still receive their profits in an unprecedented volume. Greater facilities are afforded by which the illicit dealer may procure supplies. While the revenue has increased, Brewers and Distillers get the greater part of the profits. The people, whom the Government should protect, bear the losses. Money spent in liquor is loss of prosperity. Use of liquor is liable to engender a cumulative liquor-in-control appetite. The user risks losing health and happiness, risks losing character and friends, risks losing life, risks causing death. In short, the 'Liquor Control' method in theory is based upon fallacy and specious claims; in practice it leads to results that are deplorable and wasteful both to human life and well being."—J. Gibson Hume of Toronto, From "The Congregationalist."

Questions for the Treasurer

By Rev. Harry Thomas Stock

1. Do I count all money received in the collection in the presence of the secretary or some other person, making a public report of the total?
2. Do I keep a careful record of all dues paid, and notify the collector (unless collecting is also my duty) of those who are in arrears? In attempting to collect back dues do I combine a businesslike procedure with good nature?
3. Do I pay all bills promptly when authorized, paying no bills whatever without the proper instruction from the executive committee or other responsible persons?
4. Am I very careful never to borrow a cent from the treasury of the group for my own personal use? Am I sure that I never make an exception in this matter?
5. Do I keep my books as carefully as if I were the cashier of a bank?
6. Do I keep the money in a bank? If there is enough, it should be kept in a checking-account, all bills being paid by check and the stubs carefully saved.

7. Do I make regular reports, finding out from some capable adult just exactly how businesslike reports should be made?

8. Do I have my books examined at least twice a year by the executive committee, an auditing committee, or some person appointed to do it? This will save worry later if a mistake should be found or if some other system of bookkeeping is needed.

9. Do I regularly compare the receipts and expenditures with the budget? If the expenses are running ahead of the amount agreed upon in the budget, do I take the matter up with the executive committee before paying such bills?

10. Do I keep my records in a safe place, carefully arranged and filed.—C. E. World.

MISSIONS

Apolo of the Pigmies

Apolo was a boy in Uganda in the days of Alexander Mackay and the early Uganda martyrs. Impressed by the courage of the martyrs, he, too, became a Christian. His adventurous journeys took this African missionary farther and farther west, till at last he crossed the great Ruwenzori Mountain to the vast pygmy forest beyond where dangers and adventures awaited him.

The storm broke with a vengeance. One poor, deserted woman whom Apolo had protected, had become a Christian. The priests cursed with terrible oaths any other woman who should become a Christian. The king, a weak and vicious chief, proclaimed that he would give a large present to anyone who would burn Apolo's house to the ground with Apolo inside. Very soon, as Apolo knelt in prayer within his hut one night, he heard whispers outside, and then the pungent smell of smoke came drifting through the walls. He quietly prayed on. Suddenly there was a shout, and a body of men broke into the house, now blazing from thatch to floor, and dragged him outside. Spears gleamed in the firelight, yet none laid a finger on him. They led him away to the king. "Why did you not kill him?" he roared. They replied, "We were afraid."

For a time he was unmolested. Then the king, urged on by the witch-doctors, again sent men to forbid him to preach, or he would be killed. Apolo said to them: "Go and tell your master that God's messengers were often killed in days gone by, but it did not stop other messengers from taking their places; tell him that I cannot cease." Then the king, in a rage, sent men with cords to bind him. Apolo quietly asked leave of his captors to tell them about God's love. Spellbound, they listened; then they rose and cut his cords and returned, saying: "Apolo is doing no harm; he is only teaching the people that God loves them; we could not bring him."

Then the king sent his prime minister, with a fresh bodyguard, who led Apolo, manacled, to the king's quarters. There he was stripped naked, and threshed with twenty lashes from a hippopotamus hide whip. The lash made its way through the skin and cut cruel wounds in his flesh. Weak, and sick with pain, he was driven to his house, where he lay for days in agony. When he recovered, he summoned the people again to the small church which he had built. They came, and he taught them and prayed with them fearlessly as before.

The worst was now to come. He was once more captured and bound. This time the king was determined to kill him. Lash after lash fell upon Apolo's naked body, until at last he tottered and fell unconscious. Then the order was given to take up the body and throw it into the long grass of the jungle. "For," said the king with a sneer, "if life remains, it will not be long before he is carried off by the wild beasts." So the stricken, bleeding body was taken into the jungle, to be a prey for the hyenas and wildcats.

But they had made their reckoning too soon. The Christian woman whom he had befriended stole out secretly into the jungle, to the lonely spot where the body of her teacher and friend lay pale, motionless and bleeding. She knelt and wept beside it. It should at least have decent burial. Suddenly, to her intense joy, there was a flickering movement of the body. "He is alive; he is alive!" she whispered to herself. Quickly she ran to a stream and brought water to bathe his face and wash his wounds. She carried him, with almost superhuman strength, to a deserted hut on the edge of the forest, laid a fire of sticks, and with soft fresh grass made a rough bed for him. Then she went stealthily to her own hut and fetched wood and water and fire.

For many a long week in that lonely hut she tended him secretly and carefully like a child, till gradually his dreadful wounds were healed, and his strength slowly returned. When he was quite well again, he told her he must go back and preach to the people once more. She besought him with tears to fly secretly from Mboga. But that was not Apolo's way.

One day he made a dramatic appearance in the village church, calling the people to worship by beating the church drum which had so long been silent. There was no mistaking that sound. The whole place was soon in a ferment. "Apolo is risen from the dead," was the cry. The king, trembling with fear, wrapped his cloak around him and set out to the church to know the truth. He found everything as in the old days. Apolo, book in hand, sat reading the Gospel story to the people. When he saw the king, he rose, and, with a cheerful smile, welcomed him to the service.

Then a marvel happened. The king knelt humbly before the Christian whom he had tried to murder, and begged for forgiveness. He asked that he, too, might become a reader, and promised to help the work with all his power. Apolo took the king's hands in his, and lifted up his heart and his voice to God in prayer and thanksgiving. Praise rose from that grass-built sanctuary to heaven, where "the angels of God rejoice over one sinner that repenteth." Before long, there was another feast in Mboga, when "Tabalo," the king, became "Paul," the servant of God.

A new church was soon built, for the people in scores were becoming Christians; and when Apolo called for volunteers for missionary work among the pygmies of the dark forest, they readily came forward. The pygmies know now of One kinder and better than the cruel, strong "spirit of the forest" who was worshipped with offerings of honey and fruit and meat in the hut-temples of the deep forest fastness.

* * * * *
 Canon Apolo Kivebulaya (for he is now a Canon of the Church of England) is an old man, and known throughout all the Uganda Church as a leader and a saint, but he is today as humble and unspoiled, cheery and unselfish as in the day when he trudged up the mountain side of the Everest of Central Africa, with his knapsack on his back, Christ at his side, and the great missionary adventure still ahead of him in the dark pygmy forest.—Missionary Review of the World.

Christian Missions the Best Investment for Life

As a man grows old and the end of the road begins to come into view he asks himself some serious questions: "Have I invested life in the best way? Have I given it to the highest and the richest causes? Have I laid out whatever God gave me in the way which would best please Jesus Christ? Men and women who have given their lives to the foreign missionary enterprise, do not question as to whether they did right in thus devoting their lives. They have no desire to do otherwise than they have done. Dr. John L. Nevius was one of the most cautious and prudent of all the missionaries of the church. I heard him say that he never had come home from China on a furlough without meeting ministers at home who regretted that they had not gone as missionaries, but that he never, in his long life, had met a foreign missionary who regretted having gone.

Some years ago I visited a little village in southwestern Scotland, the name of which is unknown to the world save for one thing. There in the midst of the village at the end of the village green was the monument to Robert Moffat who had gone out from that village to Africa. He lifted the little unknown Scotch town into the deathless records of service rendered for mankind. Who would know Blantyre, the hamlet of weavers' homes, not far from Glasgow, were it not for the fact that out of one humble weaver's house in that village went David Livingstone to rend the night of Africa asunder and let in the light? Who, of the thousands of visitors to the city of Calcutta, ever asks to be shown the house in which Thackeray was born, or the house in which Macaulay lived, or the palace where Warren Hastings reigned? But many a discerning foreigner asks to be taken out to the little Dutch burying ground of Serampore to see the resting place of William Carey, the English cobbler who rediscovered and retaught the world the glory of this missionary ideal.

Even when lives are not lifted clear up and written visibly on the record as these lives have been, still when men and women have given themselves to this enterprise and have been forgotten, they are well content, because they know that they have built all they have had into the best and most enduring work that could be done in the world. Dr. Joseph P. Cochran of Uramia, Persia, was a prince in the land where he lived. His name was all the passport that any traveler required. We went through the most turbulent regions of Western Asia, healing thousands of sick folks, the counselor and judge among the helpless himself a bulwark if justice and confidence in the disturbed sections of western Persia and eastern Turkey. He did all this in his quiet and unadvertised way, and was well content that he had put his life in the richest and purest enterprise in the world. Thousands of others with joy also have hidden their lives, unknown to men, in the unseen but enduring service of the stranger peoples.—Robert E. Speer, in "Are Foreign Missions Done For?"

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

This was a combined trip in representing the College at District Conference and also canvassing the church for college endowment. Last year when I was in the state, the church here had a building program on and my visit was deferred until this time.

The Brethren here under the leadership of Brother Ankrum have done a fine piece of work in erecting a very complete and modern church building, also a fine brick parsonage. It was a heroic undertaking for a small membership made up practically of people who have very little of this world's goods, but rich in faith, sacrifice and labor.

I have attended the last three conferences in this District and the conference in Oak Hill to me was the best. A fine program, able addresses, a working program with a vision and a united spirit of love and cooperation.

It was a pleasure to meet these people and get better acquainted. Brother Ankrum, who is serving his seventh year, has endeared himself to the people and community and will leave a monument to his service and faithful ministry. He is a graduate of Ashland and needless to say he has the interest of the College at heart. After the conference I made my home with him and he placed himself and car at my service in soliciting for the College.

I found the people had gone their limit in financing the building, some having more than doubled their original pledges, yet they were willing to give aid to the school, not in proportion to their interest, but as they were able. What more could one ask? Their gifts were $395.00.

Bethlehem Church, just a few miles from Oak Hill, has united with the Oak Hill congregation and while they maintain a Sunday school and preaching services the membership is one organization and is served by the Oak Hill pastor.

Gatewood Church

This church is located about seven miles from Oak Hill. As the present they have no pastor. In the past the Church of the Brethren, located near, united on one pastor for both congregations. I gave the College pictures here to a full house, made up largely of young people. The people here are poor in this world's goods. The church has a place in the community life and should be maintained. There are wonderful possibilities in the large group of young people. The gift here was $10.00.

The total amount from this report is $405.00.

MARTINSBURG AND MCKEE, PENNSYLVANIA

It is the consensus of opinion, I believe, that the two churches, Martinsburg and McKee, are in a better position to go forward because of their oneness and harmony than they have been for years. In this we rejoice, and because of it we expect great things for the coming year.

Beginning March the 25th, Dr. E. J. Pace was with us for one week. His lectures and Bible teaching proved to be a great spiritual uplift to both the church and the community in and around Martinsburg.

Rev. R. I. Humbert of Lake Odessa, Michigan, began an evangelistic meeting with us on May the 5th, and closed on May the 25th. The first two weeks were spent with the McKee church and the last week with the church at Martinsburg. During these weeks 37 came forward, 25 to be received into the church, 22 by baptism, 3 by letter and 13 to reconsecrate their lives.

Brother Humbert's messages were ably presented and highly appreciated. He has a style all of his own, using a different chart for each message. Any one desiring the Word would do well to engage him for a meeting.

On June the 9th, the writer began a meeting with the church where Brother Humbert is pastor in Michigan, and closed Monday evening the 24th with communion service. The fellowship with Brother Humbert and his people was all that one could possibly wish for. Brother Humbert's work there with his people is very gratifying. As to the immediate results of the meeting we will leave that for the pastor to report. We wish, however, to thank both pastor and his people for their kindness that added so much to our joy and comfort. "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth."—(3 John 2).

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

At a recent business meeting of the First Brethren church at Clay City, Indiana, it was unanimously agreed to retain our present pastor, Brother Harvey Oberholtzer, for another year.

During recent years our little congregation has scarcely held its own, because of the fact that the work is scarce in this vicinity and many of our young people have been forced to locate at other places. This of course, scatters our membership, and a scattered membership naturally results in some losses, especially among those who are not firmly grounded in the faith. This shows beyond a doubt, that one of the important missions of our pastors should be to thoroughly instill into their disciples the doctrines once delivered unto the saints that when they are forced out into the world they will not wander away, but being ready to render a reason for the faith that is in them, they will instead be missionaries for the cause wherever they may go.

On the evening of July the fifth, we held our communion services which were quite well attended. The entire service of the evening was very sincere and reverent and we believe that the Spirit manifested itself fully in the heart of everyone present. The pastor explained quite clearly the meaning of the various acts of the service and knowing these things, we were truly happy in doing them.

Outside of a small organization of the Church of the Brethren, about five miles from us, and with whom we work in the fullest harmony, there is no other organization of a similar faith for many miles. If the Brotherhood believes in its plea for a whole gospel teaching, we feel that any support and encouragement they can give to such isolated congregations as ours would be a valuable missionary investment.

MARLIN P. GOSHORN,
Corresponding Secretary.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The reports of the various organizations at our regular quarterly meeting shows a satisfactory closing of our year's work.

Our church officers continue their work uninterrupted for another year. Brother Floyd Hoagland and Millard Layton were elected to fill the office of church trustees.

Sunday, July 7, was our cash offering day—$1,006.90 was paid into the building fund. We witnessed the burning of our first $5,000 note with a satisfaction that comes with a conquered task. The church called Brother W. I. Duker to serve another year. We feel we are asking much when we ask them to serve the eighth year, yet we feel long service has fitted both pastor and people for better work the eighth. We mutually agree his work here is not yet finished.

We are glad to assure our readers that Brother Decker is gradually gaining strength from his rather serious operation. Yet it will be some months before he can subject himself to severe mental strain. He is again assuming full charge of the work of the church. During Brother Ducker's absence, the work continued uninterrupted. Brother Rench, Brother Coleman, and the writer filled the pulpit. Our people were loyal to the work and the cause.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

ARDMORE-SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Many Brethren Evangelist field reports introduce the plural, personal pronoun "we" in the opening assertions. He, the Infinite; they, the local Israelites and I, the pastor, are the persons comprising the "we" in this article. We are sympathetically united, because we share in each others distresses and successes. We are instrumentally united, because we love each other and have similar motives and objectives. We are organically united, "Ye in me and I in you, that ye all may be one," for the building of personality, and for the preserving of men's souls from everlasting torment. Our field of activity is Ardmore, South Bend, Indiana.

Previously Brother A. G. Carpenter, our good Moderator and wise counselor, gave a report of the accomplishments here. Since he gave his report from the angle of a layman, I desire to give a brief survey of the field from a pastor's standpoint.

We are located in the western suburban community of South Bend. We are not in the city limits but the church building is but one-half mile distant. The church is in its infancy, having been organized but eleven years ago. It has been through the untiring efforts of the entire group that the church has survived, and grown from a struggling, discouraged few to a membership better than 150, and to the place where they are supporting a full-time pastor. It is a great field for the future, because it is the only church in a growing community of better than 200 dwellings.

The people are religiously religious. Their loyalty to the worship service is commendable. Their cooperation, in promoting objectives, is encouraging. Peculiar, to most churches, we have our best crowds at the second service.

The Bible school, under the efficient leadership of Brother M. P. Runyan, is steadily growing. Recently we had 132 present when the temperature was perspiringly high. This group is very encouraging, because a large percentage of the attendance can be classed as children and young people. The church has always been blessed with young, plastic life to be fashioned and molded like the Master. On the evening of Sunday, June 30th, the Sunday school presented the Children's Day program to a crowded house. The Christian Endeavor is active, planning and laboring to create interest, that it might survive the summer months. The Women's Missionary Society and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha are wielding their respective influences in the church. The Boy Scout troop is growing by leaps and bounds and serves its purpose in the lives of the young boys.

It is our prayer that prayers will be lifted to the throne of Grace, for us, by all Brethren, as we labor together here.

In the Master's Name,
C. R. SENSENBAUGH.

THE WORK IN DELAWARE

It has been quite a long time since I have written anything for our paper. I have received a number of letters of inquiry: "Why don't you write for the paper?" "What are you doing?" "How is the Delaware work?" etc." I really owe an apology to many of my correspondents and to the Evangelist readers who have been looking for a word from me. I suppose no one ever gets too busy to write and yet I have been trying to make myself believe that. I have too many irons in the fire.

For almost a year I have been corresponding with the District Superintendent and State Mission Board trying to secure an abandoned Methodist church. After much red tape both the Superintendent and President of the Board promised to rent or sell us the building. At last they got the consent of the Conference to dispose of it, but at the last Conference, April 3, they changed District Superintendents and he "spilt the Beans." So after removing much prejudice, and after bright promises, the late Superintendent perhaps having bad advisors, turned us down.

While it seemed that much time was lost and we are unable to organize the Sunday school as we expected yet we are hoping that it will prove a blessing in disguise. Our people are being aroused and more determined than ever to build a new church at a little better site, or in the town of Millsboro.

At our last Sunday afternoon service we had the largest attendance and most enthusiastic testimony meeting we have had for six months. All say they will do what they can toward helping to get a place of worship. Hence we have started to battle along a new line and we hope by fall or winter to have a permanent church home. We really need two buildings, as our work is scattered over a territory of twenty-five miles. But one is all we will be able to build now.

We have had two communion services since our last report. One was in Brother Littleton's home near Ocean View and one in Brother Charles Workman's home near Millsboro. These towns are twenty miles apart.

This week, my cousin, J. M. Bowman, who had been confined to his bed for eight months, the Lord has wonderfully raised up. In his trip from Virginia to my place he will pass through Delaware and will take my place by preaching ten or more sermons for these people. This will make it possible for me to go to Allentown, Pennsylvania and hold a week's meeting for Brother Christiansen. I preached in South Philadelphia last Sunday. I preached last night in Allentown. At the close of the service Brother Christiansen baptized a noble young married lady.

It gives me great pleasure to again meet with this noble band of workers. The Lord opened up this work with your unworthy servant over 30 years ago. This was done by the missionary spirit and sacrifice of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia. They sacrificed their pastor and paid my salary while I preached for this people. They built this church 30 years ago, and since then have bought and paid for a good parsonage and kept a preacher on full time. This is but one of a number of churches that has been built by the great sacrifice of the First Brethren church that paid me while I was preaching for these missionary points. If the whole brotherhood would have shown the loyalty and made the sacrifice that the Philadelphia church made we would have more than five times the membership we have today. But it costs more prayers, tears, sacrifice and hard work than our brotherhood is willing to pay.

I have been preaching every Sunday all summer. I go to Delaware every two weeks and preach in Southern Philadelphia every two weeks—one block from the Whole Gospel Mission Brethren church where I preached for twenty years.

I would much rather preach for our people than for the Presbyterians but several of these members were prominent members of my church for years and are Brethren still in faith, and the most prominent Presbyterian family lived across the street from us for twenty years. They insisted upon me to preaching for them until they can get a pastor.

This is the cleanest down-town church I have seen. All worldliness they abandoned years ago, and they enjoy a pure Gospel up to the light they have. Being unable to preach every Sunday, they have a Presbyterian man to preach every other Sunday. I go fifty miles every other Sunday to help them out.

It is a great comfort to me, that after living and preaching for twenty years in one place that I should be called back by my neighbor church to preach within a square of where I lived.

Wife and I are alone. My granddaughter who lived with us for years married and moved ten miles away. We miss her very much. My youngest son is no longer with me. We alone are feeding a thousand chickens, trying to run a 29-acre farm, and I am away every Sunday. Wife and I are both overworked.

If we live until the 28th of August we hope to have our golden wedding. I have been a "grass widower" half of my time for fifty years, being away in the evangelistic field. We hope after this golden wedding to be able to live together more, the remaining years of our lives.

Wife has taken the place of father, mother and pastor half of these years. The preachers' wife had it harder than the preacher.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN.

Are you afraid to do wrong? That fear is far braver than courage in wrongdoing.

GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA REVIVAL

Accepting the invitation from the Grafton Brethren church, the writer gladly gave his services in a two weeks' revival campaign from June 16 to 28. The good people showed through their splendid hospitality their desire to welcome anyone interested in the welfare of their church.

The attendance in the evening services as well as in the children's afternoon hours was good, considering the unusually hot weather that prevailed.

The desire to enlarge this center of Brethren faith on the part of the members is commendable. The struggle which the church has experienced proves that it contains a nucleus of earnest Christians who need only a consecrated leader to bring the church to the front rank. The field for endeavor is large and challenging. Scores of families holding to the Dunker faith have settled in Grafton and vicinity, and the church lacking pastoral leadership has been unable to reach this group. Then too, this field has a large percentage of unchurched folks which gives unlimited opportunity for evangelism on the part of pastor and people. The Grafton church is praying for a leader who will take up the work and lead them on to victory for the glory of the Lord and the salvation of many precious undying souls.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

An Outpost in the Great Northwest

Last week you were told of our activities in transit, to this place, which is the most northwestwardly of any Brethren Church.

In the month of residence here much of the time has been necessary in getting settled and adjusted to the new field. Acquaintance with conditions is as necessary as acquaintance with individuals. During this month one week was required in our attendance at the Northwest District Conference at Spokane, entailing a drive of some 600 miles total. We felt well repaid for the trip; while this is the smallest of church districts, it is far from small in mileage, nor by far is it small in interest and enthusiasm in relation to the work of the church. Everyone expressed themselves as highly pleased with the spirit and trend of this gathering.

There is one thing certain, it seems evident the old adage rings true, "Distance makes the heart grow fonder," for here where distance is a considerable item, people know how to "get together." Some of the Sunnyside Brethren and their families, who could not attend at Spokane during the week, drove the distance of over 200 miles on Saturday night after work, in order to attend the Sunday services, and then drove home Sunday night, to be ready for work Monday morning. This has the "Iron Man" of Canada beat, although they did admit they stopped a couple of hours in the middle of the night and in the middle of the road wholly unconscious.

And then more recently the W. M. S. of Harrah were invited to meet in joint session with those of Sunnyside. You should have seen these ranchers' wives pilot the cars over the 35 miles of highway eastward. The writer felt much out of place in that caravan.

Still more recently our own good people, in a quiet manner, made arrangements and let it be known, that their new pastor and family might be properly "received." Well, if you want anything done "properly," come for advice to Harrah. It was a delightfully amazing reception, not soon to be forgotten. Sunnyside was present in such numbers as not to be overlooked, and welcome so. Brother Grisso spoke and Brother Reed took part. The Grisso family gave of their overflowing talent to the musical part of the program. The last phase was one of fellowship and refreshments in the basement.

Our first impression of this field, it is hoped, will not have to be altered later on. From a commercial standpoint it seems to be a land of unusual opportunity. Why not so for the church? We affirm that it certainly must be!

Harrah itself is only a very small village, with the usual row of filling stations; then besides the pool room and dance hall there are several stores. The residence section is not very pretentious as yet, but a large lumber yard, warehouse for the storage of local produce, feed mill and cream station, give some importance from an agricultural standpoint. The possibilities of growth are not altogether remote. But the greater work of the church lies in a great rural community, with no other organized church near.

We are located some 20 miles south of the city of Yakima, a center known far and wide, from an agricultural standpoint. In fact the Washington State Fair is held here instead of Olympia. Harrah is near the center of the great Yakima Indian Reservation, a large part of which is the Yakima Valley, fed by the waters of the Yakima River. Usually a country is "drained" by a certain stream, but since this is one of the nation's BIG irrigation projects, the agricultural life depends upon the waters of this stream being distributed to the crops. And this is done in an elaborately scientific manner.

Only one mountain peak is in sight from our location—Mt. Adams—beautifully covered with snow even at this date, appearing like a titanic dish of ice cream, as it rears its head about the nearer foothills. Mt. Adams is some 70 or 75 miles distant, though the low-lying hills, black with their growth of pine and spruce, are twelve to fifteen. This valley itself is, to a large extent, very level, and between these foothills on every side, perhaps represents a territory 30 by 100 miles, very roughly speaking. There is some rolling land within this area, but almost all of it is under irrigation or can be brought under. In fact, a new canal is now being extended just a few miles northwest of Harrah, which will include another wide area, and what is now a wilderness of sagebrush, inhabited by the pheasant and gopher, will soon blossom (yes, with some roses) but better yet, commercially speaking, with the purple of alfalfa, the gold of wheat, or the pink of multi-various fruits.

By the way, right now, along the north-eastern rim of this area stretches more than 20 miles of orchard—said to be the longest continuous stretch of orchard in the world. Through this orchard area is a paved highway of some forty miles without a single acute or right-angle turn. East of us is located the largest nursery in the world. This is a great potato land, and the cultivated area is a matter of hundreds of acres. They are sold by the ton. One of our Harrah members raised 30 carload last year, but the market was such as to create a loss. Every evidence points to a contrary condition this year. How about 160 acres of hay to be cut three times? That is another one of our folks' enterprises. And fruit! Cherries! We have learned we never knew what cherries were, much as we loved those little old sour ones of Hoosierdom. They were good, but give me now a Lamber or Royal Ann. It was our privilege to pick a few of the "leavings" for our own use. The crop had been sold and was done in this particular orchard. The proprietor confided that he had sold only 23 tons at 15 cents a pound.

Well, this will give you some idea of the bigness of things commercially and agriculturally here, and folks who come and see are usually not dull of comprehension. One of our neighbors came on a visit several months ago, but the "visit" is being prolonged into a permanent residence.

There is practically no rain here and consequently much sunshine, both figuratively and literally; but not all is "sunshine" figuratively. Naturally there are undesirable features, though the advantages largely overshadow these and make them inconsequential. It need hardly be recorded that the Devil came here and established headquarters at every strategic point long before the church even glanced in this direction. But the church has finally arrived and it is time that we comprehend the vast opportunities which lie ahead.

In this Indian Reservation, all the land is not yet available for sale, but is leased to the white men by the Indians. This is a rather unsatisfactory arrangement, and tends to retard the building of permanent or modern homes. Really the housing problem is a general one, and a very specific one for the writer. This matter seems near solution, however, as more and more, the Indians are being permitted (by the U. S. Indian Agency) to sell their holdings. This is a quite certain eventuality, and will mean much to the home life and especially the church.

However, in spite of these untoward conditions, a number of genuinely Brethren families, desiring homes here, were not content without a church home. They, consequently, have built one, and one of which the brotherhood and the community may justly be proud. Because of market failures (never a crop failure) for two successive years, the edifice is not quite completed, but nearly enough so that no serious handicap is experienced in going forward with all the activities of the weekly services.

We have never met any more hard-working people than these, and yet after a long day, and chores perhaps until dark (which is later here than in the East), they come to church and are loyal to her every interest.

It is to be deplored that more Brethren churches have not been planted in this great Northwest. In many respects there is still an opportunity to "go west and grow up with the country," but not more so for the youth than for the church of Jesus Christ! There is a need, yea, a crying need in many wide areas throughout this region for just such a whole-gospel church as that of the Brethren. May we not turn our eyes to this open door, and pray the Lord of the Harvest to send laborers!

FRED V. KINZIE.

—is that prohibition infringes upon their "personal liberty." A weaker, more unchristian argument was never put forward. "In law and in civilization the first consideration is not the individual, but society. Therefore, whatever injures society is not permitted. The greater our civilization, the more restricted become our liberties. You may enjoy civic liberty only as you are willing to sacrifice personal liberty.

"This does not mean that you are actually surrendering anything. Each of us is asked to give up some little things and put them into the common fund which makes up the sum of all our comforts in a civilized community, but each of us draws out of that common fund much more than any of us puts in.

"You may exercise your personal liberty only in so far as you do not place additional burdens upon your neighbors, or upon the state.

"No man has a right to drink if by so doing he poisons himself or makes himself an unfit member of society, compelling the state to cure him, support him when he is unable to take care of himself, lock him up when he is dangerous to be at large, bury him at public expense when he is a corpse, and take care of his family after he is gone.

"No normal man would prefer to live in a state of barbarism where every one does absolutely as he pleases without regard to the well-being of his neighbors. He would rather make some sacrifices which mean comparatively little to him in order that he, too, might make a contribution to the civilization which is bringing so much happiness and comfort to all."—Charles Stelzle.

mony. Four days later he was dead from blood poisoning.

Some observers might facetiously draw the moral of shunning spray factories and marriage ceremonies, but that would not help us any. There are other ways of getting killed. The real moral is that human life, under present conditions is an extremely precarious affair. Be ready. And if you should come through the day safely, kneel down and thank God through his Son, Jesus Christ.

In the next age, the world will be made safe for human life. Innocent children will not catch fire and burn to death. And men will not die from pinning on bridal bouquets. Now there is always a death's head at our feasting. But then "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain," saith the Lord.

A GOOD Scheme, if it Works

A young man arrested in New York, is given his choice of two alternatives by the presiding judge. Either he must go to prison for a year, or he must join the Methodist church of his town and attend it regularly for one year.

What will the church say about such a scheme? The young man will probably join the church, if they permit him. An old-time Methodist church will demand some proof that the young man is genuinely converted before letting him in. If the church is Modernistic, the young man may as well go to prison. He might hear the Gospel there, and be saved.

Today I am writing beside Diamond Lake, a beautiful body of water about 5000 feet above sea level surrounded by snow-capped mountain peaks. To the south we can see famous Crater Lake, about fifteen miles distant.

THE BOY ON LONDON BRIDGE

One evening I was crossing London Bridge to get a train for Brighton. In the gloom I noticed ahead of me the strange little figure of a boy walking with a crutch. I could just make out the withered leg dangling limply against the stem of the crutch as he plodded his way homeward. Dear little fellow. He must have been a match-seller or maybe he sold newspapers at some street corner to earn a scanty living. As I walked behind him I felt so sorry for the little chap in the rainy night, for it was long after ten o'clock. How hopeless and terrible it seemed to me!

Behind me I heard some one coming. He was running, and I heard the squelchy sound of bare feet in the puddles. It was another boy. He passed me in the ring of light from one of the darkened lamps. Truly his was as comical a figure as the boy's ahead was sad. The barefooted youngster had on a pair of trousers that had been made for a man. The trouser legs were all folded up to give him freedom for his feet. On top of this he had a huge jersey folded up almost to his chin. The sleeves were tucked back almost to his shoulders.

"What a little ragmuffin," I thought, "and as wild as a boy can be, I'll warrant."

There now, he has got alongside of the crippled boy. The little ragmuffin stopped. "Is he going to harm the cripple?" I hurried up to within a short distance and heard:

"Say, kiddie, are you going my way? Where d'ye live? Down by the 'Elephant and Castie'? You're tired, I'll bet. Let me see you home."

Down he slithered on his knees and hitched the little cripple up on his back.

So, I thought, boys and girls can show us how to be unselfish.—Selected.

Business Manager's Corner

"STRAIGHTWAY"

One of the familiar terms used in portraying the activities of the Master during his earthly life is "straightway." It is a very expressive term, indicating the promptness with which the Savior faced his duties or performed his tasks.

It would be well for all of us to emulate the Master in this as well as in other principles of his life. Many things that go undone because of neglect or forgetfulness would not remain undone if we acted "straightway" upon the first impulse or when the task was first pointed out to us.

This morning we received evidence that some people at least do thus act promptly. Last week we offered two Aluminum Pressure Cookers as premiums to the first two Missionary Societies or the first two individuals who sent in ten yearly subscriptions to The Evangelist, either old or new, together with twenty dollars, the regular subscription price.

The Evangelist was mailed on Wednesday afternoon and on Saturday Sister O. C. Lemert, Bryan, Ohio, mailed us eleven subscriptions with twenty-two dollars. This Monday morning we mailed her one of the cookers. Straightway Sister Lemert went to work and the task was done. We wonder how soon the other remaining cooker will be started on its way as a reward for promptness.

Time to Renew

Last week we sent out hundreds of expiration notices to our subscribers, and we are getting responses from some of them already, but we would appreciate it very much, if all would be prompt and respond before the close of this month, as we close our books for the year's business at that time and we would like very much to have a good report to make on Evangelist subscriptions.

Because of various reasons an occasional card is sent to a subscriber whose subscription is paid, though not often, and we will always appreciate it if such a one will notify us, as it is not difficult to check back on the subscription list and correct any error that might have been made.

Conference Minutes

Last December we mailed a supply of Conference Minutes to those pastors only who had paid for the copies sent them the previous year, and presumed they would all remit for the copies sent them this year. Most of them have, but a few seem to have let the matter slip their minds.

These Conference Minutes are printed at the order of the Conference, and are the property of the Conference. The Publishing House does the work of distributing them without charge to the Conference, so it makes no difference to us whether they are paid for by the pastors or not as the Conference pays us for printing them; but we like to keep the bill against the Conference as low as possible, so we would appreciate it very much if the pastors who have not yet made remittance for the copies sent them would do so before August first.

XIX. EXPERIENCING GOD

By Quinter M. Lyon, Editor Sunday School Lesson Publications

Many proofs have been urged for the existence of God, for the deity of Jesus, and for the truth of the Bible records. My conviction is that they are stronger than the counter arguments of the critics.

But Christianity need not depend on philosophical proofs. We have laboratory proofs before us all the time.

We know that God exists because we have experienced him in our hearts. "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God." Romans 8:16.

It is absolutely true that the world has found divine salvation in no way but in Christ. Therefore the words of Jesus are true, that "no one cometh unto the Father but by me," and "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." We know Jesus is the divine Son of God, the "effulgence of his glory," because we have experienced it. Explain it? No one ever has, satisfactorily. But I believe it, because I know it to be true in my experience.

The medieval type of mind delighted in abstract reasoning, and distinctions of words. More modern was the first century, when men were satisfied to experience the power of God through Christ. This was enough. It dissolved castes, nullified wealth, made the poor happy, and reaped great harvests of souls. Christianity thrived amid persecution, because God lived and walked among men.

I have no fear for the church when she gets this point of view. It is encouraging to note that the life-situation type of Sunday school lesson is replacing the more theoretic approach of the past. This will lead the pupils into a continuous experiential proof of the truths of Christianity. Ashland, Ohio.

WHAT is Man?

This is being written at Morgan Hill, California, a short distance south of San Francisco, where we are resting for a few minutes from the heat of the afternoon. This forenoon, while crossing on the Golden Gate ferry, the ocean breeze was almost uncomfortably chilly. Such are the contrasts of this remarkable state.

Yesterday we drove through the great redwood groves, an unforgettable experience. One rides for a while in the blazing California sun and then suddenly plunges into a grove of these gigantic trees. There the light is dim as it filters down through branches which form a roof hundreds of feet above. And, save for the roar of an occasional passing motor, the silence is cathedral-like. At one place I parked the machine and wandered out away from the road. Only a short distance away, the forest completely muffled the passing motors. Standing amid a carpet of giant ferns as high as a man, surrounded by trees twenty and thirty feet in diameter, looking up at little patches of sky far above, I could almost imagine I was the only person in the world. It was a bit startling.

I notice that the tourists like to huddle together in the various camps. Man feels more important when he has other men around. For all pompous, self-important individuals, I would like to prescribe a walk through one of these great forests. It would be better yet to get them lost. Such an experience would shrink them to their proper size. I am certain Henley did not write his "Invictus" in any place like this. It would be difficult for man to talk about his "unconquerable soul" with trees thirty centuries old looking down upon him. The words would stick in his throat.

If he were wise he would be more likely to cry out, "Oh, Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth... What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" (Psa. 8:1, 4).

THE KINGS OF THE EAST"

Russia and China, the two largest nations of the world, have gone to war. China is a member of the League of nations, and both nations signed the famous Kellogg Peace Pact. It takes more than Leagues and Peace Pacts to prevent war. Only the Prince of Peace can do that. And, thank God, he will make peace a reality among nations one of these days. Read Isaiah 2:1-4.

It is not likely that either of these nations will conquer the other. China could not conquer Russia. And the other nations will not permit Russia to conquer China. The stakes are too great. Ask Japan.

This war, if it goes on, will accomplish one important result. It will unify China. Since the fall of the monarchy, China has been torn by warring internal factions. And all the efforts of the statesmen have failed to unify these factions. But a serious war with an outside enemy will do it.

The unification of China will make her one of the great world powers. Let the nations take heed then, especially those who have pursued toward her a policy of exploitation.

All this is intensely interesting to the student of prophecy. The "Kings of the East" are to play an important part in the terrific events of the end-time (Read Rev. 16:12-16).

The remarkable development of Japan as a world-power, the rumblings of independence in India, and now the coming of China to the front—all indicate that the "Kings of the East" are being prepared for the final conflict which will precede the establishment of our Lord's millennial kingdom on earth.

Remember the word of Christ, spoken in connection with the prophecy of these very events, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth" (Rev. 16:15).

DARROW on "Death"

In the Saturday Evening Post the famous criminal lawyer writes his impressions "At seventy-two." More interesting than what he writes is the way he writes. One is reminded of the style and manner of the ancient stoic philosophers. Doubtless, Darrow has found his philosophy in their writings, and has borrowed their style, though unconsciously. At any rate, the style is somber with a strange mixture of exaltation and petulance; and the philosophy is chill and hopeless. It reads a bit like the gloomy book of Ecclesiastes, in spots, where Solomon, having tasted all that is "under the sun," declares that man dies like the beast and "all is vanity."

That's the trouble with Darrow—like Solomon, he has been too much engrossed with things "under the sun." Like the mole, he has spent too much time underground. If he had looked higher, to the things of Jesus Christ, he might have written something more hopeful.

Darrow speaks of Death as "the unavoidable tragedy that is incident to life," and expresses his conviction that death marks the end of personal existence. He says that he contemplates its approach with "small concern." One wonders here whether he is describing his feeling accurately.

For any intelligent man of seventy-two to say that the approach of death gives him "small concern" seems impossible. He ought to display at least a bit of curiosity regarding the experience itself. But, we must recall that Mr. Darrow is writing for publication, and men do not, as a rule, expose their naked souls to the public gaze. Some day we shall know more of Mr. Darrow's real feeling in the face of death, and he will know more about the meaning of death, a great deal more. "God shall bring every work unto judgment, with every secret thing" (Ecc. 12:14).

CATHOLICS QUIZ CANDIDATES IN BRITISH ELECTIONS

The Catholic church, we have been informed, never takes any part in politics. It may be presumed, therefore, that it was not the Catholic Church, as such but some group of Catholic citizens, as such, that interrogated all parliamentary candidates before the recent elections with respect to their attitude on the support of Catholic schools by public funds. The two questions which were propounded to all candidates were, as given by the Jesuit weekly, America, as follows:

1. Do you agree to the principle that the same amount of public money should be expended on schools in which definite religious teaching is given as is expended on schools in which no such teaching is given?

And, in the case of Catholic schools, will you endeavor to persuade your party to introduce, and will you support, any measure framed so as to give effect to that principle, wholly or in part, which does not infringe the existing rights of Catholic managers, by whatsoever government it is introduced?

2. If no other means were found practicable of relieving Catholics of the enormous double burden of paying their rates and taxes out of which council schools are provided, and at the same time of providing all sites and buildings for Catholic schools, would you at least do your best to induce the government to pay a fair rent for the use of Catholic schools for secular education, such rental to be based for example on the certified accommodation of each school?

Perhaps, after all, the inquiry was not quite unofficial, for it was Cardinal Bourne who reported that the conservatives returned a satisfactory answer, while the other parties, "so far as their leaders are concerned, seem to be, and I regret to say it, singularly shy and reticent." It is scarcely going beyond the evidence to assume that the purpose of the inquiry was not wholly academic but was direct support to those who gave satisfactory replies. American leaders will be less interested in the alleged reticence of the labor and liberal candidates than in the fact of an apparent effort to organize a Catholic bloc, under the leadership of a cardinal, for the support of the candidates who would pledge themselves to vote for appropriations for Catholic schools. We do not criticise the act. We merely mention it in connection with the claim that the Catholic Church never enters politics.—Christian Century.

"For any gift God gives me I cannot repay; Gifts are most mine when I most give them away;

God's gifts are like his flowers which show their right to stay,
By giving all their bloom and fragrances away

Riches are not gold, nor land, estates or marts—

The only wealth that is, is found in human hearts."—Charles Coke Woods.

Take Heed How Ye Judge

It is a very easy thing to express an opinion, and oftentimes the less one knows about a matter the easier it is to give an opinion and to be dogmatic about it. Very much of the commonly expressed opinions to which we give heed is based upon incomplete knowledge and illogical reasoning. Consequently very much of it is unwarranted, unjust and derogatory. It is therefore important that we be occasionally reminded of the warning words of our Lord, "Take heed how ye judge."

A common subject of unjust judgment is youth. The young people of our day are being widely flayed for their waywardness and prodigality. And it is true that there are not a few outstanding examples of youth gone bad. The average age of the criminal of our day is younger than it has ever been. The great mass of major crime is being committed by mere lads not yet out of their teens. But on the other hand, the age of notable achievements by men of our day is younger than it has ever been. Mere boys are springing into prominence because of their great accomplishments and contributions to the world's advancement in every line. In aviation, in invention, in scientific investigation, in the field of technology and in the learned professions, the number of youth gaining distinction is daily increasing. So that when it is said that this is an age of crime-committing youth, it can also be said that this is an age of nobly achieving youth, and the latter quite outbalance the former. The fact is that youth is very much in evidence in every field of activity and in every type of conduct. In a sense, it may be said that this is youth's age, and it proves nothing to say that there are more prodigal young people today than heretofore when there are also more illustrious youth. It is manifestly unfair to characterize the youth of our day as a deteriorating and profligate generation because of the number of vicious youth in the public eye. No reasonable man would think of judging a crop of apples by the few specked and knotty ones that are to be found in the orchard. And yet there are those who judge the youth of our age by the meanest specimens culled out by the public press. Such judgment is wrong and is inclined to smother youthful energies and aspirations under a blanket of pessimism. "Take heed how ye judge."

There is much misjudging of the Prohibition situation due to the reckless statements of the wets. There are those who have been led to believe and to voice the opinion that Prohibition is not effective, that there is more drinking now than in the days of the licensed saloon. They are certainly sincere—many of them—in their contention, but they are misled by the fraudulent claims of the liquor interests and jump at unwarranted conclusions from a very limited and local observation, and the result is a judgment that is not favorable to Prohibition. Confessedly the system is not perfect, but if it were not in a very large measure effective there would not be all this frenzied effort on the part of the wets to abolish it. The truth is, it is too effective, and that is what hurts. There is too little liquor being drunk, it is too hard to get, and the business of bootlegging is too hazardous, that is the cause of all this furore on the part of the wets. Prohibition is so effective that it diverts about $5,000,000,000 a year from expenditure on alcoholic drinks to other commodities and to savings, according to an estimate of Dr. Paul H. Nystrom of Columbia University. Prohibition is so effective that it has ruined the "business" of the local police courts. Former Judge Erwin, who sat on the bench at Terre Haute, Indiana a few years back when Prohibition was still an experiment, is authority for the statement that he used to have 100 to 150 cases, many of them of the kind that furnished news and excitement, before him every Monday morning, while the present court at that place has only about ten or twelve cases on a Monday morning, an most of them unimportant. Prohibition is so effective that the old time drunk that used to pester people on the streets, on railway trains and at public gatherings has disappeared and today decent people may go anywhere in the legitimate channels of business or pleasure and feel entirely free from such annoyances.

And yet there are those who are expressing the opinion that Prohibition is not effective and furthermore, that it cannot be made so. They are saying that it is not enforceable, that it is wrong in principle because it seeks to regulate morality, and that to attempt to do so is only to make bootleggers. The fallacy in judgment at the one point is made evident by merely pointing out that matters of morals have been subjects of regulation ever since the Ten Commandments were delivered to man. And on the latter point it is sufficient to say that Prohibition did not make bootleggers, it just revealed them, showed them up, turned the spot light upon them. They were here before Prohibition came, but the government was too busy seeking to curb the legalized saloon and to care for its vicious product to give much attention to the bootlegger. But what makes these items of wrong judgment regarding Prohibition the more serious is the fact that they are shared in certain respects by a goodly number of church folks, and that adds greatly to their respectability and consequent strength. And that which gives comfort and encouragement to one of the strongest organized enemies of the church should be avoided by all who profess Christian loyalty. In this matter we need to give heed to the admonition of our Lord, "Take heed how ye judge."

The church is also the subject of much faulty judgment. There are those who survey the weaknesses of the church and conclude that it is weakening, that it is yielding ground, that it is lacking in vision and power and is impractical in the face of the world's direst needs. It must be granted that the church has its weaknesses, as has everything touched by human hands. It has its hypocrites and its deserters. But why judge it by these? There is not an army but has some soldiers who would run away from the field of battle, but it is not reasonable to berate the army because of the few deserters and traitors in it. Nor is it fair to flay the church with carping criticism because of its unfaithful few and because at times it lacks vision and zeal. Were it perfect there would not longer be any need for its existence and the day of its translation would have come. Yet in spite of its weaknesses, and in spite of the cheap and indiscriminate criticism heaped upon it, the church is today, considered even from its human side alone, the noblest, most unselfish, most serviceable, the most far-visioned, and the most far-reaching influential and powerful institution in the world. It is so manifest that there is nothing that can stand up beside it that the claim needs no proof. And while there are times and places of temporary receding, yet the whole church of Christ is moving steadily forward with clearing vision, and increasing power and effectiveness in meeting the needs of this sin-sick world, and in coping with the daily multiplying problems of our complex life. And because the church is more than a human institution, because it has back of it the authority of Almighty God, because it has the unction of the Holy Spirit, and because it is under the personal direction of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, our little opinions and derogatory judgments concerning it will not halt or hinder it in its great onward march. It is destined to succeed and not fail, for Christ has said that even the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. In the light of such considerations how must our puny judgments and detracting, destructive criticisms appear! "Take heed how ye judge."

Regarding the ministry, there is much superficial judgment passing the rounds these days. No one knows the shortcomings of the ministry better than ministers themselves. There are ministers who are lazy, and some who are insincere, and some who are proud, and some who lack heart for their task, and occasionally one who is dishonest and even immoral. But the same sort of criticisms can be levelled against the legal profession, or any other calling. There are lawyers who care more about winning the case than about securing justice for the individual, and there are some who will purposely misrepresent and cover up and lie for the sake of a fee. But it would be unfair to conclude that all lawyers are rascals and liars because a few such have crept into the profession. And yet there are those who will make due consideration for the crooks in other professions but not for the ministry, allowing one Judas to jar their faith in the profession. The defender of the ministry need not speak in any other than respectable terms for all other professions, yet he can nevertheless say that there is no life work that places men upon so high a plane and makes such exacting demands of them as does the ministry. And the number that measure up to the standard set for them is not less than those who meet the standards in other professions. There is no place where we have a right to expect and where we actually find more noble, high-minded, sacrificing, hard working men than in the ministry. Dr. W. E. Barton says of the ministry, "It is a profession which enables a man to be his own largest and best possible self." And yet we are meeting on every hand ungracious and even vicious criticisms of the ministry. "Take heed how ye judge."

The Ministry of Singing

This is one phase of the gospel ministry that receives comparatively little emphasis in the local church, at least not so much as it deserves. We are much concerned about the singer and the song. We give attention to the quality of voice and the technique of singing. And we select our "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" with care for the loftiness and stateliness of the music and the inspiration and faithfulness of the message. All this is good and praiseworthy. Every effort is properly expended that seeks to add to the beauty, impressiveness and meaningfulness of our church music. But no less important than the voice and the song is the purpose of the singer. Every song ought to be sung with a purpose and that purpose should be, not merely to entertain, but to give forth a message that will meet the need of some yearning soul. The singer ought to feel that he is a messenger of God, even as is the preacher, and that he is held responsible for doing his best to deliver that message to the hearts of the listeners. He ought to sing not primarily as an artist, but as one ordained and commissioned of God and with the unction of the Holy Spirit. He ought to realize that he is in the service of Christ, engaged in the ministry of song.

Such a purpose dominating the being will have a wonderful influence on the success of his song; it will give meaning to his words and impressiveness to his singing. It will make such a ministry resplendent in beauty and vitalizing in power. It will enable the singer to kindle by his heart-searching message the fires of heavenly devotion in lives that have remained cold and unresponsive to other appeals, and will give him the power to touch the tender chords of sacred memories in lives that have once known the love of God but have lost that passion, so that discipleship is renewed and the soul is recharged with consecration and power from on high. So much depends upon the soul of the singer, upon the readiness to be used of God for a great purpose, upon the consciousness of being called of God to such a purpose as the singing of the message to the hearts of men!

In 1863 when the terrible Civil War was abroad in the land, a boat was sailing on the Mississippi river below Cairo, bound for Vicksburg, on which were the colonel of the Twelfth Michigan Regiment and his bride, the latter an exquisite vocalist. The lady had been singing national songs and popular ballads when a young man dying with consumption fixed his eyes upon her and asked: "Can you sing something for a dying man?" It was the bride's first acquaintance with hospitals, but without hesitation she moved to the bedside, and sat down beside him on a camp stool, took his hand and with great emotion, sang, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." There was sobbing in the ward when she ended, but the dying youth asked: "Can you sing the 'Sweet By and By'?" She sang that, all joining in the chorus. Then unsolicited, she sang "Home, Sweet Home." Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, who was present, said: "Never have I heard it so feelingly rendered. The scene that followed was alarming. Men buried their faces in their pillows and wept aloud. Others who were sitting up in partial convalescence, threw themselves upon the beds face downward, in excess of emotion." God is calling the singers of our churches to sing with such a passion and purpose to the souls of those who are sick in sin unto death, or who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness. How tenderly and how mightily the Spirit of God might move upon the hearts of our waiting congregations if far and wide and with great spiritual fervor they would yield to that call! Let perfunctory service disappear, and let there be a revival of the ministry of singing, and through the church will flow a new impulse of life and power.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

God cannot be defined, but he can be approached; he cannot be comprehended, but he can be known and experienced.

We are in receipt of a clipping from a Sunnyside, Washington, paper which informs us that Brother C. C. Grisso and family have left there by auto for their new home at Lanark, Illinois, where Rev. Grisso will enter upon his new pastorate the first of September.

Brother John F. Locke, the efficient secretary of the Southeastern District conference, supplies us with a very full report of the proceedings. His report bears out previous statements to the effect that it was a highly successful conference. Brother E. L. Miller was re-elected moderator, and next year's meeting will be held in the Mount Olive church in the Shenandoah valley.

Read the statement on the Mission page regarding the making of bandages for medical work in Africa. It is a little thing for the women and girls of the brotherhood to do, but it means much for the medical workers on the field to have this done and done right. Do not fail to note Dr. Gribble's instructions. Be sure not to price your bandages too high; it costs over there.

Brother L. A. Myers, pastor of the church at Morrill, Kansas, writes that his people are encouraged and pressing forward, notwithstanding the fact that the past year has been one crowded with discouraging weather conditions. Four were added to the church and the finances have been kept up so that every obligation has been met. The pastor has been retained for another year with a very substantial raise in salary.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, makes his second report of Educational Day offering receipts, and we are glad to note that the outlook is much brighter than it was at last report. Some very respectable gifts are included in this report, and the total amount is $2,340.09, a little less than half the amount asked for. Doubtless there are many churches who will yet come forward with good offerings, and there is need of such. The goal set was $5,000 and it is a case of absolute necessity that the amount be reached.

Brother R. I. Humbert writes of the very enjoyable time he had with Brother James S. Cook in the revival campaign in the Campbell church, which was strengthened by twelve new members. Brother Humbert assisted in a Bible conference held in Lake Odessa. He also has been making good use of tracts and Bible portions. There are few ministers who work this kind of service more assiduously. Possibly it would be well for many others of us to take a lesson from his efforts along this line, especially as a means of propagating Brethren doctrine.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE PROGRAM is to be found in this issue. Brother E. L. Miller, the secretary of the program committee, had his difficulties in getting returns from all the various departments and persons represented in the making of such a program, as is usually the case, but he has accomplished his work well and we commend the program to the careful study of the churches, which should make for enthusiasm for conference attendance. Let us never forget that one of the big factors in a successful conference is a large attendance. Every pastor and church leader should be working for a large delegation to Winona Lake for the week of August 26 to September 1.

The Escape of Littleness

By A. B. Cover

One fact is self evident as we study the Word of God, that man misses God's intention for him, if he lives on a low plane. We make all too little of the truth that we are "created in the image and after the likeness of God." Should this truth grip us in its greatness man no longer would grovel in the dust. The Scriptures tell us that Solomon was famed for his wisdom, and at once we are desirous to learn whence came this wisdom. A passage of Scripture tells us that, "God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea-shore." This truth is illuminating and at the same time most encouraging to man. There is a fountain of wisdom that is inexhaustible and man may draw upon it. So man does not need to be little, he can get wisdom and escape littleness if he so chooses.

What makes people little? Analysis will disclose that little besetting sins poison the stream of life and folks live where God does not want them to live. People of certain temperaments may be predisposed to certain sins: the ambitious are in danger of pride; the acquisitive in danger of greed; the volatile will be elated one hour and depressed the next. The strong willed have a tendency to lord it over the weak; the weak are too easily influenced; and the ascetic are too blind to enjoy beauty. Then the esthetic must guard against the tyranny of flesh and the senses. In the realm of art care must be exercised that to it alone belongs all sacredness whether it be artist, poet or musician; for a blinded opinion in any of these realms would portray dead manhood in the real sense. It is profitable to examine our motives and actions carefully that we may discover the sin or sins that easily beset us. To be forewarned is not to be forearmed necessarily, but it does make us conscious of the need of armor.

What are OUR besetting sins? We need to place ourselves under the vision of the All-Seeing Eye. Naturally no one would desire to be placed in the category of LITTLENESS. And yet we may be guilty. How many people are content to live narrow lives? Let us see—there are some who are carelessly wasting noble faculties. The man in the parable buried his talent. He was careful with in burying, for we wrapped it in a napkin and hid it away. Foolish man was he, for he should have been busy using what God had entrusted to his care. He should have traded with his Lord's money and increased it. Why has God dowered us with capacity and ability? Certainly not that we should live on a low plane when we can live on a higher sphere of usefulness and achievement. To carry on our life's work on a low plane when we should live in the higher realm is to be untrue to our Lord's plan and purpose for our lives. May we be touched with and respond to those motives that make great souls.

It is a hopeful sign when one becomes dissatisfied with his limitations. It is stimulating to find those who may be holding some position in the church but desire to attain a higher office. That evidences enlargement of vision and should be satisfied with enlargement of task. It is like the young eagle that is captured and placed within a cage which becomes a prison for the freedom loving bird. Beating its breast against the bars and flapping its wings are the expression of rebellion in being placed in an environment that is not its natural state. This is true of the soul that is kept in the prison-house of low aim when it should grow unto "the full-grown-man in Christ Jesus." Christianity recognizes and makes provision for satisfying the supreme yearning of the human heart. It offers in other words, the escape from littleness. Ben Johnson replied to the king who had sent him a present incommensurate to the worth of his services and because Ben Johnson lived in an alley, "your soul lives in an alley." How many souls are living in alleys when they should be traveling on the King's Highway! Christianity offers escape from littleness, and makes possible to all who will, to live fully and richly in things of the Spirit. A man owned a magnificent library. He was careful in the selection of the color of the binding of books so that it would harmonize with the decorations of the room; it contained many volumes of choicest literature. But he was busy with monetary affairs and found no time to read. Occasionally he entered the room and admired the library for its magnificence. The janitor, a young boy, as he enters to dust the shelves of books, stops, opens choice books and drinks in the truths they contain. Who really owns the library? Another owns the acreage of valley and hills and the cattle that graze upon it. It has monetary value for him certainly. But an artist who lives in a hut steals forth, he looks upon the beauty and his soul is lifted up in ecstasy as he beholds its beauty. It tells him of nature's God and his God. Who in reality owns that landscape? Two men study a map of the world. The one is a merchant prince. He traces it and finds thereon the avenues through which he will send his vessels to the ends of the world. To him that map discloses opportunity of commercial value. We find no fault with honest business; materially we must have the merchant-prince. But the other man studies the same map from a higher view. The water-ways lead to the unevangelized, the needy, and he plans to send his messengers with the Good News to them and offer them salvation in a risen Redeemer. He values the world from the spiritual viewpoint. Which one lives on the higher plane?

In the purpose of God, man is to ascend. "And as we have born the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly," says Paul in the great resurrection chapter. The aim of Christianity in its true purpose is the development of the individual to the utmost of his powers. Jesus said, "I came that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." Christianity is not something superimposed upon life but a spirit infused into life. The Spirit of Jesus flowing into a soul is expansive. A man cannot remain on a low plane with the Spirit of Jesus lifting him to the realms of perfect day. No one can follow Jesus and live a narrow life. The statement bears worthy consideration. To be a follower of Jesus demands the surrender of self. And self, surrendered, multiplies manifold. It is said in Denver lives a colored laundress, described as big and strong and homely. But she has been the foster-mother of a dozen children, white and black waifs and castaways; and for them she toils daily over the tub, enriched by their love. A dress maker in New England left six native teachers in India, educated by her gifts, to enshrine her name in their hearts and in the hearts of many others. She ascended. God gave her largeness of heart. The same is true of the afflicted Kentucky girl who some years since made her couch the center of a circle which included the "shut-ins." Her life became a blessing and a benediction upon those to whom she ministered and her own life was lifted up.

To escape from a life of littleness, there are some obstacles to overcome. As we have observed they do not consist of race barriers, nor poverty, nor affliction. It behooves us to find individually what does or may stand in the way. That one we need watch carefully is SELF. A traveler standing nervously upon a projection over a dangerous precipice was instructed to look up and not down at his feet. The advice is timely in spiritual attainment. Eyes are upon self when they should be heavenward. When Michaelangelo was working upon the statue of David, he put a candle in the visor of his cap to prevent any shadow of himself to fall upon his work. Brother, sister, are you absolutely confident that no shadow of yourself is falling upon the work you are attempting for your Savior? Self unsundered casts a forbidding shadow over all our work.

Worldliness will disqualify us for spiritual greatness. Undue desire for earthly possessions keeps us in the realm where the vision is clouded. Industry and vigilance are virtues in the field of honest endeavor and achievement but carried to excess they become vices. So in business, we find the "crowder," "the pusher," "the get rich quick," "the wise quack," who belong to the realm of littleness. Sorrow, sacred and sacramental as it may be, with power to bring us to God and to make God real to us, can make us great, or like the man who seeks to drown his trouble in drink, drag us down to littleness. We must not rebel against God. His ways are not our ways and what seems to us a calamity is in reality a blessing in disguise. Other things which keep our souls in meager compass are, false pride, social envy, wrath, ignorance of spiritual values, low ideals, love of ease and godless pleasure. But there is an open door of escape from all that hampers and imprisons. There is a Friend who opens strong gates and breaks down thick walls, and that leads to high viewpoints and vast outlooks. That Friend is Jesus Christ, our blessed Lord.

When Richard of the Lion Heart was imprisoned in a foreign land, a friend went in search of his beloved monarch. He traveled far and softly played sweet music outside many prison walls without response from within. But one day there was a response from within and he found his king. What music sounds outside the prison walls of our petty lives? Is it the music of Christ's Gospel and Christs' still small voice? He awaits our answer. He awaits our prayer to be delivered from our petty little sins, and when we ask he will forgive us, having wrought for us redemption. He desires to make us comrades of his Cross, counsellors of his Kingdom, and to charge us with the high honor of being workers together with him.

Life is Not to Find Out

By Harold D. Fry

TEXT: Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils (demons).—1 Timothy 4:1.

I need but to call attention to three characteristic features of the latter times to introduce the subject of the morning and the motive promoting such a warning message. Apostates, those that leave the faith, shall flourish, deceiving and being deceived, during the end time of the church age. Seducing spirits, both human and diabolic, I believe, will have audience and power. Demons shall teach, and the apostates shall give heed to these doctrines of demons.

I am warning of certain demon teachings current on every hand today. We recognize their efforts on the platform, and set up in type in both religious and fictional and so-called scientific literature. But the matter which is the immediate cause for this exposure of the wrong and setting up of the right, is the story entitled, "Life is to Find Out," by William Pelley, published in the June American. When a promessing scientist seeks newspaper publicity by denouncing some truth of Scripture, we ignore his statement, for he is out of his realm. Likewise, we do not consider seriously errors of thought and shallow ethics displayed in the great mass of fictional magazines of our day; but when an able short-story writer, claiming a psychic experience, teaches false religious ideas in a periodical of such high standard as The American, one who knows the truth cannot but see the power of such a subtle influence, and lay bare the dangerous nature and real purpose of such an article.

Dr. Bauman in previous issues of The Evangelist discussed Mr. Pelley's experience, which was self-styled, "Seven Minutes in Eternity." I trust you have all read what Brother Bauman presented as the Scriptural revelation of the identity of Mr. Pelley's supernatural hallucination, and of the seduction of spirits only received by one apostate. Knowing the absence of salvation in a man we are not surprised to see spirits seduce him as they have Conan Doyle, Oliver Lodge, and others; neither need we be astonished that these should grow so bold in teaching fatalism, spirit-worship, and other doctrines of demons. In treating the false in order to present more forcibly the true, it is my desire that for the sake of fairness, any breadth of recognized psychology, poetic licence or other permissible extravagance of speech be allowed the author, and that only those fallacies be exposed which cannot be ignored.

There are four reasons for objecting to Mr. Pelley's story: 1. Youth deserves the truth. They want to know the answer to such questions as these: Do the dead live among us? Is every event in life marshalled by fate, or am I responsible for some of them? Is there another ever-active, supernatural power than God? Is life to find out, or is it laid out, and by whom? Second, this article teaches a fatalism, recommends trances and dreams, sets forth recklessness in marriage and in business, and excuses mistakes, sins and their consequences as "our due" and unavoidable.

Third, this present stage of civilization is very apparently the fulfillment of many prophecies having to do with certain religious, social, moral, and economic conditions of the last days; and until the city be taken and the land rendered desolate, truth must not fail to sound forth warning and precept. Fourth, inspiration, after mentioning apostates, seducing spirits and teaching of demons, adds in the sixth verse of 1 Timothy 4, "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ."

This is the narrative in brief. A twenty-seven-year-old, only daughter of a well-to-do widower is set upon and married by an indolent drummer of the old day, ambitious for the father's money. The elopement breaks the fathers' heart. The husband squanders $60,000 in six months, and goes from bad to worse as a gambler and lazy clout for five years during which time three children are born to the neglected wife in rooms over a barber shop. About the time the family is reduced to the limit of its credit, the worthless husband is shot and killed by possibly another wife. The mental reaction of the widowed mother in her extremity results in a psychic experience from which a strange courage is given her, and a more peculiar poise takes possession of her as church organist, music teacher, and mother of three.

The two oldest children die, the younger grows to maturity, practices the same folly as her mother in marriage. The elopement indirectly causes the mother's death, who to the end displays the belief that "life is to find out," and that what is, must be, and what must be, is right. The daughter, unworthily married, is pictured as later famous for her musical ability, and in a recital in a New York church, the author affirms his belief that the dead mother is present with the daughter, and that there was a supernatural necessity for all their experiences in which the individual makes no mistakes, and bears no consequences of his sins.

Fatalism is a Growing Menace

By fatalism, we mean the theory that there is an unaccountable, unavoidable, supernatural cause behind all our behavior, compelling us to perform in a manner blamable to the cause, but not to the agent. If we are readers of the human pulse today, we detect that in the United States since the days of witchcraft, omens, and other superstitions, there has not been such a wide-felt, undermining belief in fate, as at the present time. This fatalism says, "When it's my time to go, I'll have to die." "It was just to be; no one could have prevented it." So this story tells us that whatever you dread, whatever you fear will come to pass. Is this true? Does God send evil upon you? and always give to us that which we dread? My, what fear that is!

Rather the voice of Deity would quiet our spirits and remove our fears, with: "Fear not, it is I." "Let not your heart be troubled." "In nothing be anxious." "I will be near him in trouble; I will deliver him." "I am his God." In regard to the fear of death and its supernatural instigator, there is an interesting truth expressed in Hebrews 2:14, 15.

Perhaps this growing error is more pronounced and more repulsively taught in the widow of the narrative saying, "My mistake? I was due to marry Edwin." In other words, a pure sweet girl just has to marry some worldly-wise, deceitful reprobate—it is her due. I object! Since when has the Divine Government sanctioned or permitted us to approve an unequal yoke? We would despise the greedy, false betrayer, and would protect the unwarned and wronged.

Fatalism ascribes all of our mistakes, our sins, and their consequences to a supernatural fate who orders, and nothing can set aside. Thereby we are denied our moral responsibilities with, "Sow your wild oats: it's not your fault nor your funeral." If you mismarry, or if by chance bury, if your plans miscarry—the trouble lies in your star, not in you. No Christian will admit that everything that happens is needed and right. For that is such a false solace which says, "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world." Girl, you are responsible as to whom you marry! Man, you must give account for the deeds done in the flesh! For God is over all, a Judge and mighty Over-ruler, a Savior to whomsoever will.

Be Ready When He Comes

By C. F. Yoder

One day in meditation

I heard the Spirit's voice.

It seemed to say, "Be ready

With your eternal choice.

The Savior comes, he's coming soon.

According to his word,

Be ready then to welcome him,

Be ready for the Lord."

And then I seemed to see my life,

All marred and scarred with sin.

My garments were not pure and white,

How could I enter in?

It seemed as if my faith were false,

My words were not sincere,

And O I wept, to think that I Might meet my Lord with fear.

"O Lord," I cried, "forgive my sin,

My doubting and my fear,

And clothe me with thy righteousness,

Yea, even now and here."

And then I seemed to hear him say,

"In me thou art made whole.

Doubt not my word, nor grieve thy Lord

Whose blood doth cleanse thy soul."

And then once more I felt the peace

That only Jesus gives,

And though sometimes I grieve him sore,

Yet in my heart he lives.

And O how beautiful the hope

That when he shall appear

I shall be clothed upon with him,

With all who love him here.

---

WHO WON THE WAR?

This has been a moot question among many men and many nations in the last ten years. Perhaps no more clear thinker exists among the ministers of the world than Dr. John A. Hutton, editor of the justly famed "British Weekly." His opinion would carry weight anywhere. In a recent issue he says:

"Again and again in recent years American friends have asked us (for the most part in good humor and merely with the purpose of having an intelligent and casual opinion) as to who really won the war. We have always repeated that, whoever won the war, it was no European nation. Germany in the popular view lost the war. But she was not alone. Great Britain also lost the war. France lost the war. Belgium lost tragically, as did Italy and Roumania. Whoever won the war it was not a European power or group of powers. And on that common basis of defeat and mutual suffering Europe may yet come together in a solemn, even though unwritten, pact of everlasting peace."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

COSTLY NAVIES

According to the statement made in March by the first lord of the admiralty of Great Britain, that country's net total for this year's naval estimate is £55,865,000 or $272,062,550. The cost of the United States naval establishment for the current year is $374,331,044, or more than a million dollars a day. When this enormous outlay is compared with the amount we spent in pre-war days, it is evident that we are not yet free from the grip of the war mania. In 1913 the cost of the naval establishment of the United States was $123,747,652. Today it is three times as great. What it will be in future years depends largely upon the attitude of the church and peace-loving people in this country.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONY OF YUMA INDIANS

Once more the anthropologist presents us with an enlightening bit of news about religion. This time it is a scholar from the University of California who brings news of the religious ceremony of Yuma Indians.

The original ceremony was a commemoration of the death of the creator, Kukumat, and was inaugurated by his divine son, Kumastamxo. This "savior" taught men endurance, physical courage, and stoicism in the face of death: and these powers were brought to men by the original ceremony he performed on the sacred Mount Avikwaame.

Subsequently the rite has become an occasion of mourning for the dead of the tribe, and of expressing the tribal solidarity. Original ritual elements, however, survive in a reproduction of the cosmic battle between good and evil. The overlay of individual commemoration of the dead is of recent origin, having been traced to contact with the Diegueno tribe, but it is supposed by the Yuma to be as old as creation. A few of the oldest tribesmen who recall its recent introduction will only rarely speak because they do not want its sanctity questioned. Clearly, religious control is pretty much the same among all peoples!—The Living Church.

THE SITUATION IN PERSIA

The situation in Persia is said to be not unlike that which obtained in Afghanistan some months ago. The shah is having difficulties with certain reactionary tribes headed by priests who are inflaming these backward peoples against modernization. Whether the shah will be able to hold his own until his people become modernized, or whether he will be driven from the country as was the king of Afghanistan, seems to be the divergent possibilities that appear at present. The government is using armored cars and airplanes against the tribesmen. Perhaps the seriousness of the situation will be more evident when it is remembered that Persia and Afghanistan are neighboring lands with no natural barrier for a boundary line. Thus it would seem that what has happened in one might easily happen in the other, if the central government is not especially alert.—The Gospel Messenger.

AN ADVENTURE IN CHRISTIANITY

Something new in Christian charity has come to pass in Texas. Governor Dan Moody, we read in the Dallas "Morning News," has granted a sixty-day furlough to a convict under a long sentence, in order that the prisoner may return to his home in Dallas and make provision for his family, it being understood that the pastor and church of his mother will "stand good for him" during the two months of the furlough. The arrangement, says "The Morning News," has much in it to provoke thought, and the newspaper reflects:

"The interest of churchmen in those undergoing penal sentence is always commendable, although it is not always exercised in so intelligent and helpful a fashion as in the case under consideration. Sympathy is always easier than usefulness. And yet there is plenty of room for both in handling those out of prison either by executive clemency or by completion or their term of incarceration.

"But the idea that a church can afford to stand good for a convict is worth turning over. It is something of an adventure in practical Christianity of that sort that appeals instantly even to the man on the outside of the church. If churches could go a bit farther and stand good for their own members, the last arrow in the quiver of the unchurched would lose its barbs. Suppose that church life progressed to the point where the debts of a member were guaranteed by the congregation and his character underwritten by his brethren in the faith. In that case, of course, it would be a bit harder to get into the church—but, getting in would mean more, wouldn't it?"—The Literary Digest.

HIGH AUTHORITY ON A LIVE MATTER

Dr. Temple, the recently consecrated Archbishop of York, Primate of England, is quoted as having said lately, "that religion can do itself no greater injury than to compete with popular amusements in an effort to entice people to come to church. If we try to tickle the minds of people who come to church as they would be tickled at the Cinemas, only with a different feather, church going will lose its religious value. It is far better to have small congregations and true worship than large congregations that are being religiously entertained." To which utterance every Evangelical minister can utter a fervent "Amen."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

NOTE: The devotional life is often colored by the events of the day. It is well, perhaps, that this is so; we like to rejoice in the mere sense of God's presence, his loving care and providence, but it is well that we definitely thank him for the gifts of the day, for the things from which we have been spared, and that we definitely pray for those whom we have seen to be in special need of prayer. If Jesus taught us anything, he taught us to be definite and practical. The comments this week are suggested by some of the writer's experiences in the city of Chicago.

MONDAY

New Buildings. At several places in the business district, in order to make room for larger and more up-to-date office buildings, large, imposing-looking structures have been torn down. At first, it seemed a pity to destroy such fine looking buildings; yet we on the street have no way of knowing what structural weakness may have been found within. It is certain that the new building will be more beautiful, and of greater service. Lord, give us faith to know that when that which we prize is laid low, thou art preparing a place for us; and cleanse us from all secret faults! Psalm 19:7-14.

TUESDAY

Not the Righteous. In the district where I work, there are many "bums' rooming houses": filthy places where the crippled beggars who throng the streets, and the more frightful moral and spiritual cripples, may obtain beds for "ten cents a night, special rates by the week!" It is not Pharasaic to say, "Lord, I thank THEE that I am not as these;" yet it was for such as these that he came. God make us grateful for our privileges, and bless the efforts being made to bring such souls to thee. Matt. 9:10-13.

WEDNESDAY

The Anchor. About eight o'clock one winter night, I was working at the office, when from the street below came the sound of a cornet playing, "I've anchored my soul in the haven of rest." I learned that this was the signal for "free coffee," served by the little mission just a few doors away, for the "bums." What memories the old hymn must have brought to some of them! Thank God for the Spirit of Jesus at work in the world today. Luke 10:25-37.

THURSDAY

Wages. A number of killings lately; we shudder, even as we realize that in almost every case the victim would gladly have killed his slayer, from a rival gang. No matter how small or how frightful, the wages of SIN is DEATH, and they that take the sword shall perish by it. But thank God for his unspeakable gift: eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord! Rom. 6:15-23.

FRIDAY

Corruption. Perhaps there never was a city so completely mismanaged as Chicago. Certain it is that taxpayers have become afraid to vote the money necessary for public improvements, for fear it will again be squandered by city officials in riotous living. But he has told us before that such things must be before the fulfillment of that blessed hope—more blessed today than ever before. 2 Tim. 3.

SATURDAY

Everywhere. Seated at my desk high above the street, one day there drifted through the open window the gray winged seed of a dandelion; it was certainly about the last place in the world that one would have expected to find such a thing. Yet how like God's love and mercy, that seeks us everywhere, even in the most unlikely places. Rom. 2:1-11.

SUNDAY

I Will. Sympathetic to a degree with this slogan of the city, it is yet typical of the spirit that ruined a world: "I will!" "THY will be done, in earth, as it is in heaven." Jas. 4:13-17.—T. C. L.

The Bible in Education

Professor Thomas Huxley is not popularly associated with endorsement of the Bible. In 1870 he made an address before the London School Board in advocacy of the reading of the Bible in the public schools. Of one of his statements quoted below (the one which mentions his perplexity) an observer remarks: "I think it is significant that necessity should force such a conclusion from him." Here are the extracts from Professor Huxley's address:

"I have been seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up, in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters without the use of the Bible. Take the Bible as a whole; make the severest deductions which fair criticism can dictate for shortcomings and positive errors; eliminate, as a sensible lay teacher would do if left to himself, all that is not desirable for children to occupy themselves with, and there still remains in this old literature a vast residuum of moral beauty and grandeur. And then consider the great historical fact that for three centuries this book has been woven into the life of all that is best and noblest in English history; that it has become the national epic of Britain, and is as familiar to noble and simple, from John O'Groat's House to Lands' End, as Dante and Tasso were once to Italians; that it is written in the noblest and purest English, and abounds in exquisite beauties of mere literary form; and finally, that it forbids the veriest hind who never left his village to be ignorant of the existence of other countries and other civilizations, and of a great past, stretching back to the farthest limits of the oldest nations in the world. By the study of what other book could children be so humanized, and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fill, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between two eternities, and earns the blessings or the curses of all time, according to its efforts to do good and hate evil; even as they also are earning their payment for their work?"

Huxley near the end of his address continues thus:

"That children take kindly to elementary science and art no one can doubt who has tried the experiment properly. And, if Bible reading is not accompanied by the constraint and solemnity, as if it were a sacramental operation, I do not believe there is anything in which children take more pleasure. At least I know that some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother. There were splendid pictures in it, to be sure; but I recollect little or nothing about them save a portrait of the high priest in his vestments. What comes vividly back on my mind are remembrances of my delight in the histories of Joseph and David; and my keen appreciation of the chivalrous conduct of Abraham in his dealing with Lot. Like a sudden flash there returns back upon me my utter scorn of the pettifogging meanness of Jacob, and my sympathetic grief over the heartbreaking lamentations of the cheated Esau, 'Hast thou not a blessing for me, also, O my father?' And I see, as in a cloud, pictures of the grand phantasmagoria of the Book of Revelation.

"I enumerate, as they issue the childish impressions which come crowding out of the pigeon holes in my brain in which they have laid almost undisturbed for forty years. I prize them as an evidence that a child of five or six years old, left to his own devices, may be deeply interested in the Bible, and draw sound moral substance from it. And I rejoice that I was left to deal with the Bible alone; for if I had had some theological 'explainer' at my side, he might have tried, as such do, to lessen my indignation against Jacob, and thereby have warped my moral sense forever; while the great apocalyptic spectacle of the ultimate triumph of right and justice might have been turned to the base purpose of a pious lampooner of the papacy."

I should have quoted earlier the following from this same address: "I may add yet another claim of the Bible to the respect and attention of a democratic age. Throughout the history of the western world, the Scriptures, Jewish and Christian, have been the great instigators of revolt against the worst forms of clerical and political despotism."

The Bible has been the magna-charta of the poor and of the oppressed. Down to modern times, no state has had a constitution in which the interests of the people are so largely taken into account, in which the duties, so much more than the privileges of rulers are insisted upon, as that drawn up for Israel in Deuteronomy and Leviticus. Nowhere is the fundamental truth, that the welfare of the state, in the long run, depends upon the righteousness of the citizens, so strongly laid down. The Bible is the most democratic Book in the world.

From the sixteenth century onward, the Protestant sects have favored political freedom, in proportion to the degree in which they have refused to acknowledge any ultimate authority save that of the Bible."

With these words put those of Horace Greely and General Grant: "It is impossible to mentally or socially enslave a Bible-reading people." "The Bible is the sheet anchor of our liberties."

Is there not place here before proceeding further for the plea of Richard Moulton, author of "The Modern Reader's Bible," for a place for the Bible in a liberal education. He says:

"It has come by now to be generally recognized that the Classics of Greece and Rome stand to us in the position of an ancestral literature—the inspiration of our great master, and bond of common associations between our poets and their readers. But does not such a position belong equally to the literature of the Bible? If our intellect and imagination have been formed by the Greeks, have we not in similar fashion drawn our moral and emotional training from Hebrew thought? Whence then the neglect of the Bible in our higher schools and colleges? It is one of the curiosities of our civilization that we are content to go for our liberal education to literatures which, morally, are at an opposite pole from ourselves: literatures in which the most exalted tone is often an apotheosis of the sensuous, which degrade divinity, not only to the human level, but to the lowest level of humanity. Our hardest social problem being temperance, we study in Greek the glorification of intoxication; while in nature life we are occupied in tracing law to the remotest corner of the universe, we go to school for liberty impulse to the poetry that dramatises the burden of hopeless fate. Our highest politics aim at conserving the arts of peace, our first poetic lessons are in an Iliad that cannot be appreciated without a bloodthirsty joy in killing. We seek to form a character in which delicacy and reserve shall be supreme, and at the same time are training our taste in literatures which, if published as English books, would be seized by the police. I recall these paradoxes, not to make objection, but to suggest the reasonableness of the claim that the one side of our liberal education should have another side to balance it. Prudish fears may be unwise, but there is no need to put an embargo upon decency. It is surely good that our youth, during the formative period, should have displayed to them, in a literary dress as brilliant as that of Greek literature—in lyrics which Pindar cannot surpass, in rhetoric as forcible as that of Demosthenes, or contemplative prose not inferior to Plato's—a people dominated by an utter passion for righteousness, a people whose ideas of purity, of infinite good, of universal order, of faith in the irresistible downfall of all moral evil, moved to a poetic passion as fervid, and speech as musical, as when Sappho sang of love or Aeschylus thundered his deep notes of destiny. When it is added that the familiarity of the English Bible renders all this possible without the demand upon the time-table that would be involved in the learning of another language, it seems clear that our school and college curricula will not have shaken off their mediaeval narrowness and renaissance paganism until Classical and Biblical literatures stand side by side as sources of our highest culture."

I beg to follow Moulton with a statement by my associate, Louis Matthews Sweet, found in his study of the English Bible where the historical significance of the Bible in relation to education is strikingly set forth:

"It is to be remembered that throughout its entire course of development the people of Israel, however, separated at the core by original ideas and principles of worship, were surrounded and pressed upon by the great nations of antiquity who not only conditioned outwardly the movement of events in which Israel was involved, but formed the historical matrix in which Israel's national ideas and purposes were moulded. Is it too much to assert that not a single line of the Old Testament would have assumed the form in which we have it, had it not been for the geographical situation of Palestine, which made Israel the frontier nation of the ancient world? No great nation of the Orient could look at another without sighting across the highlands of Judea. No nation could march against another without crossing Israel's territory or traversing her boundary. No more significant fact for the history of revelation could be imagined.

In like manner the history of Christianity, from the advent of Christ on, was conditioned, in its modes of self-expression, in teaching and institutions, by the fact of its inception in the imperial era. It is a fact of history as well as of doctrine that Rome is the "Babylon" of the New Testament.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for August 11)

Daniel Among the Lions

Scripture Lesson—Dan. 6:1-28.

Printed Text—Dan. 6:10, 11, 16-23.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 91:9-16.

Golden Text—The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Psalm 34:7.

Introduction

Under the new dynasty by which the empire of Babylon was overthrown, God again shows the care which he takes of his faithful worshippers; and compels Darius, as he had forced Nebuchadnezzar, to acknowledge his supremacy. Chapter 6 relates Daniel's advancement by Darius, vs. 1-3; the plot formed against him by his envious colleagues, who practice upon the king's vanity with too great success, 4-9; Daniel's constancy in devotion, v. 10, his impeachment and exposure to the lions, 11-18; his miraculous deliverance, 19-23, leading to the punishment of his accusers and the king's confession of Jehovah's power, 24-27; and his prosperity in the reign of Darius and Cyrus, v. 28. Daniel was probably not less than eighty years of age at this time.—Illustrator.

The Story of the Plot

The story of the plot should be gotten well in mind by reading the earlier verses in the chapter. It is easy to see why the young, unscrupulous, native leaders should desire to get rid of Daniel. They were jealous of him because he was a foreigner, a member of a captive people and an old man, and stood in the way of the advancement of some of the young nobles. Moreover, he was strictly honest and so interfered with their schemes for graft and all sorts of dishonest wealth.

The first plan was to find some wrongdoing on Daniel's part, of which to accuse him to the king. This plan was a complete failure, because of Daniel's faithful performance of all his duties.

The second plan was to make use of Daniel's faithfulness itself. They found that their only hope of entrapping him was through his well-known religious convictions and habits of worship, and his unflinching obedience to conscience. They persuaded the king to make a decree that no one should ask any favor of God or of man, except of the king himself, for a month, on penalty of being thrown into the den of lions.

"The meaning is, not any petition absolutely, but any petition in the nature of a prayer, or request addressed formally to a superior." Driver in Cambridge Bible. It is not at all probable that the decree referred to the common daily intercourse of man with man, for that would be perfectly irrelevant to the purpose of the officials who asked the decree.

Kings in ancient times wished to be regarded as gods. In later Roman times the Caesars claimed divine honors, and Christians were charged with treason, and executed because they refused to worship the emperor. This explains the decree requiring petitions to be addressed to no other god.

It seems strange that any king could sign such a decree. "But probably Daniel's enemies made the king believe that this would be a fine practical test of the fealty of his new subjects."—Professor Beecher.

The satraps lied about it for they said the proposal came from all the presidents and satraps, though Daniel the chief president had not even been consulted.

Darius the Median

Considerable difference of opinion prevails among commentators, as to his identity. Some say Darius is not mentioned at all in profane history, others just as clearly place him exactly where the inspired record does. Dr. James M. Gray says: "There is obscurity surrounding this subject on which our space will not permit elaboration. Darius the Mede is unknown to history by that name outside of this book, and is not to be confounded with the later Darius of Ezr. 5:5. When it is said he 'took the kingdom,' 5:31, some think it means that it was taken in his name merely, but really by his general, who was also his relative, Cyrus, who afterward became king, and who is named at the close of chs. 1 and 6."—Christ. Workers' Com.

Faithful to Principle

There is a great need for men of the Daniel type today. Worldliness and carnality and dishonesty and compromising with principle are so common, even among church members, that it is an inspiration to meet a man who, like Daniel, will stand by what he believes to be right though the heavens fall. Simple, unostentatious, uncompromising fidelity is what we need. Sometimes we find men who will stand by principle when there is a chance to get some publicity thereby, but Daniel was not of that kind.

He "made no show of his religion, but simply went on his daily path of life, as if no such order had been given. (1) To have done otherwise would have proclaimed his want of faith and of faithfulness, and dishonored his religion and his God. (2) There was no time when he needed to pray more than at this time. It was on the eve of the return, and all such great religious crises are ushered in with earnest prayer. (3) A failure, or even a seeming failure, on Daniel's part would have had a disastrous effect on the religious principles of the exiles. A man in his position had better die a thousand deaths than to falter and fall.

The Den of Lions

This was according to Oriental custom on the evening of the same day. The story of the den of lions is strictly in keeping with Babylonian usages. Assurbanipal says in his annals, "The rest of the people I threw alive into the midst of the bulls and lions, as Sennacherib, my grandfather, used to do."

Canon Tristram says: "Lions, which though all but extinct in India, and absolutely so in other parts of Asia, are still common in Babylon and Persia, were kept in the parks of great princes as part of their estate. The same custom still continues among the native rulers of India and is alluded to in the Assyrian monuments. The dens in which wild beasts are confined are not cavernous, or vaults, like those in which the Romans kept the wild beasts in readiness for the cruelties of the amphitheater. They are simply pits open to the sky, but enclosed with high walls. The Babylonian den might be like these, or it might be a cave with an enclosure round it." A similar pit for bears is seen in Bern, Switzerland, where the bear's den is one of the attractions, the bear being the heraldic emblem of Bern.

"The lion's den was a large quadrangular hole in the ground, divided by a partition into two chambers. This wall has a door which can be opened and shut from above. The keepers of the lions (mostly Jews) throw food into the one division and so entice the lions thither, then they shut the door from above and clean the other division. The whole is under the open sky and is only encircled with a wall over which people can look in. The emperor himself has men cast in."

The Mott Meetings in the Philippines

By Walter N. Roberts

When John R. Mott comes along everyone stands aside to "make way" for one of the world's leading personalities. Doctor Mott came to the Philippines (March 18-21) and thirty missionaries, with thirty national leaders, dropped all their work for three days and entered into one of the most intensive, prophetic, and far-reaching conferences that evangelical workers have ever held in the Philippines.

The Mott conference was designed to discover the significance of the Jerusalem meetings for the Philippines. It endeavored to interpret the findings of Jerusalem in terms of the present stage of development and needs in the Philippines. To that task this group of sixty workers set themselves.

Dropping all other work these sixty leaders assembled for three days at the Manila hotel. The five subjects contained in the Jerusalem findings that were chosen for discussion were as follows: Leadership, Evangelism, The Relation Between the Younger and the Older Churches, Augmenting Our Financial Resources, Cooperation and Unity.

The conference was divided into five committees of approximately twelve members each. There was one committee for each of the five subjects. Doctor Mott introduced the subject by a general discussion which was then followed by an open forum. The members of the committees took notes on the discussion. The committee to which the subject was assigned then endeavored to formulate findings. After the findings were formulated they were again presented to the whole conference, and there criticized and amended until satisfactory results were secured.

Pertinent Findings

Any one acquainted with foreign mission problems of our day would not question for a moment the pertinency of the foregoing subjects. There was no dodging of the issues, but a spirit of frankness with cordiality prevailed. There was a passion for reality. The Kingdom of God cannot be built on superficial foundations. We must face facts and attack our problem in the spirit and with the power of Christ.

Space does not permit a detailed report of these findings. A person in trying to pick out a few significant findings always runs the danger of being misunderstood. With the understanding that the following are only clippings from the findings, I quote a few of the more significant:

Leadership.—The following were given as some of the hindrances which keep the ablest young men out of the ministry: Lack of a true appreciation of the supreme importance of Christian life service; small salaries; lack of prestige; the attractiveness of other callings; obligations to parents and relatives; lack of encouragement at home; lack of the heroic appeal. In the face of these facts the following recommendations were made: Setting forth the splendid possibilities of Christian service; the church giving a better financial support for the ministry; more real evangelism and soul-winning; challenging young men and young women for service in needy fields.

Evangelism.—Giving the central place to evangelism was emphasized. More spirit-filled lives, both of pastors and church members, is the supreme need. Student evangelism through student centers, mission dormitories, and student churches, presents the most unique opportunity in the Philippines. The use of the Bible, especially in the formation of Bible classes for Bible study, was especially stressed.

Relation Between the Younger and the Older Churches.—Appreciation for the help given by the older churches in America was expressed. The development of the indigenous church was recognized as the goal of missionary effort. Within approximately two or three decades full self-support and also a very large measure of missionary responsibility for unoccupied areas should be realized by the Filipino church.

The following were some of the pertinent recommendations: The securing of an expression from Filipino church leaders regarding the return of missionaries, as well as the stationing of missionaries; the administration of grants in aid from abroad for evangelistic funds be delegated to a joint committee, and that educational, medical, publishing, and other institutions necessary to the life and ministry of the churches should have Filipino representatives on their boards of management.

Augmenting Our Financial Resources.—In these findings the committee sought to find ways and means of securing larger gifts, both from the members of the Filipino church, and from the friends in America. The need of a more abundant spiritual life, of stewardship training, of an adequate program for the church, of strict accounting of money, of budgets, were factors emphasized.

Cooperation and Unity.—This committee recommended the reorganization of the Evangelical Union and renaming it the National Christian Council in the Philippines. They also recommended at least a part-time secretary of the Council whose duties were defined in the report.—The Watchword.

Bandages (alias bandes) for Africa

A letter just received from Dr. Gribble expresses the missionaries' deep appreciation of the bandages that the various societies and individuals are sending to the African Field. Dr. Gribble writes:

"We are so grateful for the bandages, and with our rapidly increasing medical work, would not know how to manage without this continually incoming supply. We are daily handling the most loathsome cases—leprosy, syphilis, yaws, tropical ulcer, etc. Hence, to wash the bandages is impossible because insanitary."

Then, she writes further:

"We are having increasing trouble about the charging of customs on bandages, out of proportion to their value. Some one kindly disposed and thinking that to highly value a box of bandages will protect it, will mark it, for example, 'Value $94.00,' which means that we will have to pay approximately $12.00 to get it out of customs. Another thing which causes confusion is that the word 'Bandages' is also a French word, but it means automobile tires! Therefore, if a low value is put upon it (the box) the customs officer immediately makes a new evaluation and we pay on cotton bandages at the same rate as for automobile tires. Now, this has happened just once, but we would suggest the following plan to prevent its repetition: I would suggest that the French word be used, 'Bandes,' also that bandages made of old goods be marked 'No intrinsic value.' Thus, every box of bandages should be marked: 'BANDES DU COTON USE. PAS DE VALEUR,' which freely means: 'Bandages made of old cotton cloth, and of but little value.'

"If some authority requires a value, then it should be placed as low as possible."

For the information of those who have lately taken up this work, may we repeat what we have before said: When made, these bandages should be carefully packed, addressed to the missionary on the Field whom you want to receive them, and then sent to Montgomery Ward & Co., Missionary Bureau, Export Dept., Chicago, Ill. In addition to the missionary's address on the package, please put in large letters, "M. O. C." These initials stand for "Mission Oubangui-Chari," and our missionaries tell us that any package so marked comes through without delay or question, whereas when it is merely addressed to an individual missionary, there is apt to be some difficulty, as officials over there do not know the names of all our missionaries. But "M. O. C." is recognized at once as our Mission Station.

At the time you forward the bandages to Montgomery Ward & Co., also please send to them a memorandum invoice, stating the contents of your package, its weight and a minimum value. They require this in making declaration on export shipments. Then please write to the Office Secretary, telling her of your shipment, so she may instruct Montgomery Ward & Co. to forward your package with other goods going to our African Field.

Bandages should be 2 inches wide, and each roll should contain six or seven yards. If the piece runs short before that length is reached, it should be made that length by sewing on an additional piece. In his Name and on behalf of our missionaries, we thank you! ALICE B LONGAKER, Office Secretary, Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren church, 1925 E. 5th Street, Long Beach, California.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

MORRILL, KANSAS

But few of us can take stock of the results we have accomplished for any given period of time, and look over the figures with a feeling of absolute satisfaction in that they represent our best effort and ability day in and day out. There is always room for improvement.

This is true in our review of the past months of our work here. With the end of the present year in sight, general church conditions are up to the general average. While we look back and see some things that might have been done, we also are made to observe certain handicaps, throughout the year, that have apparently held us back, for the time being. Elderly residents here tell us that the last year has been the most rainy, and weather conditions most unfavorable of any year in their memory. For six and seven Sundays in succession there has been rain and mud, and the roads have been almost impassible. We had snow and ice through the winter until the people were shut in. Sickness and other ills have also been handicaps. But here we are, with everybody optimistic at the close of another year, and in many ways the best year. We have observed every special day and received offerings, but our gifts have too frequently been cut down through the difficulties just referred to.

The financial support of the church has been very encouraging, with the church ready to close its year's activities with money on hand and all bills paid. The financial burden of a church with a small membership is by no means an easy one, yet it is our thermometer. With everybody cooperating, it reveals the spirit of brotherliness and a common interest in the things of the kingdom.

Four have been received into the church in the past year. There have been a few removals by letter, and one or so by death. Our dear Sister Syster, formerly of the Bethany church, with a membership of long-standing, went from us in the early summer. Also Sister Warner, not a resident of this community any more but an isolated member, was called home. Hence from the standpoint of membership, we have just retained our numbers. This is not discouraging, but it should be better. Nevertheless, in a closely church community as this one would have to do some close figuring to know where to go to find new recruits.

The Woman's Missionary Society, has been faithful throughout the year and proves to be one of the very faithful organs of the church. The Sunday school has been below the average of last year due to impassable roads, bad weather and in the winter much sickness of the community. Yet, the spirit, quality of service, interest and devotion to its work maintain a standard equally as high as previous years. The Sisterhood continues its regular monthly meetings, and carries out the functions of that organization. A special feature of the year was the joint meeting with the W. M. S., in which time a good attendance was had, and a delightful evening enjoyed together.

Dr. Bell was with us in the early spring. He found it very difficult to meet all the people in the country, but the church cooperated in a very good way, in establishing a permanent endowment fund for the college. Bell did hard work, and yet was very optimistic. While here he and the Ford became better acquainted with the Kansas mud and Kansas roads.

The year closes with our vacation in August. The first of September the new year begins, with a very substantial raise in the pastor's salary, and with good will and fine feeling prevailing in the church.

All those who are interested in the Christian work at Morrill, remember us in their prayers. L. A. MYERS, Pastor.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

My last report was dated a month ago and the reader will note below that offerings have been coming in, and I am hoping they may continue to do so, until the congregations responding will reach 100%. That has never happened yet, though I can see no reason for not expecting it, in view of the custom which has been established, and the continued appeal of the general conference.

LAKE ODESSA, MICHIGAN

On June 9 Brother James Cook began a meeting in the church at this place. Brother Cook is a true Fundamentalist and preached the truth, for which we praise the Lord. Our fellowship together was such that we felt a pang of loneliness when it came time for him to leave us. Four were baptized on the last Sunday evening and eight others have signified their desire to unite with the church by letter. Brother Cook's presence strengthened the people in the Lord and many reconsecrated themselves in response to a sermon, "Up to Mount Moriah."

Meetings closed on Monday night with a communion service, lacking only five of the largest since we have been here. We were glad for the special music furnished by the Goodsel party consisting of accordion, vibraphone, piano and drums, also for the support of visiting ministers, three paying us a visit in one night.

We count ourselves fortunate in having a large tabernacle in Lake Odessa where a fine Bible Conference is held each year. The conference is conducted by the Newell Brothers of Pennsylvania, and many good speakers are brought to our midst. The writer gave a Bible Chart Lecture of the "Virgin Birth" on the last Sunday of the conference this year. This conference is a source of great strength to the community and our people are loyal to its support.

The post office gave me a 1c permit and I have been sending tracts to every address from this place each month. It costs some $8,000.00 to support the churches in town a year (our church is in the country) and one of the pastors told me that he doubted if six persons were saved last year and only about 400 people were reached. Through the mail I reach some 3,000 people at an expense of some $150.00 a year.

We also hold open air meetings on the streets, using the cornet to bring the people together. At times there is a large crowd and at other times it is small. There is little encouragement in work of this kind, yet our Lord has bidden us "go" and we leave the results to him, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Once in a while we do hear from some one. Recently I passed out Gospels of John in a train. Evidently someone became disgusted with one and threw it from the window near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. But the Lord knew just how to stop a big Pennsylvania engine near the spot, and when the engineer got out of his cab to inspect his engine he saw the Gospel. When he got back into his engine he took it along and gave it to his fireman who was such an ungodly man. The engineer wrote me a letter saying that "He is a changed man now." If God used that one Gospel, I am sure much good came from the other 1300 that I took along with me.

Our Foreign Mission offering was the largest this church has ever had, being over $700.00. We praise our God for the interest in Foreign Missions that these people are showing forth not only in word but also in deed.

On two occasions we were favored with the presence of outside speakers. Anna McFedries, the Jail Angel of Pittsburgh, gave us a very touching account of her work among the unfortunate girls in that place. Also Miss Stock, a returned missionary from China gave us a fine message about her work in that dark country, where Satan rules supreme and for whom so little has been done to give them the message of salvation. Surely our Lord has said "Go" and woe to that person who does not "Believe in foreign missions." The question is not, "What will God do with the heathen," but "What will God do with the Christian who does not heed his command to give them the Bread of Life?"

One great hindrance to missionary effort is the lack of financial support. God has given his people plenty of money but many have kept it under pretense of "making a living." What God wants is for his people to trust him fully. I wish to give my testimony for those who may be faltering between two courses. Sometimes ministers think that they should not tithes, but I believe that the minister is in need of the blessings that God has promised, as well as any one else.

We receive one of the smallest salaries in the entire Brethren church and have one of the largest families to support and have always given our tithe. But at the Bible Conference at this place a year ago we were convinced that we should give more. Thus for over one year we have given two tithes or one dollar in five to definite Christian work, not in helping pay our own salary but in foreign missions and tract work, etc. And God has not failed us for we have had the happiest year of our ministry and are sure that there are greater blessings than those that can come in a financial way. The Lord gave me eight meetings with my Bible Charts and I had the joy of seeing some 140 souls brought to definite decision and we praise him for it all.

We are anxiously looking forward to National Conference at Winona, where we have the happy privilege of meeting old friends in the Lord and it reminds us of the happy reunion when our Lord will return and we are caught up together in the clouds to meet him in the air. We praise our Lord for the Blessed Hope of his soon return. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

R. I. HUMBERD.

OAK HILL CONFERENCE

Report of the Forty-second Annual Conference of the Brethren Churches of the Southeastern (formerly the Maryland-Virginia) District

The Conference was called to order by the moderator. Rev. Ed. L. Miller at 2 P. M., June 11, 1929. The devotional service was led by the moderator who read with comment Acts 15:6-31, a report of the first church conference. Following prayer, the moderator called on Rev. Freeman Ankrum, who made an address of welcome and introduced Mayor Claude R. Hill, of Oak Hill, who further welcomed us to the city of Oak Hill.

Responses to these addresses came thick and fast from Brother Dooley, Washington; Brother T. G. Locke, Maurertown; Brother Coffey, Roanoke; Dr. Laughlin, Hagerstown; Mrs. Drushal, Lost Creek; Miss Ebersole, Krypton; Dr. Carpenter, Hagerstown; Brother Eppley, Roanoke; Rev. Bibb, Oak Hill, and others.

Next the organization of the conference was begun with the appointment of Brethren Dooley, McKinney and Mrs. Moore as tellers. The election resulted in Rev. E. L. Miller being elected Moderator; Rev. Kent, Vice-moderator; John F. Locke, Secretary; T. G. Locke, Treasurer; the choice of an assistant secretary was left to the Secretary. (The position remains unfilled, hence the lateness of this report)

The Committee on Resolutions was composed of Brother Eppley, Mrs. A. C. Munch, and Dr. Laughlin.

The Committee on Time and Place was as follows: Dr. Shaver, Rev. Ankrum and Mrs. Drach.

An open forum discussion was held on the subject, "The Faith Once Delivered." Those participating were Brother Kent who stressed the great Christian Doctrines; Dr. Shaver, who urged the Bible and Apostolic principles; Mrs. Srack, who spoke on Salvation and the Intercessory Work of Christ; Brother Dooley, who spoke on Knowledge and Assent of Christ's Work and the Appropriation of that work for ourselves; Brother Ankrum called attention to the emblems of "The Faith once Delivered" as portrayed in the windows of the church.

After singing the Doxology the Conference was dismissed by Dr. Carpenter.

Tuesday Evening Session

Dr. Duncan led the conference in a song service. Brother Kent read from 1 Peter 1:1 and brought a very helpful and illuminating devotional message on the things which the Apostle calls precious. Following several short prayers from the audience, Brother Kent led the conference in prayer.

The Duncan Male Quartette were enthusiastically received by the conference. The quartette was composed of four sons of Rev. Duncan, founder of the Oak Hill church.

Rev. Kent introduced the next feature of the program which was the Moderator's address. Rev. Miller first spoke in retrospect of the passing of Brethren Shaver, Leedy, Koontz, Lyon and Hall.

As a text for his address the Moderator used "Put on thy Strength, O Zion." He applied the words to the Brethren church.

With an enthusiasm which was contagious he pointed out that nothing can be accomplished by emphasizing our weaknesses. In the might and power of the Spirit of God we can achieve. Therefore,

1. Be loyal to the Bible. You can't live it unless you know it. Put truth into action in intelligent living.

2. Be loyal to the church. Remember, you are serving God and don't get cold feet because of what some individual may say about you. Organizations may come and organizations may go but the church goes on forever—the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it.

3. In Unity There is Strength.—One in faith, hope, and doctrine. Only way we can go to victory is in the strength and glory of God. The church started with eleven discouraged disciples. Later they were called "they who have turned the world upside down." We have the same job. Let's be satisfied but try to improve constantly.

The message was fittingly followed by "Nearer the Cross." The session closed with assignment of homes to delegates by Rev. Ankrum. Dr. Teeter pronounced the benediction.

Wednesday Morning

The session opened with H. E. Eppley leading the congregation in singing, "Tell Me the Old, Old, Story." After prayer the program of the Sunday school hour was begun.

Brother J. A. McKinney of Oak Hill, spoke on "The Sunday School as a Social Center."

John F. Locke spoke in "The Sunday School as a Moulder of Character."

Comments were made by Brother Dooley and Dr. Laughlin.

The Preachers' Hour

Following the singing of "Where He Leads Me I will Follow," a paper by John W. Thompson was read by the secretary. The subject was "Caring for the Weaker Churches."

Brother W. S. Baker spoke on the subject, "Are We Sufficiently Evangelistic?" He called attention to the fact that the Gospel message must be carried and that we must not neglect evangelism.

Drs. Teeter and Shaver spoke discussing the topic.

The Mission Hour

Dr. Carpenter had charge of this hour. The Mission Board's report was the best in years. A report on the Winchester church was made and Brother Dooley commented on the church.

Brother Ankrum spoke on "The Why of Missions." He took Acts 1:8 as a basis of his remarks, "Ye shall be my Witnesses." He stressed the necessity of building at home in order to go to those far distant. He closed the address with a strong appeal for foreign missions.

Dr. Carpenter spoke on "What Next?" His answer was Livingstone's, "Anywhere, provided it be Forward." He said too many have no religion to export. We can not feed others if we starve ourselves. The women of America spend more each year for cosmetics than the church spends for missions and the men of America spend more for tobacco annually than the church has spent for missions in 18 centuries.

Brother Baker dismissed the session with prayer.

Afternoon Session

After being led by Brother J. A. Duncan and a season of prayer the Conference Business session was begun by a report from the Credentials Committee. The Secretary read the minutes and the session continued. Brethren E. L. Miller and J. M. Tombaugh were re-elected to the Mission Board.

The Committee on Time and Place reported an invitation from Mt. Olive and the invitation was accepted.

Brethren Ankrum, Copp and Tombaugh were elected to the Ministerial Aid Board.

Brethren Ankrum and Miller were elected as National Executive Committeemen.

The District Executive Committee was constituted as follows: Brethren Miller, Locke, Chambers, Carpenter and Dr. Shaver.

Dr. Shaver was re-elected to the Board of Trustees of Ashland College.

A most praiseworthy proposition was presented by Brother Dooley. (The substance of this paper will be presented in the Evangelist at a later time). A motion to the effect that the conference unqualifiedly endorse and emphatically recommend Brother Dooley's communication to the National Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana this year, was made and passed unanimously.

After a hymn, "More About Jesus," the conference heard John F. Locke on "Traveling in the Land of the Book."

The session was adjourned and the Woman's Missionary Society began its session.

Evening Session

After singing "To the Work," led by Brother Eppley and prayer by Dr. Shaver, Mrs. J. R. Laughlin spoke on "My Ideal Church." Some of the features of such a church were: Regular attendance, proper attitude in worship, educated in giving, without factions or divisions but gentle in judgments with the fruits of the Spirit manifested, a desire on the part of all to be used without an ambition to be conspicuous.

A paper on "The Church and Education" by L. H. Brumbaugh, was read by the Secretary.

Dr. Bell spoke as the representative of the College, telling of the needs of the College and its place in the church's life.

The Duncan Quartette again favored the conference with several highly appreciated selections.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, representing the Brethren Publishing interests spoke next. His address was full of delightful wit. He drove home the fact of the close relationships of all the institutions of the church. A very striking fact given by him was that in the Southeastern District with almost 3,080 church members only 354 copies of the Evangelist go into Brethren homes and of these 354 copies the four larger churches take a large percentage, leaving some churches with few Evangelist reading homes. The church paper should go on the church budget and go into every home.

Rev. Ankrum pronounced the benediction and so closed a big day of a good conference.

Thursday Morning

The devotional period was led by Brother Kent and Brother Miller.

The Statistician's report was accepted. Attention was called to the importance of correctly filled statistical blanks and prompt attention to these matters. The Ministerial Examining Board was elected: Dr. J. M. Tombaugh, Dr. G. C. Carpenter, G. A. Copp. The Resolutions Committee reported as follows:

Resolutions

"By the delegates of the churches of the Southeastern District of the Brethren Fraternity assembled at Oak Hill, West Virginia, in their forty-second annual conference, Be it resolved:

1. That we thank our Heavenly Father for his love and mercy bestowed upon us throughout the year in keeping and prospering us and in bringing us together in an other conference which has been outstanding on account of the prevailing peace and harmony.

2. That we re-affirm our faith in the Bible as the only authoritative word of God "once for all delivered unto the saints."

3. That we re-affirm "The Message of the Brethren Ministry" as adopted by the ministers of the church and urge that it be more frequently preached in our churches.

4. That we are grateful for the progress of the College, Old Folks' Home, and Brethren Publishing Company and pray for their continued success and an enlarging of their fields of usefulness and pledge our loyal support to each.

5. That we place ourselves on record as favoring any effort put forth to enforce and promote temperance and to help in the enforcement and promotion as much as is within our abilities and opportunities.

6. That since the early church was evangelistic and the work and teaching of the Master were the same, we strive to make the churches of this district more evangelistic in their efforts to reach and save the lost.

7. That we commend the Mission Board for the work it has done and pray that its future efforts may be enlarged and crowned with even greater success.

8. That we approve and endorse and encourage the work of the Christian Endeavor, the Sunday school and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha for and among our young people and that we strive to encourage them and assist in their further promotion.

9. That the work of the W. M. S. be commended and encouraged by giving our hearty cooperation and assistance.

10. That our appreciation of the invitation of the Oak Hill church and the splendid manner in which they have cared for us in their homes and in the dining room and thereby made our visit among them both pleasant and profitable is hereby expressed.

11. That we congratulate the members of the Oak Hill church for their success in the erection of a splendid new church home and express our appreciation of sharing its comforts during this conference.

12. That we extend our good wishes to the town of Oak Hill for its welcome to us through its mayor, Mr. Hill and wish for it continued prosperity.

13. That the work of the officers of the conference and all who have had or will yet have a part in making this conference program possible be approved and our appreciation hereby shown.

14. That the approval of these resolutions be expressed by standing and singing together, "Praise God from whom all Blessings Flow."

Signed:

H. E. EPPLEY,
DR. MARY A. LAUGHLIN,
MRS. A. C. MUNCH.

The Credential Committee reported 10 ministerial delegates and 53 lay delegates as its final report.

A motion was made by Brother Ankrum that the District Mission Board make an investigation of the Covington, Virginia situation and report at Winona and to the conference at Mt. Olive next year. The motion was carried without a dissenting voice.

Dr. Bell spoke of our non-resident members. He said we had lost almost as many as we now have in church.

Brother Ankrum then spoke on the "Truth about Evolution." With good humor the speaker pointed out some of the gaps and absurdities in the theory.

Departmental Conferences

The W. M. S. was led in its conference by Mrs. Simpson, the ministers and laymen by the Moderator.

Brother Kent spoke on "We Would See Jesus," a splendid address in every respect.

Dr. Carpenter spoke on "The Preacher I Ought to Be." While we are not perfect, we have a perfect example to follow. The preacher ought to be:

1. A Man. 2. A spreader of the Word. 3. A shepherd. 4. A minister, not ministered unto. 5. A tither. 6. A student. 7. Filled with the Spirit of Christ.

Discussion of the addresses followed, Brother J. A. Duncan, Brother T. G. Locke, Dr. Bell, Brother Ankrum and Dr. Duncan participating.

The session closed with singing "My Savior First of All" and was dismissed by Dr. Carpenter.

Thursday Afternoon—Young People's

Session

The devotions were conducted by Miss Carter of Lost Creek, Kentucky, who brought a very helpful message on the Scripture lesson.

Rev. E. L. Miller spoke on "Using the Young Folks in the Church."

A paper by Brother Preston Campbell of Washington was read. The subject was, "What Would Young People Like to Do?" The paper was read by Miss Lelia Alexandria.

Miss Frances Brumbaugh read a paper on "Jesus Our Example."

Miss Catherine Bowersox of Linwood, Maryland gave a reading, stressing world peace.

The meeting was closed by singing, "We are Marching to Zion."

Brother Eppley led the social hour in the church basement.

Closing Session

Rev. Ankrum conducted the devotions and afterward introduced the Duncan Male Quartette. Their number was, "We Shall Know Each Other Better when the Mists Have Cleared Away."

Brother and Sister Eppley sang as a duet, "Waiting at the Heart's Door."

A trio composed of three of Oak Hill's colored men delighted the audience with "Let the Church Roll On," "I'll Go with Him Through the Garden" and "Try it On." The numbers were received with utmost appreciation and raptured interest.

"Some Signs of Nobleness"

"These were more noble in that they received the Word with readiness of mind" was Brother Eppley's text for the subject, "Some Signs of Nobleness"

Quench the thirst of your souls on the water of life daily." "If you lack a Christian experience open up your mind and search the Scriptures." The sermon was a fitting message for the occasion.

After the singing of "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," the Lord's Prayer was repeated in unison and Brother Eppley pronounced the benediction.

There was no anticlimax to the conference. The last session was as well attended as the previous evening sessions. The forty second annual conference was from start to finish a happy one, a Spiritually uplifting one and an inspiring one.

JOHN F. LOCKE, Secretary.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XXI. THE CROSS

By N. V. Leatherman

In John 12:32 we read, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." In the verse 34 following, we read the response of Christ's audience to these words, "The people answered him, we have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, the Son of man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of man?" In Matthew 28:18 we have Christ giving the answer "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

Christ Jesus was lifted up. That cross is to be the drawing power of God. The church is failing today, to hold up Christ, Crucified. Churchmen are laying great stress upon the ethics of Jesus. Jesus is revealed to the Orient by many of the Christian missionaries through his ethical teachings. His teachings laid along side those of Mohammed, of Buddha, of Confucius and others. The superiority of Jesus' ethics over the others when recognized is supposed to make Christians of the heathen. One of the prevailing responses in speaking to folks about their relation with God is, "Oh, I try to live right." But people tried to do that long before Christ was born in Bethlehem or was crucified on Calvary.

Ours is not "the Christ of the Indian Road," or of the "Round Table." Ours is not the Christ of the American Road. He is not the Christ of the Oriental Road, nor of the Occidental Road. Can we get it? Ours is the Christ of "The Via Dolorosa." It was the Christ of Calvary that opened the doors of China, of India, of Africa and the islands of the sea where his name has been borne. The message was, come and be one of his disciples. But instead are not the people of the world today guilty of taking Jesus down from his unique place and making him just one of themselves?

People are thinking in terms of religion today. The radio, the magazine, and even the newspaper have turned preacher, to supply this new demand. The Brethren Church has her part in maintaining for Christ the place of the Cross. Other bodies and organizations may play with and profane the cross, we dare not. South Bend, Indiana.

A NEW Era in Human History

Sixty years ago the Pope of Rome, sheared of his temporal power by a united Italy, entered through the bronze doors of the Vatican and became a voluntary prisoner within his own palace as a protest before the world. For sixty years churchmen and politicians tried vainly to solve the Roman question." Historians declared its solution was impossible. Optimistic Protestant leaders dismissed the idea of papal temporal power as a relic of the Dark Ages, and argued that its return to our modern world was unthinkable. But they did not foresee Mussolini, the Dictator.

Today, July 25th, the bronze doors swing open once more, thanks to Mussolini, and the Pope comes forth for the first time in sixty years to take his place among the temporal sovereigns of the world, the ruler of the Vatican State, a tiny principality comprising only a few acres but as absolutely a sovereign state as England or France.

Historians agree that the entrance of the Pope into his self-imposed imprisonment, sixty years ago, marked the end of a distinct historical era. The coming forth of the Pope is an event of no less importance. It is the beginning of a new era. What the new era will bring forth to the world, no man knows. But the student of prophecy will regard the restoration of papal power an ominous sign of the times, a harbinger of the coming night.

But don't forget that the morning cometh. "The Lord is at hand." At his Coming the night shall vanish and the shadows flee away.

THEOLOGY and Christianity

A writer in the Los Angeles Times argues that the churches should discard theology and adopt Christianity. This is the watchword of the superficial and self-appointed advisors of the church.

One needs to ask but one question to puncture the whole argument—What is Christianity? And the moment they attempt to answer this question they are in the realm of theology. As a matter of fact, most of the men who advise the discarding of "theology" are not really against the idea of theology, as such. They only want to substitute their own little systems of theology for the historic systems held by the churches. Talk to any of them, and you will soon find this to be true.

Theology holds the same relation to Christianity that botany holds to flowers. The man who advocates the discarding of theology ought also, in the interest of consistency, oppose the teaching of botany. The theologians have made mistakes. So have the botanists. The remedy is not to discard theology and botany, but rather to make a more careful study of the two fields out of which these two sciences arise, the field of plant-life and the field of the Scriptures. This is the only intelligent attitude.

DRESS-REFORM for Men

The investigators are investigating everything. They are now ready to tell us how many pounds of clothing we wear. Garments worn by the average woman weigh one pound and six ounces. The average man wears exactly ten pounds of clothes. This rather startling information has moved a group of prominent men in London to organize a "Men's Dress Reform Party" for the purpose of getting men to discard various articles of attire such as collars, trousers, vests, unnecessary buttons and "ridiculous" pockets. Nothing is being done by the women. They seem to be satisfied with the present situation, as far as they are concerned.

I will admit that sometimes, when the thermometer hovers about the one hundred mark, I envy the women their cool attire. But then again, when winter comes, it makes me shudder to look at some of them.

However comfortable the scant garments of modern woman may be, I doubt whether the men will ever adopt them. We are too conservative. Where is the man who would have the nerve to walk about the streets dressed in a few ounces of silk chiffon?

Nevertheless, it must be admitted that the present fashion in mens' clothing is rather dumb. With all our boasted Occidental superiority, the Chinaman shows more intelligence with his loose silken garments. And he seems able to wear them without any loss of dignity. It would be great if we could adopt such clothing in America, at least in the summer time. But there is little chance. We lack the necessary courage. Hence, we shall go wearing our ten pounds of woolen clothing, heavy shoes and tight collars.

Theoretically, the best solution of the whole dress problem would be the Aristotelian happy medium—The men should take off a few pounds, and the women might put on a few ounces more.

A Vision and a Question

By Mrs. Mary A. Snyder

One day in the early months of the year 1917 an invalid was resting on his bed in a home situated at the juncture of two valleys, and round about were high hills. His mind was active at the age of three score and twelve. He was a deacon in the church and had been a successful Sunday school teacher and the best fireside Bible teacher of children I ever knew. He had this vision:

The great valleys became a level expanse of green from hill to hill and on over the surface there floated something white, of the size and appearance of a duck. He asked his guide what this object was and received the reply: "This is a bunch of righteousness that has gone up and down these valleys, at the risk of her life, for years teaching others." Then he knew the bunch of righteousness meant his daughter and he asked the result. The guide replied: "All her works are as wood, hay and stubble; they shall be burned up, but she shall be saved, though as by fire." Will some one please explain this vision?

THE EDITOR suggests that possibly the mind of the aged Christian and Bible teacher was weighed down with the two-fold thought that all our righteous works done in the name of Christ avail nothing for our future unless they are of the kind and done with the sincerity and motive that build into life that quality of character and godliness of mind that will abide (as suggested by the statement of Paul to which his mind was directed, I Cor. 3:12), and also the fact that when one has done his utmost of service and sacrifice for mankind, he has only done his duty as a servant of Jesus Christ. They are the words of our Lord himself as recorded in Luke 17:10, that "when ye have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."

A RUSSIAN SOLDIERS' CONVERSION

Some missionaries were conducting a meeting in the Kobryn district. The preaching of one missionary had been continually interrupted by a young man evidently intoxicated. When the next speaker arose, he said, "I am going to read to you the Word of God, but if any one interrupts, I will close the meeting." The audience was surprised at this remark. Many turned and looked with disapproval at the young man. Just then a tall man sprang to his feet and exclaimed to the disturber, "These people are trying to tell the way of salvation and I have come to hear it. If you put your hands on my head, you will find twelve scars. I have killed seven men. If you do not stop interrupting, the same will happen to you as to those seven men."

At these words a great stillness came upon the audience as though the people almost feared to breathe. The man who had just spoken was well known and feared in the community. He had come from Russia where he had been in military service and a leader of troops. The missionary gave his message and the interest was intense. Some were shielding their ears to catch every word.

As the meeting was drawing to a close, the tall man arose again. When speaking before, his face had been red with anger; now he was pale and spoke with difficulty.

"Is this good news also for me?" he asked, burdened with the guilt of murder. "Is there any chance for me to be saved? Can God forgive such a sinner?"

Without being asked, he came forward and knelt down trembling. God dealt with that sinful life and in that meeting he found God. "It saves! It saves!" he said later, meaning the Gospel which he had heard, "I am saved!"

The whole place was stirred on hearing of this murderer's conversion. His turning to God was a most striking evidence of the power of the Gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. We are glad to say that he continues faithful in the Christian life.—Russ. and Slav. Mo.

Our Christian Courage Put to the Test

The following story, often told, is making the rounds of various church publications just now, and it is worth repeating:

"Sam Davis was a young Confederate soldier, or scout, who was sent by General Braxton Bragg, Confederate general, in November, 1863, on the perilous mission of penetrating, in disguise, the Federal lines in Middle Tennessee and obtaining accurate information of the fortification, numbers and movements of the Federal troops. This he obtained, much of it from a young Federal officer with whom he became friendly, closely connected with General G. M. Dodge's headquarters. Young Davis, in trying to escape out of the lines, was captured and the incriminating papers found tucked under his saddle. Among them were complete maps of the fortifications, possessed only by General Dodge himself and evidently taken from his own files. General Dodge endeavored by every way possible to get Davis to tell him the name of the traitor in his own camp. He told Davis that unless he told him he would surely be court-martialed and hanged as a spy. 'You are doing your duty, General Dodge, and I am doing mine and I will die before I will tell.' He was court-martialed and condemned to be hanged November 27, 1863, but General Dodge admiring his courage, sent one of his own staff to him after he was on the gallows and the rope around his neck and offered him his horse, his side-arms and a free pass to Bragg's army if he would tell. Davis' reply is immortal: 'If I had a thousand lives to live I would lose them all before I would betray my friends or the confidence of my informer.' He turned to the men who were adjusting the rope and said: 'I am ready. Do your duty, men.' His statue is on Capitol hill, General Dodge forty years afterward contributing liberally for its erection."

Such a spirit of courage and devotion to duty is needed in the army of our Lord Jesus Christ today. Nothing is more important to a successful Christian life nor to the advancement of the Kingdom than a high quality of courage. But there is not as much of that virtue abroad among the people of the church as there ought to be, nor yet is there apparent any very widespread desire to possess it. Doubtless there is any number who would be delighted to be termed courageous, but they are not keen about seeking to build that quality into their lives, nor to display a heroic devotion to the church. Some may be indifferent about the matter because of a wrong conception of courage, while others may be unwilling to pay the price of such a possession.

Courage does not necessarily consist in steeling one's heart against all fear, of being able to do some extraordinarily dangerous and difficult thing without a quaver of the voice or a blanch of the face. Dr. Robert E. Speer says, "Courage does not consist in feeling no fear. It consists in conquering the fear that we feel, and in doing what ought to be done without regard to our feelings. . . . The braver man was not the man of fewest fears, but the man who, whatever his fears, would still go straight ahead to his duty." Anna Burnham Bryant gives us these suggestive words, "No finer illustration of moral courage can be imagined than the doing of the necessary thing—the manifest duty of the moment—regardless of one's state of mind toward it." That is courage, the kind of courage that is needed, the kind that will enable one to hold steady in the face of danger or to persevere in monotonous routine.

It is important that we build up within our lives the most genuine and vital sort of courage, for it will be greatly needed and severely put to the test. We shall need such courage to keep ourselves free and apart from the worldliness and carnality of the common life about us. It is easy to conform to this world, to go with the crowd, to do what is the popular thing. But it is hard to stand apart from the crowd, to refuse to do what everybody else is doing because Christian conscience does not sanction it. It goes against our nature to yield to the divine admonition, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor. 6:17). But that is the purpose of Christ's giving of himself—namely, "that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus 2:14). And the Apostle Peter declares of us, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light" (1 Peter 2:9). We are a separate, a called-out people, and need with boldness to heed the appeal of Paul to "Be not conformed to this world, but . . . transformed by the renewing of your minds" (Rom. 12:2). "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live" (Rom. 8:14).

The Christian should be ready to persevere faithfully in the line of his daily duties of helpfulness toward his fellowmen, regardless of the personal sacrifice and hardship it may involve, and that will require courage. It may not seem very heroic just to do one's duty regularly and conscientiously, but that is the way heroes are made, and their name is by no means legion. A young life-guard protested against being made a hero because he had saved three children and their nurse, at the risk of his own life, saying, "I did my duty, that's all. It's all in the day's work." There was nothing heroic about just doing one's duty, in his opinion. But history gives a different view of it. All the heroism that humanity has cared enough about to record and to remember has been nothing more nor less than duty. Every man has his particular part in the world's work, and he who does his task with exceptional thoroughness is accounted a hero. "To do one's duty is to do enough to merit the stamp of greatness. Nobody ever got that stamp justly by any other method." "Few of us really do our duty," said the Christian Herald a few years ago. "When some man does his duty he becomes conspicuous. He is an exceptional man because he did his duty—that's all. This is precisely the reason he ought to be held up as a model. The man who does his duty and does it as a matter of course, is the highest example of true manhood. From such we have to learn the greatest lesson of life."

It will put courage to the test to attack and lay bare the sins of our day. Few things will call down the popular wrath upon ones' head like engaging in such a mission. Jeremiah the prophet found it so. He drew a terrible picture of the condition of his people, for they had broken every commandment and were guilty of every sin in the catalogue of vice and crime. The kingdom of Judah was on the verge of utter ruin and he told them so plainly. As a result Jeremiah became a very unpopular man. No man can attack the sins of his nation, state or community without becoming extremely unpopular. It has been so through all history. Jeremiah's sensitive nature made it all the harder for him to endure the persecution that was heaped upon him and yet stand firm. But he did it, and that shows his real courage. Some one reported to Napoleon that one of his officers turned pale when ordered to a dangerous duty. "That officer," replied Napoleon, "is one of the bravest in the entire army; he sees most clearly the danger, but will do his duty in spite of it." So it is with many a leader against the social, religious and political ills of our day, though gentle, and sensitive, shrinking in fear from the painful experiences of their labors, they have nevertheless held persistently and earnestly to their task and demonstrated the high quality of courage that was divinely vouchsafed unto them. This is a day when such courage is greatly needed.

It will test our Christian courage to bear witness to the saving grace of Jesus Christ in the face of opposition and ridicule. That is the Christian's highest obligation—that of telling the Gospel story to those who have not received it into their hearts, and it is not always an easy thing to do. True, there is seldom in our own land the persecution to be meted out to those who are faithful enough to go about bearing witness to Christ's saving power, as was done to Peter and John in Jerusalem of old, but there is need of the same sort of boldness that characterized those faithful preachers of the Word. It was the attitude of the apostles more than their words that struck the Jewish leaders with wonder. After they had been delivered from prison and the officers came upon them and found them preaching again, after having been warned and threatened, instead of seeking to escape they boldly faced them and it was that courage that so strongly impressed their persecutors. That boldness is needed by every disciple of our Lord and that same disposition to tell the wonderful story of Christ. There is no prison and stripes awaiting the missionaries or personal evangelists in our American cities, but there will be sneers and rebuffs and ridicule and discouragement, and in some crowds there will be ostracism and scorn and ugly criticism. There must be courage equal to the occasion.

The courage of Saul of Tarsus as a witness bearer is especially inspiring and challenging. And his courage was based upon the purest of motives—his conviction of the truth of Christianity. Saul could have had no other motive, remarks Sydney Smith, "to sacrifice the consideration in which he was held by his countrymen; to expose himself to ridicule and contempt, to persecution and poverty, to the most extreme and most varied distress. Could the Christians hold out to him any magnificent temptations? Could they buy him by the gorgeous allurements of honor, power and opulence? Alas, what could the Christians give? Begging themselves for life, for bread, for compassion; flying to rocks and to caverns, not to conceal crimes, but to worship that Savior who had just left the earth: what hopes and promises could they hold out to the mercenary talents and venal ambition? The persecuted cannot protect; power is not the gift of poverty; the indigent and the afflicted have nothing to offer but to share their misery." Saul's courage was in the face of determined opposition and fierce persecution, and, as George Whitefield once said, "Opposition never yet did, and never yet will, hurt a sincere convert. Nothing like opposition to make the man of God perfect." We need the courage that is ready to face opposition, that is ready to undertake any challenge in the interest of the Kingdom's welfare, if there be the assurance of God's approval and power. Give us the courage like unto that which gave the martyrs power to face death and enabled the early messengers of the cross to preach with such boldness and conviction as to turn the world upside down with interest.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Warsaw, Indiana, writes of a successful Vacation Bible School, which was of a union nature and included Winona and Warsaw churches. The Brethren people were well represented on the faculty and in the student body. Our Warsaw people are looking forward with anticipation of the joys of General Conference again, and they are planning to contribute their part to its success.

We have this week the first installment of the report of the Southern California conference which was held at Long Beach. The secretary, Brother Alan S. Pearce, has given us a very full record of the addresses and other features of the program which contributed to the making of this one of the best, if not the best, conferences this district has had. Brother A. V. Kimmell was re-elected moderator, which fact is evidence of the district's appreciation of his skill in such a capacity.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the very encouraging condition of the mission work in the Argentine. Notwithstanding the cold weather there which slows up the church work, the various mission stations are going forward in a splendid way. In the Sunday schools especially an increase in attendance is being registered. At one station two converts are reported. Three promising young seminary students are getting started in the work. The opportunities of the new fields are very challenging and call for the utmost of support possibly by the churches of the homeland.

Brother Floyd Sibert reports the addition of two new members to the Ellet (Ohio) congregation since dedication. He is being much encouraged and assisted in his work at the Ellet charge during the summer by some of our promising young preachers from Ashland Seminary. They are Brethren Hammers, Uphouse and McDonald, all of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Brother Sibert is serving the Rittman church along with his Ellet charge, but the Ellet church has made such progress that it is ambitious to take charge of their pastor for full time. We are hoping that it may be possible.

From President Jacobs' College news this week we learn that the faculty for next year is complete and that it is an unusually strong one. The fact that it is being built up to such strength is having a very fine impression on the city and county of Ashland. We have never before observed such manifestations of faith in the college as are now evident on the part of the local constituency. That should be encouraging and at the same time challenging to the church to whom the college belongs. Another item worthy of note is the addition of a considerable number of new books to the library, for the number and character of the books in a college library have a bearing on the standard of the school.

General Conference meets at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 26 to September 1. The program was recently published in the Evangelist and everybody on the program is planning to give the conference his very best, no doubt. That will go a long way towards making a successful conference. But the attendance is also a big factor, and that is what the churches must see to. Every church ought to be planning to have its full quota of delegates present, if possible. General Conference is the place to send your local church leaders. It will make them more intelligent, enthusiastic and successful leaders. That is what some of our congregations are lacking,—that informed leadership that is the result of listening to and participating in the proceedings of our conferences. And such churches very often are lagging in loyalty to the general interests of the denomination and lacking in vision and enthusiasm for their local work. Nothing pays better than to have an informed church leadership and one of the most satisfactory and successful ways of securing such a leadership is to send those who are capable of such responsibilities to Conference.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

They who build their home around the family altar will have no need of the divorce court.

The perfect Man is one who perfectly reveals to man God's purpose and plan for his life.

A nation, no more than an individual, can live fully and well without religion. It is time we were taking this fact more into account in our educational policy.

Paul said, "All things work together for good to them that love God," and Tennyson expressed much the same thought in this well known line, "Through the ages one eternal purpose runs." In other words, God has a purpose in human history, and that purpose is certain to be realized in those who are yielded to his will.

Some one has said, "Open windows will some day conquer the white plague. But are there not other diseases and troubles that would yield to open windows? Indifference, for example, and despair, and suspicion, and unbelief." It will pay us to live more behind the open windows; it served Daniel well.

Hilkiah of old said to Shaphan, "I have found the book." There are many people today to whom the Bible needs to be re-discovered. Indeed, there are many homes in which it is practically a lost book, covered with dust, or with recently read magazines, papers and other books of little or less value. But the law book which Hilkiah found had been lost in the temple. Is it possible that the case has a parallel today, that there are churches in which the Word of God has been lost? There are those who claim that it is so, at least that large portions of the Bible have been lost. If so, the responsibility rests with the pulpit. And the situation is sad when a preacher has lost his Bible, or any part of it. Popular book reviews, the discussion of current topics, biographical dissertations, and the like, are often entertaining and sometimes helpful, but when they are allowed to crowd the book of God's law out of the pulpit, they are working a calamity upon the church.

A man cannot live a good life without really trying.

The Sin for Which There is No Forgiveness, or the Unpardonable Sin

(A sermon delivered by Rev. C. C. Collins, Pastor, in the First Brethren Church, Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, Sunday evening, March 24th.)

You will find my text in the 5th chapter of John, a part of the 16th verse. "There is a sin unto death, I do not say that ye should pray for it."

Most of the messages presented to the public upon this fearful subject are based upon the story of Esau who sold his birthright (Heb. 12:16). This was a tragedy in the life of Esau, but it was not the sin for which there is no forgiveness in the sense of the sin that I want to present to you. Esau sold his birthright, which was a double portion of his father's inheritance. He never sold his relationship as son, neither did he ever cease to be the brother of Jacob. But he did sell that double portion which belonged to the older son, because in the purpose of God, he had chosen Jacob to be the one through whom the Savior was to come. This possibility being transferred from Esau to Jacob was indeed a great spiritual loss, and Esau finds no place among the characters of faith who are recorded as God's nobility. But always remember that Esau, though he afterward attempted to get his birthright inheritance and sought it with tears, yet found no place of repentance (Heb. 12:17). That is, the mind of God toward Esau and Jacob was unchanged. But this sin for which there is no forgiveness does not deal with such characters as Esau, but a different class altogether.

I was a minister a few years before I ever attempted to speak on the subject of the Unpardonable Sin and who commits it, for the sermons that I had heard had so dissatisfied me that I promised my own heart, I would never attempt to prepare a sermon on this subject until I was confident I had the mind of God. Much prayer and deliberation has been given to this important message. I have had people come to me discouraged and heartbroken believing that they had committed the unpardonable sin. Some have gone so far as to attempt suicide, having been made to feel that there was no hope in this life or in the life to come. But I can truthfully say, friends, I have never met one person who claimed that he had committed the unpardonable sin, that I believe was really guilty of that act. But I do believe I have met many who have committed it and yet do not realize it. If I have any light on this subject, the people who are guilty of this heinous (hateful crime) never believe they are. Let us observe this from the Scripture, as we go on in this message.

A Sin Unto Death

You will notice that the Book is very clear, and it distinctly tells us there is a sin unto death. What is it? Is this committed by backsliders? No, God says he is married to the backslider, and God says to him, "Though your sins be as scarlet, I will make them white as snow; though they be red like crimson, I shall make them as wool." He invites the backslider to come back home. The 15th chapter of Luke's Gospel describes clearly the attitude and feeling of God's heart toward a back-slidden people. The lost piece of money and the lost sheep were sought for until found. The prodigal son is awakened and he comes to himself, and he says, "How many hired servants of my father have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! I will arise and go to my father." The lost money was useless until found; the sheep, though a real sheep was useless until brought home; and the prodigal son was a son dead in sin, until he returned and received the father's kiss of forgiveness, and the family fellowship. Oh, brethren, the Scriptures abound with expressions of the great heart of God for his backslidden children, and though their sins have been infernal, there is boundless forgiveness in the heart of a loving Father for his wondering, lost, sinful children when they return with true repentance.

But this sin for which there is no forgiveness—What is it? Who commits it? The only answer to this question that is satisfactory, is to be found in the Word of God. If you are not willing to accept God's Word, then you had just as well take your own human opinion as mine. For this vital subject is not a matter of human opinion, or of conjecture through man's reasoning, but is settled by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. From the Scriptures we find that those who commit this sin are never CLASSED WITH SINNERS. They are devoutly religious; in fact, I fail to find one passage in the Bible that would warrant any one saying that those who commit the unpardonable sin are among the non-professors. "For the Lord came to 'seek and to save that which is lost,' and whosoever calls upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It matters not where sin hath abounded if Christ is accepted by faith, Grace will overflow. God has made his Son to be ample in this provision that "where sin hath abounded, grace doth much more abound (Rom. 5:20). God hath not left on record that a certain type of sinner could be forgiven and another class could not be forgiven, but the divine arms of God's mercies are stretched out and his voice is given to the uttermost parts of the earth, "that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). Yet the Word of God tells us distinctly, "There is a sin unto death, I do not say that ye should pray for it." Now one must know what it is so that he will not waste his time praying for those who have committed it. For it would be useless to pray for one about whom God said, "Let alone." Brothers and sisters, be assured of this one fact, if you can find out who it is that has been given over to believe a lie that they might be damned then you can form a conclusion from the Scriptural teaching that will lead you into truth, so that you need never be misled upon this all important subject.

Not the Backslider

Shall we now come to the Scripture and see what we can find in the Word of God that will give light on who it is that we should not pray for? We have already found that it is not the unconverted man, who never made any profession of saving faith; nor is it the man who has been born again, and through some weakness of his flesh or some inherited moral depravity that caused him to commit sin and, through discouragement, fail; neglect his church, his prayers; and devotions. No, it is not this class of people, for God has forgiven us without limit, even unto seventy times seven. But who is this character of whom God says, "I do not say that ye should pray for it? What is the sin for which there can be no forgiveness? If you should attempt to waste your groans and devotions on such characters God would say, "Hush, I do not say that ye should pray for it."

In searching my Bible carefully, I find this character is theologically called an apostate. In the Bible the first apostate I find recorded is Cain, the first son of the fallen pair. You will notice in the fourth chapter of Genesis that Cain was the first man that we ever read of who came before Jehovah God to worship, and may I say here that all apostates who commit the sin for which there is no forgiveness are devoutly religious people. Cain was devoutly religious. He brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord (Gen. 4:3). His religion consisted in his ethical ideas. What he had labored to produce was what he brought before Jehovah. God rejected it. His brother Abel had nothing but himself to bring. He had fully grasped God's plan of redemption, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. No doubt he knew that God had killed the animals making their blood as a prefigure of the innocent dying to atone for the guilty, and God in type of that sacrifice made coats of skin with which Adam and Eve could cover themselves. This is a clear type of redemption, for the word "atonement" means "covering." So Abel by faith took that covering and offered the blood of the innocent lamb as a testimony to his faith. God in answer to his faith, bore witness to his spirit of his divine acceptance and gave him the first honor on the roll of nobility that is displayed in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

A Religious Man

But to Cain, after he failed, God gave a second invitation to come to the Lord's appointed way. God said to him, "Cain, why art thou wroth? Why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou doest not well, there is a sin offering crouched at thy door, and unto thee shall be his desire and thou shalt rule over him" (Gen. 4:6, 7). This shows clearly that God gave to Cain the revelation of light and the knowledge of his salvation prepare by faith. But, alas! Cain rejected it. Yet, he never ceased to be a religious man. Multiplied thousands of people have come to the light, where God has revealed his Son as the only plan and hope of redemption, and they deliberately, maliciously reject the way of truth. When a man rejects the way of truth, revealed by God himself, he is then open to believe the Devil's lie. Once making his deliberate choice, he is given over to believe that lie and becoming established in that lie, there is no avenue for truth to penetrate him, so God says, "I do not say that ye should pray for it." When man has rejected God's plan of Redemption, after having come to the knowledge of the truth, and has under the full blaze of God's revelation, because of advantage from the human view-point, turned away from the revelation of God's plan, he then becomes a child of the wicked one (John 3:12). He is given over, just as Cain, whom God described as being of that wicked one, and he only becomes such when he has made his final choice against God's divinely revealed plan of redemption.

Saul an Apostate

May we turn in our Bibles to King Saul, the first king Israel ever had. God chose Saul to be Israel's king, and David describes him as the anointed of the Lord, calling him the Lord's anointed many times. Saul becomes a Prophet (1 Sam. 10:6) "and the Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee and thou shalt prophesy with them and shall be turned into another man." You will find in verse 9 that "God gave him another heart" and in verse 10 you will find, "and the Spirit of God came mightily upon him and he prophesied among them." Now brethren, notice carefully the light that Saul had—the Presence of God with him, which gave him every advantage of divine fellowship, and spiritual communication. But there is one thing I want to mention. Saul was careless in his appreciation of the sacredness of the offering that God had enjoined. We find him out of place in offering the sacrifice (1 Sam. 13:8-14) which was forbidden to anyone except the priest. His next failure we find in 1 Samuel 15:11—"There he is turned back from following." In verse 23 we read, "Because thou rejected the Word of the Lord." In verse 35 "and the Lord repented that he had made Saul king over Israel." Further in 1 Samuel 28:16 we read, "The Lord has departed from thee and has become thine enemy." What an awful picture—not of a backslider, but of one who, like Cain, rejected God's Divine plan and introduced his own practice for sacred worship.

Life is Not to Find Out

By H. D. Fry

Satan is a Minister of Light

Second Corinthians 11:14 reads, "And no marvel, for satan himself is transformed into an angel of light." Disastrous human results have often unveiled the enemy of our souls as a light, a religion, a hope. Always some truth is his covering, and he works preeminently as a spirit of religion, which attracting and blinding many, leads them to their destruction.

In our story the heroine relates that in her trance, "someone was near me," and that she listened to "someone speak to me in thoughts." There is no indication that this strange presence which spoke psychically was God, or Christ the Son. But rather that Opposite One is identified, in that God never condones immorality or injustice—never tells one that "life is to find out." God says, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "He that hath the Son hath life," John tells us. Who is this some one? Well, there was some one in Eden with Adam and Eve, but it was not God. There was some one who spoke there, and has been luring, tempting, denying, lying to men and women ever since. That some one is not a life giver but the death-bringer; not a spiritual Shepherd, but only a religious counselor. Satan is that someone, and his advice is false. He is called a light when the author tells us, "There was a light that led on." Satan is a light, but not THE LIGHT. And if men are not following closely THE LIGHT, a false counterfeit, spurious, fallen luminary will lead them.

Beware the indefinite. For does not Paul say, "If any man preach any other gospel unto you—let him be accursed?" We are to try the spirits to see if they be of God. The indefinite, the compromising, the suavely broad should be avoided. With all reverence we may speak of someone standing behind the shadows bearing all our bitter load, and of someone guiding us home; but Satan transforms himself into a minister of light and becomes someone may be Satan. And to this world, Satan is some—the words of the song, "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." Anyone can sing it; for it may mean anything. I know where I am going. It is not on the map, but in the Book of God's Word the directions are given so plainly that a child need not go astray. Somewhere may be anywhere: someone may be satan. And to this world, satan is someone, the one, the god of this world.

And this satanic light in our story gives us false directions and a false peace. The character undergoing those terrible trials said that one "must plunge into the dark to see light." Has that been your experience? We ask, Why must one experience great sorrow to find life? Why must the shadows of sin, and even the shadows of the valley come over us before we may see light? Who says that in sowing our wild oats we then reap truth and purity? Does light abide in darkness? But I do agree with this idea, that a man must inquire of the medium and enter that kingdom of darkness before he sees a light—Satan. I do say that a light will guide that one who walks in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth. We believe that such a theory is a malicious and cunning device to blind folks with a false peace.

Listen to this: "There was a light that led on, men knew it, recognized it, else utter despair would bring their extinction." Satan would extinguish men, and some of Satan's isms teach annihilation. But man's soul is eternal, either unto blessedness or unto punishment. Men recognize their master, a light but to their condemnation; they will not know the Light of the world.

Mr. Pelley Teaches Spiritism

Why is a trance, a strange psychic convulsion, necessary for a renewal of moral and physical courage? Why must one draw the blinds by day, and sit in darkness by night to listen to the speech of this "someone," unless the author is teaching the reality of the spiritualistic hallucination? Do we not see Satan's counterfeit in the picture of this young mother overcome by grief and heart-break exposing herself to this "someone?" Oh, to be alone with God! To have sweet fellowship with his Son! To commune with the Most High through the Holy Spirit! But to be alone with oneself, apart from Christ, looking for light—look out! Beware looking in darkness for light, lest you find it! How much this description tallies with other experiences pictured by Lodge, Doyle, and others. It is described as, "a warm, beautiful glow, a rich, mellow, voice, a lovely glow that 'gently floated off,' lifted and disappeared."

The Christian's communion with the Unseen is real, actual, practical, yet heavenly—God has written all about it—there is no darkness in him, nor about him—his Presence cannot be duplicated by Satan. Though Satan tries in spiritism to counterfeit God's presence, we are not ignorant of his devices.

Do the Dead Visit Us?

Our writer has the dying heroine say to a messenger to her daughter, "Tell Evvy I'll do what I can to be near her, to watch over her, to help her with her music." We might overlook the desire of the mother if the author did not conclude his chronicle with, "I knew Ellen Thatcher was as much an auditor in that moment as any who filled those brown pews."

Mr. Pelley may believe that the spirits of the dead wander about through the earth, but the Christian knows better. How about your saved loved ones? In the first place they go to be with Christ, which is far better than the best of joys and victories here. Who would want to leave, or even think of leaving that abode? Where Jesus is, is home to me. Secondly, they enter into rest, their days of sorrow and toil and heartache are over; and to come back to witness such in this life is absurd.

Do the spirits of the unbelieving dead visit our life? Their bodies are in the graves and their souls in hades, awaiting the resurrection and judgment of the wicked. They are not free, because of an impassable gulf, to flit about as birds in search of feeding places. Then, what is the purpose of any statement that is so plainly false and spiritualistic? Obvious enough! If folks may be deluded into thinking their dead relatives are around them, some will desire communication with them, and will seek those places and mediums who profess to give us that communication. As if such characters had power over the dead! As if the witch of Endor possessed the spirit of Samuel, one of God's noblemen! Impossible! When you in the darkened room ask for a loved one, believer or unbeliever, who is it that answers in a voice resembling the voice of that desired one? Demons. The demons need more business—hence these doctrines of demons spread before the public. These fallen spirits explain the writing on the folded slate, the haunted house of the unbeliever, the voice from darkness. They that walk in the Spirit of Christ need fear none of these.

One feels that he might write volumes on this subject. This age will welcome the false ideas suggested in the story, and such stories will probably increase in number and in spiritist character, but to the child of God, who sober-mindedly seeks the truth of God's word, come floods of truth that sweep away the enemy of our soul. God has spoken and fatalism attracts us not. God has spoken, and the imps that peep and mutter from darkness betray themselves. God does not leave us "to find out" life, but has given us the Gift of Life, and the Holy Spirit to guide us in this pilgrimage part of it. Christ speaks, "Follow me," and though the world, the flesh and the devil make rough the way, we see the footprints of the Son of God ahead. The Way is not unknown, not one "to find out."

May I conclude with these two thoughts? We pass no judgment upon the tragic heroine in the story, but will draw from one of her last statements our testimony. In dying she seems to call back from seeing the next life, "The light is worth the darkness every mile." Providing that that light is the Savior's glory, well said. Let Paul speak to our happy hearts, "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us." Truly we shall be satisfied when we awake in his likeness. When the sorrows and sins of earth are blotted out and shall be no more, then shall our praise be perfectly given to the Lamb who washed us from our sins in his own blood, who guarded us from stumbling, and who has presented us with exceeding joy before the presence of his glory.

Then shall one say with the woman of the story, "I conquered?" No indeed! I am not the master of my ship, the captain of my soul. Christ is the Captain of my soul, my Pilot, and his destiny is mine. Thank God! To conquer and control ourselves is indeed virtuous, but to let Christ conquer and control is saving. He said, "Apart from me ye can do nothing." You and I will never climb through difficulties to heaven's rest to say with both relief and pride, "I conquered," but rather will the Christian exclaim, "We are more than conquerors through Christ who loved us—worthy is the Lamb!"

The Two Natures

By R. I. Humbert

"The flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh" (Gal. 5:17). "Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh" (Gal. 5:16).

We see in these verses that a Christian has a real battle going on in his heart; a battle of right against wrong; a battle of the flesh against the Spirit. But there is a promise of victory—to walk in the Spirit is to overcome the flesh. But why this conflict? Only one answer—a Christian has two natures and these natures are at enmity to one another. The carnal mind is enmity against God (Rom. 8:7). "The natural man deceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14).

Thus we see that the man who is not born again, not only cannot understand the ways of God but he is violently opposed and at enmity with him. No self reformation can help him. That which is born of the flesh is flesh (John 3:6) and remains such regardless of his morality and good works. But that which is born of the Spirit's spirit. Thus to get the divine nature and have the Holy Spirit dwelling in our bodies, we must be born again.

Every person is ruled either by God or Satan. It is either God that worketh in you (Phil. 2:13), or it is the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience (Eph. 2:2). It is up to each individual to choose the master of his life and he that will mortify the deeds of the body through the Spirit shall live (Rom. 8:13).

They that are in Adam are living in a state of enmity to God and cannot understand his ways but when a man turns to Christ and is born again he becomes a new creature (II Cor. 5:17) and receives the divine nature and the Holy Spirit comes and dwells in his body (I Cor. 6:19). But the old nature is not dead, it is very much alive and active. Thus the Christian has two natures and the laws of these two natures are at a constant struggle for supremacy in his life (Rom. 7:23).

The Christian must decide which nature shall dominate in his life—he must feed the one and starve the other, he cannot serve two masters.

The things of the world are formed with the express purpose of appealing to the old nature but a Christian is to love not the world (I John 2:15), and if a church member does love the world the love of the Father is not in him. However, it is possible for a person to have the new nature and yet be a worldly Christian, this is a terrible condition of life.

Thus the first great question is, Am I truly born again? And the second is, How can I put off the old man and put on the new man in Christ Jesus (Eph. 4:22, 24), and do this in actual experience?

Our daily walk is to be in the Spirit so we will not fulfill the lust of the flesh (Gal. 5:16). When we enter this world as a new born babe the first desire is for milk and later we eat meat. So with the new birth, the first thing we should desire is the sincere milk of the Word that we may grow thereby (I Pet. 2:2), and later the strong meat (Heb. 5:14).

How can I grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and be fruitful unto every good work? Just one answer—Feed the new nature. The daily newspaper and the general run of magazines contain food for the old nature, and these matters have such a predominance in even Christian homes that we are led to ask the question, Is there no food for the new man? Yes, thank God, there are several good magazines that are put out by men of God. I have one especially in mind that I wish would enter many thousands of homes and replace the worldly magazines of our day. The title of this magazine is "The Christ Life" and is edited by Howard Banks. I sincerely wish that every reader of this article would send $1.00 at once to the Christ Life magazine, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Cedar and Canal St., N. S.

But some will say that the Bible and such magazines and papers as the Christ Life and Sunday School Times are not interesting to them. What a sad condition—The daily and kindred papers are readily devoured and the old man is "fed up" daily on these things of the world and the new nature has become so weak that it can hardly make its presence known. But if the reader be a sincere Christian and finds himself in such a state he will instantly discard the literature of the old man and read such magazines as the "Christ Life" even though it first it may not be so interesting. As he thus feeds his new nature and beholds with open face as in a glass the glory of the Lord he is changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

THE COST OF CRIME

Like the cost of war, the cost of crime is hard to estimate. However, Mr. Clark O. Prentiss of the National Crime Commission has summed up the more obvious losses due to crime and is authority for the following figures. Losses through failure, such as fraudulent securities ($500,000,000), embezzlements ($150,000,000), forgeries ($100,000,000), bad checks ($120,000,000) and fraudulent bankruptcies ($400,000,000); total $1,270,000,000. Property losses through burglaries and robberies amount to almost as much. That is, transportation thefts ($500,000,000), thefts from warehouses ($525,000,000), thefts from mails ($10,000,000), and the value of 12,500 murdered persons ($125,000,000) amount to $1,160,000,000. The cost of law enforcement and all related legal expenditures is put at $4,000,000,000. The waste of crime is summarized by Mr. Prentiss under six heads. The earning capacity of 2,000,000 criminals at $1,500 per year amounts to $3,000,000,000. Some 500,000 police at $1,500 per year cost $750,000,000. Commercialized vice involves a waste of $628,000,000 per year. The drug traffic and the liquor traffic are each set down as resulting in a waste of $1,000,000,000 yearly. The value of 12,500 victims of liquor traffic is $125,000,000. The grand total of all of these sums is $12,933,000,000. This is certainly a tremendous sum, but probably underestimates rather than overstates the actual situation. Prentiss thinks that his list has barely scratched the surface as regards the cost of crime. If this is true, and it is at least approximately true, the importance of training up a law-abiding citizenry is apparent. It would be eminently worth while if no moral and spiritual values were at stake.—The Gospel Messenger.

THE MORMONS GO IN FOR SHEEP

Down in the Missouri Ozarks members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have purchased 12,000 acres of land. There with the town of Independence, Missouri, as headquarters, they have started a large-scale sheep-raising business. The sheep come direct from Mormon-owned herds in the state of Oregon. The present 12,000-acre project is the beginning of an effort to introduce sheep-raising as a major industry in south Missouri.—Christian Herald.

PLEASURE-RIDING BRINGS GRIEF

A striking illustration of the folly of the prevalent feeling that one has a right to enjoy what a majority of people are enjoying, whether he can afford it or not, is furnished by the case of a young man charged with embezzling $3,200 of the funds of the bank of which he was an employee. His salary was $70 a month. He says that he never gambled or drank, but that he must have spent hundreds of dollars a month renting machines in which to take riding the girl to whom he was engaged. They liked to ride around and he had to provide a way to do it. Keeping up with the procession regardless of cost may lead to as serious consequences as gambling or drinking.—The Presbyterian Advance.

ENGLAND VS. DRY UNITED STATES

According to figures compiled by the Federal Department of Commerce at Washington, on the first day of January dry United States had 24,629,921 motor vehicles of the 32,028,584 motor vehicles in the world. Dry United States had 76.9 per cent of the world's supply of automobiles. In this country there is a passenger car for every 5-6 persons while the world average is one car for every 70 persons.

How does United States and wet England compare in the number of automobile traffic fatalities? England has 1,128,200 automobiles as against the United States 24,629,921. Last year's traffic fatalities in wet England numbered one to every 118 automobiles as compared with one to every 1,121 automobiles in dry America. Had fatalities in the United States been as numerous comparatively as in England, there would have been a death total here of 209,674 instead of 21,160.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE

We note in a morning paper that a dry agent was shot and possibly mortally wounded in a raid on an "alleged" bootlegging place. The police were searching for a well-known bootlegger whom they knew to be the assailant. The bootlegger had made his escape in an automobile. The dry raider was taken to the hospital. Although it occurred in the same State in which the paper is published, the story is given in a matter-of-fact way in less than one hundred words, and is on an inside page among foreign items and advertisements and matters of minor interest. Suppose the dry agent had shot and mortally wounded the "alleged" bootlegger. Think you the story would have been reduced to one hundred words and been partly hidden among the fill-up stuff on an inside page? More likely it would have been front-page stuff under a "streamer," with a sob account of the poor victim's wife and children, and an undercurrent of doubt as to the man's connection with anything questionable. At any rate, that has been the way of the wet press, and this item is in keeping with general practice.—Religious Telescope.

HEROES OF PEACE

Men who fall in battle are held up to the admiring gaze of the world as heroes who hazarded their lives to the death for their countries, without particular regard to whether their countries were right or wrong. On the other hand, men giving their lives in the service of humanity are frequently allowed to pass unnoted. These men are entitled to the highest honor, and for this reason this word of praise is given to Dr. Paul A. Lewis, a worker of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, who recently lost his life in a study of yellow fever in Bahia, Brazil. He was a martyr to the attempt to find a more efficient way of preventing the dread disease. This same man helped fight the infantile paralysis epidemic in New York in 1916, and in 1925 he was engaged in a campaign with other distinguished men against tuberculosis. Men who hazard their lives to save life are entitled to higher honors than those engaged in the destruction of life.—The Presbyterian Advance.

MISSIONARY FRUITAGE IN JAPAN

After sixty years of Christian missionary effort, Japan shows a total of 154,000 Protestant members, and about the same number more when we include adherents of the Greek and Roman communions. This is only a Volstead percentage of the empire's population: one-half of one per cent.

The "Japanese Advertiser," however, contends that these figures do not adequately represent the influence of Christianity in the country; and attributes to Christian influence the improved status of women and the new consciousness of the dignity of service to the weak. The distinctive feature of the Japan missionary enterprise is the vigor of the native churches, which have there taken over their own control to a greater extent than in any other mission field.—The Living Church.

"There must be something of a musician in my heart before I can love music; something of an artist in me before I can appreciate and love art; and something of God in me before I can be the friend of God."—W. W. Weeks, D.D.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

(Keep with your Bible)

Since prayer constitutes so large a part of our devotional life, the suggestions for this week center around the thought of prayer, particularly as found in the eighteenth chapter of Luke.

MONDAY

A Duty—Luke 18:1. A duty performed only as a duty loses much of its rightful reward. Prayer is one of the highest privileges known to man, but it is nevertheless a duty: men OUGHT ALWAYS to pray. The disciples came to Jesus, saying: "Lord, teach us to pray" (read Luke 11:1-13), and he taught them the "Lord's Prayer." Men still need to be taught to pray, not merely how to pray. Lord, teach us to pray!

TUESDAY

The Unjust Judge—Luke 18:2-8. Some think this parable teaches persistency in prayer; we believe in persistent prayer, but the emphasis here is placed rather on the fact that our God is no unjust judge, who must be importuned: he is ever ready to hear the cry of his children, and to give them aid. Increase our faith, O Lord, and may the day never come when such faith shall not be found on the earth!

WEDNESDAY

Humility—Luke 18:9-14. The Pharisee had no thought of communion with God; it was rather a display of his own self-righteousness, formal. Such formal righteousness is of no avail, Jesus taught, showing that a humble confession of unworthiness, such as the Publican's, was the surest way to gain the ear of God. He came to make an offering for sin, and when we acknowledge our need of that offering, he cannot fail to hear. God be merciful to ME a sinner!

THURSDAY

As a Little Child—Luke 18:15-17. Not even the little children were beneath the notice of our God! And we must come into his presence even as trusting children go to a kind father, in faith believing. This does not discount trying to understand the truths he teaches, but it does forbid doubting God's word because we cannot understand it. May we all believe thy word, and follow wherever thou shalt lead, with child-like faith and purity.

FRIDAY

Good, or God?—Luke 18:18-30. The dialogue between Jesus and the rich young ruler, I believe, shows Christ's unwillingness to be worshipped other than as the Son of God. Those who would commune with him must first acknowledge his worth-ship, his Deity; then they must let nothing come between him and them. Jesus did not object to the fact that the young ruler was rich, for his riches could have been a source of blessing to many. He knew that riches stood between the young ruler and his God. There are many things other than riches that stand between God and man today: may we count all things as refuse, if only we may know and commune with HIM.

SATURDAY

An Understanding Heart—Luke 18:31-34. It is hard to understand how the disciples could have failed to understand such plain words; perhaps their preconceived ideas stood in the way. May our hearts ever be open to thy teaching, and may no notions of our own prevent us from hearing and understanding thy voice. Give us an understanding heart!

SUNDAY

Definite—Luke 18:35-43. The blind man called on Jesus for mercy, but failed to state what he wanted. His cry reached the ear of Jesus, but before he healed him he asked the man just what it was he wanted. When he made known his particular need, his prayer was at once granted. Lord, teach us to pray, definitely, persistently, always, humbly, as little children, in faith believing. Amen.—T. C. L.

The Bible in Education

But there is another and still deeper reason why we are to consider the Bible to be the outcome of universal history, the product of universal Providence. No formal narrative of historic events in the various Biblical eras could begin to give an account of the forces and influences which have gone to the making of the Bible. In its innermost essence the Bible is the response of the human spirit to the Spirit of God. While, in its immediate creation and publication, it is the outcome of that unexampled Hebraic sensitiveness to spiritual impressions, which culminates in the world's supreme Teacher, yet, all the way along, the fact runs more deeply and spreads more widely than this exclusive reference to Israel would imply. The Bible represents the essential response of the human spirit to God as it represents the universal message of God to the spirit of man. There is throughout Scripture the deep undertone of universal humanity which is so much more than national consciousness or individual insight. That which is implied but not spoken, taken for granted but not formally enforced in Scripture, are those universal fundamental convictions which are not the exclusive property of Hebrew or Christian but belong to man, as such, made in the image of God. Without such a context and inwrought structure of universal principles, the Bible would be unintelligible. Therefore, the Hebrew priest, prophet, and sage, the Christian apostle and teacher, even the Lord Jesus himself, each in his own order, spoke both for and to universal man taking his stand firmly upon elementary truths acknowledged by all normally constituted men. Such being the case, by every implication of its nature and constitution the Bible is set in the midst of universal history which is its context, essential to the meaning of the text. The Bible cannot be studied apart from history.

Matthew Arnold's fine tribute to the Bible must have a place here. "To the Bible men will return because they cannot do without it; because happiness is our end and aim, and happiness belongs to righteousness, and righteousness is revealed in the Bible. For this simple reason man will return to the Bible just as a man who tried to give up food thinking it was a vain thing and he could do without it, would return to food; or a man who tried to give up sleep, thinking it was a vain thing and he could do without it, would return to sleep."

Time fails to introduce many others who belong to the goodly fellowship of the truly educated, whose tribute to the Christian Scriptures is hearty and large.

Why is it that of our modern education, Woodrow Wilson dared say: "You know that with all our instructing we instruct nobody." Or, President Nielson of Smith College: "We have no educational science, but several educational superstitions." If "the crowning achievement of the educator is the unification of personality," why not have our students include study into the secret of such unification in the heroes of Hebrew thought and life? What of the crowning personality? Let Judge Thomas M. Cooley, late Professor of American History and Constitutional Law in the University of Michigan answer: "I regard Jesus of Nazareth as having done more to advance civilization and to influence beneficially the history of the world than has any other historical character. The Bible I have been accustomed to look upon not as one book but as many. The teachings of Jesus and his disciples, as given in the New Testament, I think constitute a book more important to the world and more influential in reforming and improving the conditions of mankind than any other."

Whittier may fittingly close this anthology.

We search the world for truth.
We call the good, the pure, the beautiful,
From graven stone and written scroll;
From all old flower fields of the soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest
To find, that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read.

The Prohibition Ladder

(Editor's Note: The material in THE PROHIBITION LADDER is reprinted on this page for the benefit of the Citizenship Superintendents of the various schools of the brotherhood.)

The prohibition movement seems inevitably ever to have been open to the most dastardly and libelous misrepresentation. The climax of untruth, however, has been reached in the multiform and multiplied subtle suggestion that prohibition was "put over."

Any such great moral movement affecting as it does every individual in a score of ways cannot hope to succeed unless it has been deliberately, fairly and honestly won.

The adoption of prohibition nationally was the inevitable result of more than one hundred years of discussing, temporizing and experimenting with the liquor traffic and trying out every method proposed either by its friends or foes. Prohibition—local, state and national—came finally as the only alternative.

The following chronological outline shows just how fast, how slow and how long—prohibition has been developing as the ideal purpose of the Nation in best meeting the evils of intoxicating liquor.

Is the Prohibition Policy a New One?

1645—Connecticut prohibited selling liquor to Indians.

1789—Farmers of Litchfield County, Connecticut, organized to discourage use of spirituous liquor.

1791—First Federal Internal Revenue Liquor Law passed.

1793-4—Pennsylvania Whiskey Distillers rebelled against paying the tax. Congress appropriated $1,500,000 to enforce the law. Washington sent 2000 soldiers to Pennsylvania for that purpose.

1802—Federal Internal Revenue Liquor Law—re-enacted as a war measure.

1817—The Revenue law of 1813 repealed.

1826—January—The great Lyman Beecher declared that the "National remedy for intemperance" was "the banishment of ardent spirits from the list of lawful articles of commerce, etc."

1826—February 13th, American Temperance Society organized at Boston, followed by many other organizations springing up in widely separated parts of the country.

1832—Dr. Francis Wayland, President of Brown University, Rhode Island, declared for Prohibition, "I think the prohibition of the liquor traffic a fit subject for legislative enactment, and I believe the most happy results would follow such prohibition."

1833—First National Temperance Convention—Philadelphia.

1834—Congress prohibits introduction or sale of spirituous liquor and wine in the Indian country.

1836—Second National Temperance Convention—Saratoga, New York.

1838—Tennessee repeals license laws and prohibits retail of liquors.

1840—The Washingtonian movement swept over the country; started by a drinking club of six members in Baltimore. It is estimated 150,000 men signed the pledge.

1842—Sons of Temperance organized. This is the oldest National Total Abstinence organization in America. It is still an active force.

1844—Grand Division Sons of Temperance of Connecticut organized.

1845—The Templars of Honor and Temperance organized.

1847—Chief Justice Taney of the United States Supreme Court, in rendering a decision stated he saw nothing in the Federal Constitution that would prevent prohibiting the liquor traffic.

1851—The Independent Order of Good Templars organized.

1851—Maine adopted prohibition!

1852—Connecticut adopted prohibition. Repealed in 1872.

1852—Abraham Lincoln joined the Sons of Temperance. Later he campaigned for state prohibition in Illinois.

1851-1855—Sixteen of the thirty-one states had adopted State wide prohibition by legislative enactment.

1857—Sons of Temperance of New York proposed the first state Constitutional Prohibition Amendment.

1860-1870—Prohibition wave receded, leaving only a few dry states.

1861—New York Legislature in both branches voted to submit a state-wide Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment.

1862—New York Senate voted second time, favorably on submitting prohibitory Constitutional Amendment.

1862—Federal Internal Revenue Liquor law passed. Fixed at DEALERS' REQUEST ONE-HALF OF ONE PER CENT. ALCOHOLIC CONTENT, AS A BASIS FOR TAXATION.

1865—Connecticut Temperance Union organized with Governor William A. Buckingham as President.

1865—National Temperance Society organized at Saratoga Springs with William Earl Dodge, president.

1867—United States Brewers assembled in Chicago, June 5th, declare "that they will sustain no candidate of whatever party, in any election, who is in any way disposed toward the total abstinence cause."

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for August 18)

The Return from Captivity

Scripture Lesson—Jer. 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-11; Psa. 126:1-6.

Printed Text—Ezra 1:1-6; Psa. 126:1-6.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 124.

Golden Text—Jehovah hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Psa. 126:3.

The Policy of Cyrus

The Political Policy of Cyrus was exactly the opposite of that of Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. Their plan had been to deport the leading people of the nations they had conquered away from their homes, where they might have been conspirators against their captors, into the Babylonian Empire, where they could be absorbed into that nation, or at least be rendered harmless. Cyrus, under changed conditions and with wider political experience, reversed all this. Not only Jews, but many other peoples who had been forced to settle on foreign soil, were permitted to return to their own countries, taking their gods with them. "I assembled all those nations, and I caused them to go back to their native countries," writes Cyrus on his cylinder, now in the British Museum. The Jews came under this general permission.

The Return

"If we may trust later traditions, the setting out of the 'Captivity' for Palestine was joyous in the extreme. (Read Psalm 126.) An escort of one thousand cavalry accompanied them for protection against the desert Arabs, then, as now, given to plunder, and they started to the music of tabrets and flutes (Esdra 5:2)." The few rich among them indulged in the luxury of horses or of mules. The aged, the children and the delicate women rode on camels. Ten leaders, under Zerubabel and Jeshua, twelve in all, perhaps in touching allusion to the original number of the tribes, marshaled the host in as many divisions. Even the rank and file were descended from the flower of the nation. "The burst of joy was such as has no parallel in the sacred volume; it is, indeed, the Revival, the Second Birth, the Second Exodus of the nation."

The 126th Psalm

Sowing in tears and reaping in joy. "They that sow in tears" is not only Oriental imagery, but literal fact. "Many things might conspire to send the Eastern husbandman to his field in tears. Sometimes the supply of grain is so scanty that to use it for sowing is almost to take the bread out of the children's mouths. Often there is very much to make the Eastern farmers' seed-time a time of sorrow and weariness and danger. He might have to go six or seven miles from his village to his field, and thus so much nearer the desert border, from which a robber band could easily make him their prey, or take his life, and carry off the seed on which the life of his household depended."

The whole of our earthly life is a sowing time, often at times a sowing in tears. But it is a sowing time for eternal life in heaven, a discipline to prepare for immortality.

Shall reap in joy. The valleys stand thick with grain. "There are no tears now, but only the shouting and the happy faces of the reapers and the joy of the harvest home."

The sowing in tears ever precedes the reaping in joy. This is true of education, of our school days, before we can reap the glories of literature, the hard practice and long study before one can produce and perfectly enjoy the most heavenly music; the struggle of life before success can be won.

Lessons Learned from the Exile

It was impossible for the Jews to return and the kingdom to be restored till they had renounced the sins which brought them into captivity, and had learned the lessons the exile was intended to teach. (1) The power and charm of idolatry were destroyed. The Jews were never led into idolatry again. (2) They were taught to set a new value on spiritual religion filling all the forms of worship. (3) They were also taught, by their absence, the value and necessity of religious institutions, of the means of worship, of the Sabbath day. (4) It led to renewed study of the sacred Scriptures. The exile was the period in which the guardianship, transcription and study of the written Scriptures became the special care of a distinct class, afterwards famous as the great order of the Scribes. It led, also, to the establishment of the synagogue for social worship and reading of the Scriptures, with its accompanying schools. To this period and that of the return belongs the authorship of some of the noblest and highest religious literature. (5) The exile brought together the representatives of the divided kingdom, and made one nation where there had been two, welding the twelve tribes together like iron in a furnace. (6) Contact with the great world extended the views and enlarged the sympathies of the nation. They came in contact with new ideas, a new literature, a new language. They could not live so exclusively as in Palestine, but each individual met the individuals of other nations. (7) This period was one of sifting the people for the renovation of the nation.

Advantages of this Method of Return

1. Since it was entirely voluntary, it became a method of sifting out the best men for the purpose. Nebuchadnezzar had sifted the nation when he carried to Babylon the most vigorous and valorous men, whom it would have been dangerous to leave behind. Now comes a second sifting; for naturally the most religious, zealous, patriotic and vigorous persons would choose to go.

2. A great many of the best and strongest remained in Babylon for various reasons. But these were made better by the action of the volunteers, by giving largely to aid them, by a new interest in their native land, by a revived faith in the goodness and love of the God of their fathers.

3. "The captivity served as a missionary scheme to spread the knowledge of God over the world." It was an aid in preparing the world for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and for the spread of the gospel by the apostles.—Taken from Illustrated Quarterly.

Golden Text Illustrated—Psalm 126:3

See, here is the lark caught in the net—its foot is tangled in the cord. Twist and struggle and flutter as it may, it cannot rise; its very efforts only makes it more hopelessly fixed. There far above it stretches the fair blue heaven, and it spreads its wings and longs to soar. From the grove there is the music of the happy birds that delight in their freedom; but it can only utter a dreary note of distress. Now there comes one who sees it and with tender pity hastens to its rescue. He folds the bird gently within his hand, and then with skillful fingers disentangles and untwists the net and the poor captive is loosed from the snare. "Foolish bird," said he, "thou shouldst be more careful." And then he opens his hand. At once it flies far into the heavens, and now, sure of its safety, it sings as it soars, as if its passionate gladness and gratitude can find no sufficient outlet.

How often is it so with us! We, too, are caught in the snare of the fowler—little things that tie and hold us to the earth. The desires go out after God; but we linger far below. We hear the joy of others who dwell in the light of his countenance; but we are threatened with evil and filled with fear. Some foolish over-eagerness, some depression of mind or body, some neglect, some unwatchfulness, some illwind has caught us and holds us down. O, blessed be that gracious Lord, whose quick eye seeth our need; who stoopeth so low to loose us from the snare; whose tender patience and ready skill do set us free once more, so that we soar and sing again far up in the light at heaven's very gate. "He restoreth my soul!" "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken and we are escaped." Ps. 124:7.—Mark Gay Pearce.

THRILLS

Getting a thrill is a very popular expression today—always looking for something exciting. Did you ever stop to think of the thrills a Christian life affords? There are the thrills of Christian friendship, freedom, hope, service and many others. There is no greater, truer friend than Jesus. We find the truest human friends among our Christian associates. There is no greater freedom than that which Christianity affords. Just to know that a great burden has been lifted and paid, is the greatest satisfaction. Then the hope there is for all Christians, the expectation of greater and better things, keeps us striving in all our undertakings, toward the goal which we hope to obtain. Service—what joy there is in service, knowing we are working for the Master! The greatest glory will be found in service. The thrill of service can be experienced nowhere, better than in our Christian Endeavor Society. Filling your office to the best of your ability, helping the leader, though your part may be small, writing an article for your paper, telling someone the salvation story, winning a new Christian Endeavor member, all afford a thrill which you may not have realized, nor yet appreciated, but once experienced, you will never regret. —Lulu Ginglesberger in "The Spirit of Christian Endeavor," the Cambria County Uniteds' Bulletin.

ORDERED OVER

It is said that one day during President Roosevelt's administration the present Secretary of State, who was then plain Mr. Stimson, was indulging in horseback riding in Rock Creek Park, Washington. Suddenly he saw on the other side of the creek, also mounted, the President and Secretary of War Root. "Come on over," Root called. The rains had swollen the creek to a raging torrent, at which Mr. Stimson looked with some dismay. Then Root straightened up in his saddle and called fiercely: "Sergeant Stimson!"—Mr. Stimson was indeed sergeant in a National Guard cavalry troop—"the President of the United States through the Secretary of War, orders you to report immediately." Thereupon Mr. Stimson at once sent his horse into the creek and managed to struggle across it and stop in front of Roosevelt. Said the President, "I didn't think you would be so foolish, but I'm delighted."

It would be a good thing for us if, whenever we find ourselves confronting any difficulty which we ought to surmount, we realized that our Commander is on the other side bidding us to come over to him. No torrent, under such circumstances, would prove any hindrance to a true spirit.—A. R. Wells in C. E. World.

COME AND WORSHIP

When a man can willingly forego even the outward services of religion, and stay away from the House of God, and let the season of devotion and communion pass by without a thought of regret, his faith and love must be at low ebb, if indeed they have not altogether dried up and blown away. A living plant seeks water; a living soul longs for the refreshment of the sanctuary.—Henry van Dyke.

Black Treasure

The Earliest Prohibition Ruler in the World

Basil Mathews has made a name for himself by his writings on Africa, and "Black Treasure," his book, while not large in size, carries a thrilling and gripping message. It is thoroughly up to date in its missionary presentation, full of incidents and of heart interest. The following is a story that has timely value, showing, as it does, that even black chiefs can find no way of dealing with the liquor evil in Africa except by absolute and stern prohibition. Mr. Mathews writes:

"A villainous kind of brandy called 'cape smoke,' blended of grape-spirit and tobacco-juice, was made in South Africa by white men. It was not only sold to the Africans with horrible effects, but white farmers even paid wages in it, and defended themselves by saying, 'It helps to kill the natives off and keep their numbers down.' This drink drove men mad. It was a disgusting, disgraceful form of exploitation and murder—more detestable in some ways than slavery, because it was cloaked in hypocrisy and pretence. Khama made up his mind to fight the poison. He knew it was to be the greatest fight of his life, for on all sides of Africa the white man had made enormous fortunes by trading spirits with Africans.

"White men began to bring this brandy into Khama's country. Khama told them one by one that he would not have it sold to his people nor given to his brother. They took little notice. So at the New Year (1873) he called the white men all together, twenty-one of them, and said: "I have made a law that no man shall bring brandy into this country or sell it in this town. All brandy found will be destroyed. I shall fine its owner and I shall expel him from my country."

"But," said one, 'when I want to have a drink, may I not do so?'

"I do not want to interfere with your personal habits," he replied, 'but when you let my people have it, I shall punish you.'

"That very week-end several of the white traders got wildly drunk. They started fighting one another. Khama strode down to the place. The men lay senseless on the floor, their shirts stained with blood. Khama turned for counsel to the home of his friend, the white man whom he trusted, Mr. Hepburn, the missionary. Mr. Hepburn was ill in bed with fever, but he rose to go down to see for himself. When he got there, he felt sick with very shame and fury that his own white brother men should make worse than beasts of themselves.

"I will clear them out of my land," said Khama.

"He called the traders together on the Monday in his kgotla (the chief's enclosure). When the white men were before him, Khama spoke to them. These are the words written down that day by Mr. Hepburn, who heard them:

"You think you can despise my laws because I am a black man. Well, I am black, but I am chief of my own country . . . and I shall maintain the laws you insult and despise.' Then he named the white men one by one and gave his sentence:

"You and you and you and you, take everything you have, strip the corrugated iron off the roofs, gather all your possessions, and go. More, if there is any other white man here who does not like my laws, let him go too. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. I am trying to lead my people according to the word of God, which we have received from you white people, and you show us an example of wickedness. You know that some of my brothers have learned to like drink, and you tempt them with it. I make an end of it today. Go! Take your cattle, leave my town, and never come back.'

"There was dead silence. It spelt ruin to some of them. The chief rose and went to his house. A few of them followed him.

"Have pity on us, Khama, they said.

"Pity! Pity!" he cried. 'I had pity on you. I warned you. But you despised me. Now I will have pity—but for my own people.'

"I have grown up in this land," said one. 'We are old friends.'

"What," cried Khama, 'you dare say that? You who made a promise to me, and then brought casks of drink to the river and smuggled them into the country? You say you are my friend? You are my worst enemy. Go!'

"So he drove away the men who had poisoned his land; and later the British government, when it made a protectorate over all his land, agreed to the same law against drink that Khama had made. Khama, the earliest prohibition ruler in the world, carried his law with a lone, courageous, steel-willed grip, for conscience' sake and for love of his people, whom he regarded as his children."

ARGENTINA, SOUTH AMERICA

The month of June this year was cold and dry. Many people are suffering from chilblains on their hands as well as their feet. In church work the cold affects the attendance as the poor people are not prepared with warm clothing.

During the month I preached in Tancacha, Almafuerte (twice), Cabrera, Deheza (twice), Perdices and Alejandro, and visited Berrotaran. I am now back at Rio Cuarto preparing for the pastors' Bible study conference next week.

The month has marked progress in all our missions. In Tancacha the Sunday school has reached 66 and there are prayer meetings every other day. In Huinca Renanco the Sunday school passed 120 last Sunday. In Perdices the Sunday school was started only three weeks ago and already has 24 in attendance. In both Cabrera and Deheza the people are working with renewed interest and new people are coming. In Alejandro also a serious difficulty has been settled and there are new people coming.

From Laboulaye Brother Iztueta writes the following: "The meetings are well attended. Last Sunday there were two more persons converted and last night another."

From Rosario Brother Pacey writes: "We now have our desired hall where we have our meetings without interruption of any kind. It is not large but will easily accommodate fifty people.

"We will now try to prepare ourselves as a congregation so as to be able to do our duties as workers. Tuesday evenings we have Bible study. We are studying your book on doctrine, The Faith of the Gospel. We are often asked about our doctrines and we want to be able to explain and defend them."

With the exception of one family the congregation in Rosario is made up of members who have moved from Rio Cuarto.

There is a railway line from Rio Cuarto to Rosario, a distance of about 300 miles, with twenty-five towns, none of which have any mission, except one close to Rosario. Within our district we have members living in six of these towns and they are desirous of having visits to help to have missions.

Pray that we may in some way be able to extend the Gospel to these needy places. Three of our young men are getting started in the work. Juan Pisani has charge of the work in Deheza. Federico Sotola, Jr., helps his father both in Cabrera and Perdices and Alfonso Pacey helps in Rosario. Pray that they may develop into able and permanent workers.

A FRIEND IN NEED

Many are the stories of a dog's devotion to his master, but more rare are the instances of devotion to a fellow dog. An acquaintance of mine who lived in the country, writes a contributor, had two dogs, Shep and Curly, that were great friends. Shep had been in the family for several years, but Curly had come, a pup of six months, less than a year before.

One night at supper time Shep was missing. The children called and called him, but in vain. Morning came and still he was absent, nor did he appear during the day. When another twenty-four hours had rolled around without his return he was given up for lost, and there was mourning in the house, for he had been a great favorite.

They expected to see Curly mope without his friend, but on the contrary Curly was in good spirits and had developed a most remarkable appetite. His dish was licked out clean, and the bones he was given disappeared; still he wanted more.

His mistress couldn't understand it. "No, no, Curly," she protested, "no more. Go dig up the bones you've buried." But, though Curly wagged an acquiescing tail he still kept a hopeful eye upon her.

Then one of the boys noticed that the dog always disappeared shortly after he had been fed. "Must have a new place to bury his bones," they surmised, and they lay in wait to watch him.

As it happened, a steer was slaughtered on the farm the next morning, and at dinner-time Curly received a generous meal. He gulped down his dinner, seized a big bone in his mouth and trotted away toward the barnyard. The boys cautiously followed.

Through the barnyard he went, crawled through the fence and struck out across the field back of it. At the farther side of the field was a considerable eminence one of the many rolling hills common to the lands along the Mississippi, all of them more or less pocked with "mineral holes," as the deserted lead mines are called.

Skirting the nearest hill, Curly proceeded up the ravine between that and the next hill and presently came to an old mineral hole. The boys, following him under cover of the bushes scattered about, saw him walk up to the rim of the hole and lay down the bone. Then he barked, and to their astonishment a faint bark answered. Curly immediately picked up the bone, advanced his head past the edge of the hole and dropped the bone in.

The boys rushed up to the hole and peered in. At the bottom, twenty feet down, they discerned a shaggy animal busy with the bone that Curly had dropped in. At their whistle the animal raised its head and whined. It was the missing Shep.

One of the boys made a quick trip to the barn for a coil of rope. Fastening one end securely to a nearby tree, he let himself down into the hole and tied the rope around old Shep's body back of his forelegs, and in a twinkling the dog was hoisted to the surface followed a moment later by his rescuer.

Thanks to Curly's good offices, old Shep was not much the worse for his mishap; but it was hard to tell which was more delighted, the prisoner that had just been re-

ELLET, OHIO

We wish to introduce the Brethren family to two fine young men who answered the "Elletonian" call and have been giving a good account of themselves at the Ellet church. They are Mr. Hammers and Mr. Uphouse of the Johnstown church. Coming to us shortly after college was out they took hold of the work here with an earnestness and sincerity that speak well for their future. Besides taking an active part in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor they have been preaching for us on the Sunday that I am at Rittman thus giving us full time service. With them came a pianist, Mr. McDonald also of Johnstown, who has been giving an account of himself at the piano. We commend their work and hope that the Brethren churches may remember these words when they finish their work at school.

We are glad to announce another addition since dedication, making it necessary for an outdoor baptismal service. The boys helped to conduct an impressive service at Springfield lake Sunday, when, like Phillip and the Eunuch, two applicants walked into the water for baptism.

FLOYD SIBERT.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The work is moving off here as usual with an even 190 enrolled for the second term of the Summer School.

The faculty is now complete for next year. We are bringing in eight new members, counting the Music department. The burden here will be very heavy this coming year for all of us for we have certain ideals to maintain, the realization of which are becoming increasingly difficult.

Professor and Mrs. Black were callers recently. Professor Black is attending the University of Michigan this summer.

Word from Professor Anspach of the same place indicates that he is having a profitable summer.

We are planning on conference here and making preparations to attend.

We have just ordered some 450 books for the Library. This was made possible through certain gifts. These books are all new and modern and cover the various fields of study here. Among them is the new Britannica which doubtless will be very useful. It will take the librarians some time to get these properly catalogued and on the shelves.

Those of our faculty—Professors Haun, Stuckey, and Miller—who were at Shipshewana, all report a good time.

The annual inspection of the plant by the State Fire Marshall's office took place yesterday. There is always something new to be done about "safety first" these days.

We have had to do quite a bit of repairing on the buildings this summer as the roofs always demand attention.

WARSAW, INDIANA

Dear Brethren:

The Warsaw-Winona Summer Bible School was conducted again during the month of June. The Brethren school was well represented, in spite of a considerable amount of whooping-cough and measles at that time. Our school was a very successful one and of the Dr. Lathem type, that is, without craft-work. The Brethren school had two teachers on the faculty, and a number of generous drivers who conveyed small children to and from the school each day.

Brethren folks of Warsaw and Winona are gladly and anxiously looking forward to the days of the arrival of Brethren for our General Conference. While we are privileged to many fine treats at Winona during the summer, there is that fervent desire to greet the Brethren again. Three organizations of this church will aid in the program during the conference. We are trusting that this shall be a conference of far-reaching vision, one of power, and great consecration.

Awaiting your coming with pleasure.

The First Brethren Church,
E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

Mr. Spurgeon said that when he was a little boy he used to wonder why his father thanked God for every piece of meat they ate. One time as his father was putting a large number of hams in a hoghead to cure them for the winter, young Spurgeon said, "Father, why don't you thank God leased or his devoted friend that, by his daily contributions of food, had kept him alive during his imprisonment.—Youth's Companion.

THE BORDER WAR

Firing on the flag is making war on the United States. Yet no one expects an emotional uproar of outraged patriotism from the antiprohibition press and congressmen because a United States patrol boat in the Detroit river was attacked with gunfire, recently, by rum runners. These river pirates, after delivering broadside No. 1, beat it back to Canadian waters and from that safe position heroically fired broadside No. 2 at the United States flag. The bow of the boat was riddled with shot, the windshield was broken and some of the machinery was smashed.

This incident got into the newspapers with a fair display of headlines. It may seem a new development in the border warfare with the rum smugglers, but it is nothing exceptional. Similar attacks on United States craft have been frequent. Possibly the newspaper prominence attained in this case caused the American secretary of state to make a special inquiry as to the facts. In any event Secretary Stimson is well advised to inform himself thoroughly.

Firing on the flag, riddling United States government patrol boats with bullets, is the fashionable outdoor sport so long as it is done in the name of "personal liberty." The river pirates are gallant, romantic fellows. If one of them gets shot, as young Eugster was, while in the act of rum running, we are called upon to deplore prohibition fanaticism and deprecate the lengthening list of "dry killings."

President Hoover called upon the border towns and cities "to help" the government "end the systematic war that is being carried on by international criminals against the laws of the United States." The next day the common council of wet Detroit responded with a resolution condemning the policy of prohibition agents of "shooting first and investigating afterwards." Possibly the Detroit rum runners control the common council. For the United States attorney in that district charges that while numerous false stories of indiscriminate and unprovoked shootings by the border patrolmen are put into circulation by the rum runners and their allies, the truth is that in no case has a citizen engaged in legitimate business been annoyed while on the river.

If one scrutinizes carefully the published lists of citizens killed in recent weeks by enforcement officers some interesting facts may be disclosed. In every case there has been a violent protest to the government against such atrocities. There are probably 120,000,000 inhabitants of the United States, yet there have been only four cases of shootings by federal enforcement officers in the past two months that have aroused criticism from any source. The other four were shootings by county sheriffs in southern states which were dry long before federal prohibition was adopted and which the wets themselves would permit to remain dry under their state laws even if the 18th amendment were to be repealed.

As for the four shootings by federal officers, two were so clearly justified that there can no longer be reasonable controversy over them. In the case of Fleming in the District of Columbia, a smoke screen was thrown out by the offender in an effort to escape, and a smoke screen from a motor car in the District of Columbia is a felony. The grand jury exonerated the police officer who used his pistol to stop the rum car under such circumstances. In the other case, that of Eugster on the Detroit river, even the wet Congressman Clancy, of Detroit, has declared that the shooting was justified.

Two cases remain in which the federal officers may have been gravely at fault. One is that of Gordon shot at Mooers, N. Y., while running in a truckload of liquor from Canada. He was shot while trying to escape. The customs guard says the killing was an accident. The wet press in this country refuses to give the guard the benefit of the doubt.

The other case, the most sensational and deplorable one of all, is that of the killing of Henry Virkkula, of International Falls, Minn. The assistant secretary of the treasury asserts that the customs guard who shot Kirkkula "has a perfect defense," which will be disclosed in court proceedings. Here again the wet press and congressmen have scouted the government's claim of justification, refusing even to give to the accused officer the benefit of an investigation and condemning him without a trial.

Given the worst interpretation, finally, only two cases of shootings by federal officers in the past two months in the whole United States can now be cited in support of the contention that federal prohibition is being brutally enforced against offenders, at the same time placing the lives of innocent people in jeopardy.

The President understands that it will be impossible to satisfy his critics. As they see it, either the law cannot be enforced and therefore is a failure; or, if it is enforced, it becomes an instrument of unbridled terrorism.—Springfield Republican.

18TH ANNUAL BRETHREN CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

July 12-21, 1929, Long Beach, California

CONFERENCE OFFICERS—1928-29

Moderator, A. V. Kimmell, Los Angeles.
Vive-Moderator, H. V. Wall, Long Beach.
Secretary, Alan S. Pearce, Los Angeles.
Assistant Secretary, John G. Linehard, North Long Beach.

Treasurer, Frank Burch, North Long Beach.

Member Executive, T. J. Steves, La Verne.

The eighteenth annual Bible conference of the Southern California District which convened July 12 to 21, in the First church of Long Beach, California, proved to be one of the best if not the best in the minds of many who attended ever held in the Southern California District. The following report from the Secretary will give our readers a taste of the good things enjoyed at this conference:

Friday, July 12—Morning Session (Business)

9:45—Opening Devotions, led by A. H. Kent.

10:00—Appointment of Committee on Credentials by Moderator. Roll Call of churches. (Response by Pastors or Representatives). La Verne church, A. L. Lynn, pastor. First church of Los Angeles, A. B. Cover, pastor. Second church of Los Angeles, A. V. Kimmell, pastor. First church of Long Beach, L. S. Bauman, pastor. Whittier church, Charles W. Mayes, pastor. Fillmore church, W. A. Ogden, pastor. Second church of Long Beach, John G. Lienhard, pastor. Palomar Mission church, Jesse Hall in charge. Report of Committee on Credentials. Statistical Reports read by pastors or representatives. Appointment of other committees by moderator.

11:00—Moderator's Address, "Christ and the Church." A. V. Kimmell, Los Angeles.

The opening address of the conference, the subject of which was "Christ and the Church" was delivered by the Moderator, Rev. A. V. Kimmell, pastor of the Second church of Los Angeles. The speaker's remarks were based upon Ephesians 5:21, showing first how Christ loved the church from John 3:16. The speaker told how the word "so" in this verse set forth the supreme affection of Christ for his church. Eternal love is not only present, but in all eternity. The church was in the mind of God before the foundation of the world, Ephesians 3:17, 19. Christ's love for his church is seen not so much in the nail-pierced hands and feet, but in the spear-thrust side, which manifested a broken heart for the church.

Second, Christ gave himself for the Church. This was a voluntary act. Christ came from glory, was born of a virgin, stood abuses of men and offered himself to the soldiers who placed him upon the cross. God offered no substitute, neither did Christ. God did not send his angels nor servants, but God gave his best and Christ being his best, freely offered himself as a sacrifice for the world.

Third, Christ Sanctifies the Church. Not necessarily to make holy as we understand the meaning of that word today, but Christ "set apart" the church.

Fourth, Christ Cleanses the Church. Water is a symbol of cleansing. The church was cleansed by the living Word, Christ himself. The 13th chapter of John is a splendid symbol of this very thing.

Fifth, Christ Presents the Church. The first four evidences of Christ's love for the church are past or present. This fifth evidence in a sense is future, Jude 24. Today the true church is unseen and unknown. It is the day of rejection and is patiently waiting for the presentation which Christ will make to his Father and our God.

Sixth, Christ Preserves the Church, 1 Peter 1:19.

Seventh, Christ Nourishes and Cherishes the Church. This is the great need of the church today. A man once made a trip to Europe. Not knowing that the meals were included in his ticket, he took crackers and cheese and fed upon this menial diet in his stateroom throughout the trip. All this time there was a bounteous feast spread in the dining room of the ship, provided by the steamship company and paid for by this traveler, who was ignorant of the fact.

Such, the speaker went on to say, is the condition of many members of the church today. They are feeding upon the crackers and cheese, when they ought to be feeding upon Christ, who provides complete nourishment.

2:00—Reading of Minutes. Report of Committee on Credentials. Election of conference officers for ensuing year, Moderator, A. L. Lynn, pastor La Verne church; Vice-Moderator, H. V. Wall, member First church, Long Beach; Secretary, Alan S. Pearce, Secretary Correspondence School, Bible Institute of Los Angeles; Assistant Secretary, Rev. A. B. Cover, pastor First church of Los Angeles; Treasurer, Rev. W. A. Ogden, pastor Fillmore church; Member Executive, Rev. John Lienhard, pastor Second church, Long Beach; Statistician, Rev. C. W. Mayes, pastor Whittier church. New Business. Adjournment to Saturday, July 20, 2:00 P. M.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions led by Professor Paul Licht.

7:55—Special musical number supplied by Second church of Long Beach.

8:00—Address, "The Old and New Dispensations—Wonderful Symbolism in Prophecy." Dr. L. Sale Harrison, Australia.

The addresses delivered by Dr. L. Sale Harrison of Australia, the first of which was given on the opening evening of the conference, were most thought-provoking and edifying. On the subject stated above, the speaker took for his text Hebrews 1:1-3. Answering the question, "What is a dispensation, or age?" Dr. Harrison stated that a dispensation or age was a period of time during which God dealt or deals with men in a different way, the length of time determined by man's changed relationship to God. God created man for fellowship. Briefly commenting on the dispensations generally known, the speaker showed how when man was in innocence, God could have fellowship with him, but as soon as man sinned, his fellowship with God was broken. The Garden of Eden was the place for fellowship. When man was cast out, God told him how to return, Genesis 3:21. "Made skins, etc." Throughout the Word of God, there is always anti-type to type. A type is that which is in picture form, that of the future. The word "skins" in the Hebrew means "clothed," covering. Abel offered a lamb. Cain offered fruit. Cain did not recognize substitution. The age of innocence began with fellowship with God. The age of conscience began with a plan whereby man could return to fellowship and closed with God's judgment in the flood. The word "pitch" used in describing the material used in covering the ark is the same for covering—atonement. Noah's name means rest. The ark is a type of Christ. Judgment does not touch men in Christ. In him we find perfect fellowship and perfect rest. The 8th chapter of Genesis opens with a new age, the age of dominion. In chapter 11, we see the end of this age, which is confusion. As soon as man defies himself, he wants to humanize God. The word Babel means confusion. While there was confusion among the people because of the change of language, the speaker did not believe that this separated family life. Beginning with Abraham we have the age of pilgrims. In Exodus we find God's children in Egypt under bondage, delivered by blood. The next age is the age of law. The Book of Galatians in the New Testament tells us the purpose of that law. (When God gave his law, man realized his need of a Savior; Christ came to fulfill the law. He proved that God's law could be kept only by the perfect man. Following the age of law, comes the age of grace. The wonder of grace in our Lord is past finding out. It breaks men's hearts. When loved ones pass away, the two things we remember are the last things they say and the last things said about them. Just before Christ left this world, he promised his disciples that he would return again. In the first chapter of Acts, we read what was said concerning his return and in I Thessalonians 4:16-18, we read what takes place at the close of the age of grace. Following this age, there will be a brief period of tribulation, after which Christ will set up his millennial reign, known as the millennial age.

Saturday, July 13—Afternoon Session (No Morning Session)

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by Mabel Crawford.

2:15—Address, "The Seven Churches of the Revelation." Rev. Charles W. Mayes, Whittier.

Brother Mayes, a new man to our conference, is becoming widely known among the churches as an ardent student of God's Word and in this address delivered at the conference, brought out some very interesting thoughts on the subject upon which he spoke. He opened his address by stating that God writes to the churches in the order given in the opening chapters of Revelation, for a purpose. In this order we find seven types of churches of all time. When God gives a picture of the churches, he gives a true picture setting forth the good and bad things of each church.

Concerning the Nicolaitane church, the speaker believed this word to be symbolical, referring to the earliest form of the notion of a priestly order. The state of the church at Laodicea is seen in the church which endeavors to please all, attempting to gain salvation by works.

Brother Mayes went on to graphically describe the conditions as pictured in the other churches referred to in this section of God's Word, showing how that in each case we were able to find such conditions existing in churches throughout the world today. He pled for a closer walk with God on the part of all of our churches, that we might be found faithful at his coming, as was the church of Philadelphia, described in the 3rd chapter of Revelation.

Special musical number supplied by the Whittier church.

3:15—Address, "Nebuchadnezzar's Image — A Marvelous Portrayal of Four Universal Empires." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

Dr. Harrison, in his second address at the conference, selected as his text, Daniel 2:31. Daniel's dream was that of an image of a man. Parts of the image represent kingdoms. The times of the Gentiles is only mentioned once in Luke 21:24, but is referred to many times through the New Testament. The words "trodden down", are illustrated in the Greek painting of the Greek conqueror, whose foot is upon the neck of his captive, signifying oppression, contempt which follows conquest. The time of the Gentiles refers to the period of time during which the Gentiles rule over Palestine, which rightfully belongs to Israel.

Daniel 2:37-39. These verses refer to Babylon, the head of gold. Following this kingdom an inferior kingdom, represented by silver, Medo-Persia, cp. Daniel 7:5. Another third kingdom of brass rises about 330 B. C., known as the Grecian Empire, inferior to the monarchy of Medo-Persia. In v. 40 we have the fourth kingdom of iron, representing the Caesars of the Roman Empire.

In the light of Scripture, these prophetic addresses delivered by Dr. Harrison were most illuminating and inspiring.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions, led by E. L. Culp.

7:55—Special musical number supplied by the Whittier church.

8:00—Address, "The Russian Jew—Past and Present as Foretold in Prophecy." Rev. George W. Hunter, Long Beach.

Rev. Geo. Hunter, field secretary American-European Fellowship, delivered a most stirring address on the past, present and future history of Israel. When God had a message to give, he always gave it in three portions, namely, law, prophets and writings. The first warning from the law is found in Deuteronomy 4:25, 28; from the prophets in Jeremiah 9:13-16; from the writings in Psalm 106:24-16. God offered his plan and purpose to Israel. It was God the Father offering himself, Zechariah 7:12-14; through the gospel, Matthew 23:37-39. Read also Acts 28:25-28. We have the two final offerings to Israel as a nation. God's promises to his people are many. In Ezekiel 37:21-28 we have a very plain promise showing God's plan to redeem Israel. This is being very vividly fulfilled in our very day. About ten million Jews scattered over Russia have responded to the Gospel. Literally thousands of Jews have poured out their blood for their testimony for the "crucified One," as they term Christ. The 11th chapter of Romans is literally being fulfilled in Russia today, said Dr. Hunter. In Hungary, approximately ninety thousand Jews have embraced Christ as their Savior. In Russia a far greater number have taken their stand for Christ. The only explanation is that God's Word is being fulfilled.

Sunday, July 14—Morning Session

9:30—Sunday school, in charge of A. H. Kent, Superintendent First Church of Long Beach.

11:00—Opening service, H. V. Wall, Vice-Moderator, officiating.

11:15—Special musical number supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

11:30—Sermon, "Intrigues in a Persian Court—Love that Found a Way." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

The morning sermon preached by Dr. Harrison on the Book of Esther brought out clearly how God centers his love on his children such as Esther manifested toward her own people. Satan always commences intrigues when God's love is exhibited. God has plans and Satan has counter-plans, but God always wins.

Afternoon Session

3:00—Opening Song and Devotions, led by Ralph McConahay.

3:10—Duet, Hazel and Clarence Shively.

3:15—Address, "The Bible and What to Do with It." Dr. John C. Page, Los Angeles.

Delayed by traffic and wrong directions, Dr. Page arrived just in time to deliver a most helpful address of the above subject. Dr. Page, a member of the faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, is fast winning his way into the hearts of God's children on the Pacific coast.

On the subject upon which Dr. Page spoke, he said that many know what to do and do not do it. This is a great tragedy among God's children. The very existence of the Bible is a challenge to us to do something with it. The speaker gave the following clear outline on the subject:

I. Search it. The Scriptures testify of Christ. There are two principals involved in how we are to search the scripture. 1. Mental concentration. 2. Spiritual illumination. See Proverbs 2:1-5, 1 Corinthians 2:12, 13. One thing which keeps people from reading the Bible is unconfessed sin.

II. Eat it; take hold, digest, assimilate, meditate in it day and night. On this thought the speaker said that many are marking time instead of marching forward.

III. Use it for comfort. Job. 15:11; for conquest.

IV. Hold it forth, Phil. 2:16.

We are living in a world of death. People are building houses and digging graves. We are to hold forth the Word of God by sitting down with a person and taking a few passages and pointing them to the way of life. It is amazing what can be done with three or four verses of Scripture. In them we can find a remedy for the most spiritual sicknesses. For instance, Isaiah 53:6; Hebrews 9:26; John 1:12. We do not need to have a theological education to hold forth the Word of God. We must search, eat, use and pass on God's Word. Ps. 119:111.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service, conducted by Donald Davis, Music Director, First church of Long Beach.

7:45—Devotions, led by Dwight E. Waller.

7:55—Special musical number supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

8:00—Sermon, "The Pharisee and the Publican." Rev. Herbert H. Tay, San Dimas.

Our Conference has always been blessed by the presence of Rev. Herbert H. Tay, former pastor of the La Verne church, at present Religious Instructor at the Vorhies School for Boys, San Dimas, California.

On the familiar passage contained in Luke 18:1-4, Brother Tay clearly set forth the necessity of separation from the world unto the Lord. In this consideration, however, as a denomination, we must not boast of the things attained or, as individuals, of the spiritual knowledge received. The Pharisee compared himself with someone else. One outside often compares himself with the weakest one in the church. We never hear of anyone comparing himself with a true saint. The great question confronting all is "What have you done with Christ, who died to save you from sin?" The outstanding characteristic of the Publican is that he recognized the fact that he was a sinner. To pray for confession of sin is as much as prayer for the healing of the body. He recognized that his sin separated him from God. He was different from ninety per cent of the people today. It makes no difference whether we are saved or unsaved, there must be that characteristic dominant in our lives. The Publican realized that if any help came to him it must come from God. Prostitution, said the speaker, according to the Central Dictionary, which in his mind was the clearest definition of the word, is "that which furnishes some reason for punishment justly deserved."

(To be continued).

"THE TALE OF A FORD"

The Ford car fairly flew over the smooth, hard road. "Say, Dad, this is racing all right, with no speed limits to worry about." Hal laughed joyously as he pulled off his cap and waved it in the air. "Hooray, keep her at it."

"I've got to, if we reach our destination before night. It is easy going here, but those hills straight ahead of us will mean good, steady climbing." After a pause he added, "This is the worst heat we have had since we left New York. Even the wind is scorching. Mr. Ware wiped the perspiration from his sunburnt forehead.

"Isn't it great to be really 'out-west'? Now if we could only meet a few Indians or even buffaloes, it would be just like the story books. But," Hal added, "I shouldn't want to live here all the time. It must be mighty lonely—for the kids especially."

Suddenly, Hal's father could never explain how it happened, the car swerved and plunged into a clump of mesquite bushes.

Hal was thrown clear of the car, falling into a pile of soft sand. In a moment he jumped to his feet and ran to the upturned car. To his horror he found his father lying beneath it.

"Oh, Dad!" he half sobbed.

"All right son. I'm not hurt—at least not much, but I can't move. I seem to be pinned in here."

Hal could not move the car so he started out to find someone to go to his father's rescue. He wandered for a long time, finally he met a girl. She didn't look at all like the girls he knew at home. She wore a faded blue calico dress. Her hair was long and very black, her eyes were black, too, and her skin was dark; but she had a friendly smile. Soon she was telling him of herself. "Sam," she pointed to a lank white horse standing meekly a few steps behind her. "Sam and I started out early this morning for school. The school man's coming today for the last time. I wouldn't have missed it for anything. Go long and you can be the new scholar. Don't you just love to go to school?"

"All right," said Hal hesitatingly, "But Dad—I must find help for him first."

"Well come with me," the girl suggested. "We'll tell the school man about it. Maybe somebody's picked him up 'fore this," she added encouragingly.

Once they were both astride the horse's back, the girl asked him questions about New York. "It must be wonderful to live where there are so many people and churches and schools," she burst out, "But then, I'd miss all the"—she hesitated for the right word—"all the bigness. It will be kinder lonesome though, when the school man doesn't come any more. We do the most interesting things in school and on Saturday folks come from miles and stail all day. Then the man tells the best stories and we sing and sing."

"All day!" Hal exclaimed under his breath, then asked aloud, "Why can't he come any more?"

"Oh, I guess the churches and missionary societies back East won't send him any more money. Then he has so many miles to travel with his horse, he can't get to every place."

When they reached the house which was used for a school, Hal gave a shout of joy for there in the very center of the group was his father—already rescued by the school man, and now safe and sound.

Not for a long time will Hal forget that school. Everyone was so interested and their black eyes shone as they recited some of the same lessons in history and geography which Hal remembered having in his school. As the school man was telling them that he could not come to them again, so that the school would have to be discontinued, Hal held a whispered consultation with his father.

"Isn't it to send missionaries to places just like this and keep up school that we give our Glad Chest money in October?" he asked.

"I believe it is, Hal," was the answer.

"Then I am going to tell the other kids in our society all about today, so they'll feel it is all real, and we will save our money weeks beforehand. And oh, Dad," he said slowly, "if he only had a Ford like ours—he could keep this school going and go out for more boys and girls, perhaps."

Mr. Ware had just the slightest twinkle in his eye, as he remarked earnestly, "If you say so, son, we'll go the rest of the way by train."—From "Better Americans, No One."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

A STATEMENT

Inasmuch as considerable misunderstanding resulted from the discussions attending the presentation of the "Palomar Mission" to the delegates of General Conference last year, those concerned desire to make the following joint statement:

1. The bringing of the "Palomar Mission" before the National Home Missions Board and before the General Conference was not authorized by the Southern California District nor by the Mission Board of the Southern California District in any official meeting. The action was taken by the advice of the President and of the Secretary of the Board who assumed the responsibility of speaking for the Board in the matter, on the basis of common consent by a majority of its members.

2. The bringing of the "Palomar Mission" before the General Conference by the National Home Missions Board created the impression that this project was being made a part of the work of that Board. But such was not the intention of the officers of the Mission Board of the Southern California District. The "Palomar Mission" remains entirely under the jurisdiction and control of the Southern California District, and is supported by the District.

3. The pastor of the First Brethren church of Long Beach opposed the original "Palomar Mission" because he did not regard the location strategic for the building of a church which could be made self-supporting quickly. And this was a matter of interest to the Long Beach church because a heavy part of the support of the District Missions is provided by the members of that church. Furthermore, he felt that it was not the best policy to inaugurate any work upon which the local Conference was so closely divided. While the Long Beach church, upon the advice of its pastor, never took official action in the matter, it has always supported his leadership, and continues to do so.

4. With the removal of the "Palomar Mission" to another location, more strategic, the churches and pastors of the Southern California District are now unanimously supporting the project. Signed, July 25, 1929:

N. C. NIELSEN, President, Mission Board, Southern California District.

HENRY V. WALL, Secretary, Mission Board, Southern California District.

A. V. KIMMELL, Moderator, Conference, Southern California District.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA.

LOUIS S. BAUMAN, Moderator. N. H. NIELSEN, Clerk.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

GLENNER-AUSTIN—Miss Ruth Austin and Earl Glenser of Canton were quietly married at the Brethren church, Smithville, Ohio, Sunday afternoon, July 21. Rev. G. E. McDonald officiated at the ceremony. Miss Austin is a graduate of Ashland College and for the past two years has been teaching at Lost Creek, Kentucky. The couple will reside in Canton where Mr. Glenser is in business. G. E. McDONALD.

IN THE SHADOW

JUNK—Sister Armlida Junk of the Fairview church, Washington, C. H., Ohio, was called home last week at the age of 56 years to be with her Lord. She was very ill last winter and since then she did not enjoy good health. She suddenly became very sick and in a short while she was gone. The funeral service was held on Friday, July 26th, by the writer. The church was filled and there was a large crowd on the outside. Sister Junk was one of the most useful workers in the Fairview church. It has been very difficult to keep the Bible school and church work going since Sister Finn, the Superintendent of the school, went to be with her Lord last winter, and now it will be still more difficult. May the good Lord raise up other workers to take their place in the Father's work and tend the bereaved family of Brother Thomas Junk and his children. W. A. GEARHART.

SIFE—Bertha Mae Sife, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Butts, was born May 31, 1894 in Lenapee County, Michigan. She departed this life July 18, 1929, in her home in Chattanooga, Ohio, at the age of 35 years, 1 month and 18 days. She was married December 12, 1920 to Clark Sife. To this union were born three children, a son and two daughters. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, father, mother, two brothers and four sisters—Bessie, of Conway, Ohio; Edith, Esther and Ruth at home; Merle at Adrian, Michigan and Pearl at home, besides a host of relatives and friends.

At the age of 11 years she was converted to the Christian faith and united with the Church of the Brethren. After her marriage she united with the Brethren church of which she has been a faithful worker in the home till God saw fit to call her to her reward. She will be greatly missed in her home, church and community in which she lived.

Funeral services were held at the Bethel Brethren church, by the writer and Rev. Johnson. Burial was made in Mt. Hope Cemetery. REV. JOHN M. FAIR.

ABSHIRE—Viola Sheldadine, daughter of William and Lottie Sheldadine, was born October 2, 1889 at Disko, Indiana, and died July 15, 1929 at Rochester, Indiana, aged 45 years, 8 months and 12 days. At the early age of 8 years, she was deprived of a mother's training and love through death. She was taken into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Noah Miller where she was reared and where she lived until her marriage to Frank Abshire of Roann, December 13, 1898. She united with the Brethren church of Center Chapel, under the pastorate of Rev. Miller, on May 5, 1901, to which church principles she faithfully adhered until her death.

She leaves to mourn their loss, her husband, Frank Abshire of Roann; her father, William Sheldadine of Bristol, Indiana; three brothers, Edwin of Rossville, Illinois, Charles of Lima, Ohio, and Jacob of North Manchester. One sister, Myrtle, preceded her in death. There are also many other relatives and friends who grieve at her departure.

Mrs. Abshire was an earnest worker in the advancement of Sunday school and had held for years an office that required much work and time on her part. Always faithful in her belief, diligent in her efforts to advance the work she loved so much, she never spared her strength or self until she could see the work accomplished. She saw a vision, and labored until health and strength were gone to do the work she felt her Master had given her to do.

Funeral services were conducted in the Roann Brethren church, by Elder T. W. Ditch of Mexico, Mo. The text of the sermon was James 4:3. L. W. DITCH.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Failure of Punishment

Yesterday 1700 convicts of a New York prison battled desperately for over five hours to gain freedom. The result was two killed, several seriously wounded, a $250,000 fire, and half a hundred convicts entrenched within the prison armed with machine guns.

Contrary to popular and superficial belief, punishment does not reform the criminal. Punishment and the fear of it may restrain him, but it cannot change his impulses. Only the New Birth can do that. The Bible doctrine of everlasting punishment rests upon scientific principles. If a man rejects Jesus Christ and refuses to be born again, there is no hope for him beyond the grave. Punishment there must be in order to satisfy justice and to restrain evil, but punishment will never change his heart and make of him a new man.

MAN'S "Conquest" of the Air.

As this is being written, the St. Louis fliers are completing their 17th day in the air. It is an amazing accomplishment, but the watchers are becoming worried. Yesterday another endurance plane crashed, killing both pilots, and sponsors of the St. Louis plane are urging the men to land before something disastrous happens.

It won't be long now. They will soon land, tired, half-deafened by the engine's roar, with machinery shaking to pieces, but with a world record.

Yet with all his indomitable courage and mechanical ingenuity, man is not yet at home in the air. He is a creature of the dust, and though for a few brief days he may fly through space, in the end he will go back to the dust from whence he came. "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return" (Genesis 3:19). The only difference is that some come down quicker than others.

But some day man will be set free from the limitations of his material environment. The creature of the dust will leave the dust forever. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4:16-17).

This "conquest" of the air and space will be perfect, complete and final. But it comes to men only through Jesus Christ our Lord. Don't make any mistake about that. Only those who have yielded themselves to him will be able to sing in that day:

"Or if on joyful wing
Cleaving the sky,
Sun, moon and stars forgot,
Upward I fly."

THE Faith of Ford

Questioned the other day regarding his religious beliefs, it is reported that Henry Ford answered as follows: "I believe in God and in Jesus Christ. I belong to the church. I attend church." According to this report, he avowed himself to be an orthodox Christian.

All devout Christians will hope that two things are true about this interview: First, that Mr. Ford really declared himself as reported; and second, that he really knows what an "orthodox" Christian is. Some people, otherwise very intelligent, do not know.

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

44. Jesus taught the Kingdom of God is within you; also he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven." Is this a mental state of mind? Or is it a spiritual attitude? Does "seek ye" indicate that the kingdom is difficult to find?

I must be pardoned for quoting the whole passage to which the first reference is made. "And being asked by the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God cometh, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, There! for lo, the kingdom of God is within you." Luke 17:20-21.

The second reference is to Matt. 6:33 and its parallel in Lk. 12:31. "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

The first passage is most difficult. Jesus is addressing Pharisees who in questioning him sought to entangle him. This we must not lose sight of in our interpretation of this passage. The interpretation must turn in the first place upon the meaning we give to the word rendered in our version "observation." My opinion is that the thought of Jesus is something as follows: You need not go searching for the Kingdom of God as if it were a matter hidden or difficult to find. If one reads on into the following paragraphs which Jesus addressed to his disciples we shall see that this is true. His striking words are, "For as the lightning, when it lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall the Son of man be in his day." One would need no spy-glass or telescope to see such a lightning flash. The Kingdom in its consummation is directly associated with the appearance of the Son of man in his second advent. If this view is justifiable then one difficulty has disappeared in this study.

The greater difficulty lies in the usual rendering and interpretation of the words, "the kingdom of God is within you." One thing seems to me to be very certain, and that is, that the men to whom Jesus was speaking were certainly not such as were the possessors of the kingdom. The "you" refers to the Pharisees and certainly nothing would find a place there less than the Kingdom of God. The fact is Jesus is not here speaking of the inwardness of the kingdom but rather of its presence. It can be readily shown that men are to be in the Kingdom but nowhere that I know in the entire New Testament it is said that the Kingdom is within men. Trench says that this notion of the Kingdom being within men is quite modern.

Some would escape the difficulty by translating the preposition entos "in the midst of" or "among." That would make the teaching of Jesus mean that the Kingdom was now already in their midst or among them. This would be a way out of the difficulty but to me it is as objectionable as to say that the Kingdom is in the hearts of his pharisaical questioners.

I would not be dogmatic but to me the best explanation is to make the whole statement after the words "They say" what Jesus warns against heeding. When men shall say, "Here is the kingdom," or when they say "There it is" and give as a reason for their replies that the Kingdom is within their hearts—then it is that Jesus warns us not to follow such teachers.

No. I do not consider the Kingdom a thing difficult to find when it is here. There will be a domain, a people, a law and a King. Certainly that would not be difficult to locate. But if the Kingdom is a mental state or a spiritual attitude and lies hidden within the hearts of men we might have to do some searching to find it.

For the present we may easily find the way to Christ. We qualify as his disciples here and now for citizenship in his Kingdom. So far forth as there is any movement in the world today representing the Kingdom that must be found in the Church. All the interests of the Kingdom of God on earth in this age are committed to the Church. Doing the will of God as faithful members of the Church which our Lord founded will be qualification for a share in that Kingdom. We must seek the Kingdom, we must strive to enter into it, we must labor in it,—such passages teach the effort and toil that the prize merits to win it.

You might be as white as a white-winged angel but somebody wearing black glasses would shoot you for a crow, because everything takes on the color of the glasses one looks through. One's own moral condition lends color to his vision.—Sel.

The man who swears does six things at once; he breaks the command of God; he violates the law of the land; he transgresses the rules of good manners; he insults good people; he profanes sacred things; he dishonors his parents.—Sel.

Can We Preach Doctrinal Sermons?

The doctrinal sermons we have in mind are those that deal with subjects that are distinctly denominational. Some would say, Sermons dealing with "ordinances and good works", reserving the word "doctrines" for those foundation principles of the Christian religion, which all evangelical churches accept. There is a sense in which the distinction in terms is justified. The practices which set us apart as a people are indeed ordinances, rites ordained of God to be observed and perpetuated in his church. But the implication that they are not fundamental to Christian truth is suggestive of a superficial view or interpretation of our distinctive tenets. We believe such rites as baptism and feet washing may properly be dignified with the designation of "doctrines" if we keep in mind not merely the form but the vital truth which they embody. So fundamental are they in what they denote that the sincere Christian scarcely needs any further expression of faith than the practice of the "ordinances of God's house", if he observes them with the fullness of understanding and significance with which they are set forth in the New Testament. We therefore use the word "doctrines" as applying to our distinctive church practices in a well advised sense, and taking that attitude we shall be able the better to find an answer to our question, "Can we preach doctrinal sermons" today?

The question is not a theoretical one, but grows out of experience. Many of our ministers are asking it and discussing the problem on every occasion that brings them together. Some seem to have settled the question in their own minds and to have settled it in the negative. Others on the other hand contend that it is possible to maintain the doctrinal sermon as a regular part of the year's sermonic program without loss of appeal to the public, while between the two groups of settled notions, there are many who are not yet decided and are still debating the matter. It is difficult for one with convictions growing out of experience to convince another with differing convictions based also upon experience, because experiences growing out of such doctrinal preaching do not always harmonize. However it seems good to keep up the discussion, for that keeps fresh in our minds the importance of such doctrinal instruction. We need to have the responsibility pressed often upon our hearts, for there is always present the tendency to neglect it, especially because the easy way and the popular trend is away from any instruction that encourages or gives reason for denominational convictions.

Notwithstanding the present trend, we believe denominational convictions are necessary both to the vitality and aggressiveness of the church and to the preservation of the fullest measure of Christian truth. A church that has a certain deposit of truth and does not exercise itself to preserve that truth unimpaired, or that has a certain type of essential service to perform and lays aside their service for the sake of some superficial union with another church group is untrue to its mission. There is need of very much church union, but only where such union does not mean the relinquishing of some vital portion of Christian truth in the lessening of the efficiency of the church's service. We believe that which is unique in Dunker faith is an essential part of Christian truth and should be preserved, also that our church's contribution in service is vital and can only be omitted at great sacrifice to the advancing kingdom of God. Regarding those points it is important that denominational conviction shall be built up, and for that the ministry is supremely responsible.

There are various ways of imparting instruction in denominational truth and our leadership must make proper use of all of them if it would look well to the largest future and greatest service of the church. But whatever other means are employed, if the pulpit is silent on the issues that give the church reason for existence, or if it is apologetic or uncertain in tone, that same attitude will be registered in the minds of the church members and they will become lukewarm, if not uninformed, with regard to the church's tenets, and there will be built up in the popular mind a feeling that ours is a church without any distinctive mission and purpose, and all promotive efforts will be received with a sense of impatience at the thought of building up another needless sect for the further division and weakening of Protestantism. It is conceivable that much of the denominational instruction can be imparted by means of instruction classes, and certainly much of it can be done most effectively by that means, but no other means can take the place of the pulpit for the instilling into the hearts of the church people a sense of the denomination's worthwhileness and a boldness of loyalty in its behalf. And certainly there is no other way quite so effective for impressing the unchurched folk with a feeling of the importance and desirability of the church's message and mission. Without a pulpit courageous and outspoken in behalf of the church's plea, it is impossible to build up in the mind of the church constituency that zeal and aggressiveness for the propagation of denominational truth that are so essential to denominational growth, and consequently to kingdom building. It is therefore difficult to see how the pulpit can be silent or apologetic in matters of denominational instruction. There would seem to be no other course open to it but to "preach the doctrine" that all who will may hear and believe, if the ministry is to discharge in a worthy way the responsibility resting upon it. It is not a question of "Can we?" we must. But we may legitimately ask, How it can be done in the most effective and satisfactory manner.

At this point there may be wide difference of opinion, but we give our own views. First, Brethren doctrine should be preached without apology, but in a spirit tempered with Christian charity and with a proper regard for the rights of others to differ from us. We do not think it is proper, in fact, we think it weakens the cause, to introduce a doctrinal sermon with a defense for the preaching of it. The truth of the Gospel does not need apology, and the people have no right to demand it. Nor will they demand it; in fact, it will seldom occur to one's hearers that the preaching of Brethren doctrine from a Brethren pulpit is anything strange or unusual, unless the preacher himself suggests it. They will usually take it as the thing to be expected.

Second, Brethren doctrinal sermons should be constructive and positive, and not negative and offensive. Positive instruction is much more kindly received than negative attack. It pays better to try to make the doctrines meaningful and vital rather than to attempt to prove the erroneousness of all other views. The old-time, bitter, forensic spirit does not harmonize with the present day sense of the fitness of things, and it is folly to attempt to revive it. He defeats his own ends who attempts it.

Brethren doctrinal notes should be sounded frequently, by way of illustration or reference in the regular sermons from Sunday to Sunday, so that there will be built up in the public mind and kept fresh in its consciousness the fact that a Brethren pulpit stands for Brethren doctrines and that frequent reference to them is as much to be expected as it is to find apples on an apple tree in the summer time. The public is not accustomed to hearing much about distinctive Brethren practices, and the fault is ours who have been doing the preaching and have been either studiously avoiding or thoughtlessly neglecting the many opportunities to make happy reference to or effective emphasis of some Brethren teaching. That is not as it should be. It ought to be the usual thing rather than the unusual, to hear baptism and feetwashing and the love feast and the anointing and non-resistance and non-swearing, and the like, favorably spoken of from Brethren pulpits. And only when Brethren audiences become accustomed to hearing frequent mention and emphasis of such subjects will the church have a chance to come into its own.

There ought to be at least annual periods of intensive instruction in Brethren doctrine from the pulpit. There are various ways in which this may be accomplished. Sometimes a series of Sunday morning sermons seems advisable. Sometimes a series of week-night sermons fits into the situation. It is quite a common practice, and most commendable, to preach such a series preceding the observance of the communion service. Sometimes the week preceding Easter lends itself to a series of such sermons, especially on certain subjects connected with Passion week. To him who is

Pausing by the Wayside

We are soon to gather at Winona Lake, apart from the rushing cares of our routine life and a spiritual challenge comes to each one of us to make this the wayside where Christ will pass by and bestow upon our distressed souls a great blessing of refreshing and renewal of confidence and power. Aye, and may it be also a time of heart-searching and of prayer for forgiveness and cleansing. For let us not go there puffed up and self-deceived; we have been very unworthy vessels for the Master's service; we have been self-willed, self-dependent and proud; we have been blind to opportunities of service, and all too much have we allowed our lives to be absorbed in worldliness. In a thousand ways we have come amiss in consecration, in vision and in service. Let us humble ourselves in repentance and confession, and implore divine mercy that the Lord Jesus may make our Conference his passing way.

We read that "it came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the wayside begging; and hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant. And they told him that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by. And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me." And as the sympathizing Savior passed this poor beggar at the wayside and heard the cry of the needy soul, he had compassion on him, stopped to speak to him and to relieve him of the burden of his blindness. And shall we not put ourselves in the place of the blind man, keenly conscious of spiritual infirmities, and humbly and earnestly petitioning our Lord to have mercy on us? He will find us by the wayside, and if we tarry there, and mete out to us each one according to our need.

He is ever ready to meet the needs of the sons of men wherever and in whatever situation he finds them calling sincerely upon his name. And for those who remain at home, as for those who shall tarry at Winona, this may be made the occasion when Jesus will pass by. As another has said, "Jesus is ever passing by as we tarry by the wayside of life. Some have been very conscious of him as the Great Physician, having found healing in his presence. Not a few have cried unto the Lord in their sorrow and have found in him the Great Comforter. Others have lifted up their sin-burdened souls unto the Savior in faith, and have received redemption through his blood. Many others have been beset by the cares and anxieties of life, and have learned that he is still the Great Master of the wind and wave. Some are now calling upon him for mercy and seeking his salvation through confirmation. Many others have been very careless and indifferent, disregarding the claims of the Lord of life and death. To one and to all may the consciousness of his presence be especially near and real as we take opportunity to pause by the wayside." But may this meeting at Winona be in a very special way a time when we shall pause by the wayside and call upon our Savior and our God for bestowal of vision, the impartation of life and the endowment of power.

The secretary of the Southern California district conference gives us a second extended installment of the minutes of their recent meeting at Long Beach, concerning which we made comment last week.

Dr. W. S. Bell, president of the Brethren Publishing Board, was a recent caller at the editor's office. During his short stay at his home in Ashland, he preached in Dr. Bame's pulpit, during the latter's absence in evangelistic work at New Troy, Michigan.

A post card from the Grissos, who are making their way from Sunnyside, Washington, to Lanark, Illinois and then to National Conference, informs us that they are seeing the sights in the Yellowstone National Park and other points of interest along the way.

We are printing in this issue a statement concerning the personnel of the Winona Bible Conference speakers, and some of the special feature programs. Some of our people are in the habit of attending this conference and the management claims that this year's program is to be an especially strong one. The dates are August 16 to 25. Following that conference, beginning on Monday evening, August 26, our own General Conference will convene.

Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, writes a note to let us know that they are still active and making progress in the Lord's work at that place. They have recently enjoyed an evangelistic meeting with Brother and Sister Thomas Presnell and Mrs. Coons as their special workers. Portis is Brother Presnell's home and we understand he was warmly received. One made the confession and was baptized, making a total of eight additions since the first of the year.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives us his annual report this week, and it shows an encouraging support on the part of the schools of the brotherhood. In a letter to the editor he says, there were "over 200 more White Gifts this year than last, and yet twenty churches withheld all reports, totalling $300 that they sent us last year. The Mid-west district reported one hundred per cent with a nice increase this year." He also states that the only other White Gift not previously reported is $14.47 from Kittanning, Pennsylvania. This annual report shows what the Association is doing with its money. It is doing a great work and fully deserves the confidence that the gifts indicate.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, says vacations and hot weather are slowing up the attendance temporarily. He tells of a visit to McLouth, Kansas, where he finds our group of Brethren worshipping together with the "Conservative" group in harmony. He preached for them on one Sunday. Brother Wood is giving attention to the gathering of isolated members into his church and we believe he is wise in so doing. We have not generally given sufficient attention to this kind of work, and because of our negligence we have lost many who with proper attention might have been held to the Brethren faith, though compelled to live apart from the fellowship of any congregation.

Pastors and other church leaders who want to do one thing which more than another will help to build up a spirit of comradeship that will make for loyalty, peace and cooperation and brighten the promise of the church's future, should encourage their people to go to National Conference regularly and in large numbers. Nothing makes for the spirit of unity and mutual concern like fellowshiping often together and sharing one another's spiritual ideals and purposes, are men are led to do at such gatherings. It helps to draw folks together in a sort of family spirit, making them feel that they belong to each other, that their interests are one. When that sort of a spirit prevails, it is surprising what people will do for one another, and with what oneness of purpose and self-forgetfulness they will work together for the advancement of the kingdom of God. The building up of a great denominational fellowship is the finest thing that can result from these national gatherings. Let us make this coming conference a success from the attendance standpoint.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother Lowman of Portis, Kansas, asks prayer that they "may be faithful in the spread of God's word in their mid-western field."

Pray for the evangelistic campaign at New Troy, Ohio, where Dr. Charles A. Bame is preaching the Word.

Pray that God may be allowed to work out his will in the coming National Conference at Winona.

Dr. C. F. Yoder requests prayer for our mission work in the Argentine, that they may be enabled in some way to extend the Gospel to the many needy places, also for the promising seminary students, that they may "develop into able and permanent workers."

How a Church Can Get the Building It Needs

By Henry Edward Tralle

Any church can get the building it needs, if it first understands just what it needs and really wants it, and then adopts the proper procedure.

First, a church must understand what are its real building needs. This can come about through the reading of articles on the subject, through the reading of such books as "Building for Religious Education," through the suggestion of leaders in religious education, and through the inspection of some of the newer, better church buildings.

There are some pastors and church officials that have not yet discovered that a church building that consists only of an auditorium, or of an auditorium with a basement underneath, or of an auditorium and one or two rooms in the rear, is as much out of date as a horse and buggy.

The horse and buggy were extremely valuable in their day, but their day is past. So the one-room church building was a great thing in its day, but its day is past. Just as the horse and buggy has been displaced by the automobile, so must the one-room church building be displaced by a building with many rooms.

The church building of the church that has realized and met its building needs with a view to the spiritual demands of the age in which we live has in it from ten to one hundred rooms, according to the size and location and program and vision of the organization whose program it is intended to house. All these rooms are of standard schoolhouse construction, with plastered partitions and single hinged doors.

The church building of today has a room in which to preach and worship, one or more rooms for social uses, as many smaller assembly-rooms as there are departments in the church school, as many classrooms as there are classes to be accommodated, and suitable executive offices and toilet rooms and coat-rooms.

Second, a church must adopt the most approved procedure in realizing its needs. The best procedure, as the experiences of many churches in securing satisfactory building results have shown, is the following:

(1) Survey the community. Collect significant data. Ascertain the spiritual needs, and learn to what extent these are being met. Estimate the future growth of the community and the church.

(2) Establish a program of activities. Evaluate in the light of the general experience the local factors as disclosed in the survey, and determine the probable future sizes of the various organizations within the church. This should be done through a process of group thinking, in consultation with all the heads of all the departments and organizations.

(3) Draw plans around the program of activities, so that the building will fit the particular needs of this particular church. Revise plans until it is agreed that they provide an adequate solution of the building problem.

(4) Adopt one of the ten most approved methods of raising money for a building project, and launch and carry through to completion a campaign for funds, usually with expert assistance from the outside. Now that the problem has been solved, and the house has been built on paper, more money can be raised and with less effort than if the campaign for funds had come earlier.

(5) Authorize working drawings and specifications with a view to receiving bids. Limit the number of bidders. Invite from three to five competent, reliable contractors to present bids, and award the contract to the lowest bidder.

(6) Keep the building project before the members of the congregation and of the community, reporting to them progress from time to time. Make much of dedication services. Handle the whole building project in such a way that the church will pass through an uplifting educational and spiritual experience, and will assume a new position of importance and usefulness in the community and in the world.

Third, a church must employ competent expert assistance. The development of a building project, even in a small church, constitutes a complex and difficult problem that can be solved in a satisfactory way only by experts.

The pastor of the church and the members of the building committee are at the best but amateurs in the solving of such problems. Some church-building projects have gone far astray because the pastor mistakenly assumed that he knew exactly what the church needed and foolishly thought he knew how to draw plans.

Every church, whether in remodeling or in new construction, needs the expert assistance of an educational adviser in the solution of its building problem. This professional consultant will save the church time and money, and, above all, will save it from making tragic mistakes that cannot be remedied later.

The services of this professional consultant usually cost the church nothing at all, because his fee will be deducted from that of the architect on the ground that he saves the architect as well as the church time and money and worry.

If the church would obtain the most satisfactory results, it should call in the consultant before employing an architect at all. The architect will not be needed until the survey has been made and the program of activities has been established. Any plans that are drawn before these two preliminary steps are taken will be more harmful than helpful.

When an architect is employed, he should be the best available. It is poor economy to employ an architect because he is willing to work for a reduced fee. He will

INTRODUCING DR. TRALLE

Dr. Henry E. Tralle was met by the editor at the recent Ohio State Convention of the Council of Religious Education where he was a lecturer on church architecture as applied to the needs of present day religious education. Besides hearing his lectures, we were privileged to have a personal conference with Dr. Tralle and learned much of his remarkably successful experience the country over as a consultant in church building programs. He is at home in most any phase of the field of religious education, but he is an expert in that which has to do with building and equipment. And believing that this phase of our denominational work is in need of some expert advice, we are glad to introduce Dr. Tralle to our constituency through these columns and feel that we are doing our brotherhood a service in directing our pastors and other church leaders to one who is well qualified to counsel them in regards to religious educational architecture. He has been equally helpful in the building of small churches as in large, in remodeling as in building new. He is one of the authors of the books, "Planning Church Buildings" and "Building for Religious Education." Any one wishing a copy of one of these books or to consult Dr. Tralle, may address him at Hudson View Gardens, Pinehurst Avenue, New York City.

cost the church far more than he will save it.

When any architect is willing to serve a church for less than the standard fee, it is either because he has failed to make good as an architect or because he is too young and inexperienced to give the church a satisfactory result.

In choosing an architect, a church should choose one who has had successful experience in planning and designing churches of the newer type that provide for religious education and Christian recreation as well as for preaching and worship.

The Sin for Which There is No Forgiveness, or the Unpardonable Sin

(A sermon delivered by Rev. C. C. Collins, Pastor of the First Brethren Church, Mt. Pleasant Pennsylvania, Sunday evening, March 24th.)

Bible Proofs

May we now turn to the New Testament? I will try and give you a few passages so that you may study the characters of those who have committed the Sin for which God says, "I do not say that ye should pray for it." In the 12th chapter of Matthew the 31st verse we find, "Wherefore I say unto you, all manners of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men," and again we read in the third chapter of Mark's Gospel the 29th and 30th verses, "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Spirit hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation: but they say he hath an unclean spirit." Brothers and sisters, if you will take the Scripture and study its contents you will see the class of people that Jesus is addressing. He is addressing the Pharisees, the Scribes and lawyers, the most devoutly religious people of his day. They were so devout they rejected the ministry God gave to preach to them. For John was sent to bring the light, to give the knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins (Luke 1:77). And friends, remember this one thing, John was faithful to his commission. He introduced Jesus Christ as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world (John 1:19). John's ministry was not to the dispersion nor to the publicans and sinners, but he was sent to the people of God. And this verse distinctly tells us "to give the knowledge of salvation unto his people." But the saddest verse that we find in the Bible that refers to these people is found in the seventh chapter of St. Luke's Gospel the thirtieth verse, "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected councils of God against themselves, being not baptized of him (John). Do not pass this verse hurriedly but let it sink into our hearts. It says that the lawyers rejected, 'the councils of God against themselves, being not baptized of John.' John's ministry was a ministry of repentance; none was exempt, all were classed in the sinner's family, and when John came thundering the Gospel of Repentance under the great commission of God, these Pharisees, Scribes and lawyers were so devoutly religious that they judged themselves to be righteous, needing no repentance. To accept John's ministry they must lay down their pre-conceived ideas and accept God's divine relation through his 'Baptist' minister. This was maliciously, deliberately, willingly, personally rejected. And rejecting this Gospel of Repentance they turn back and became as Cain, children of the Wicked one. So Jesus can distinctly and truthfully say of them, 'Ye are of your father, the Devil.' He could not say this of them until they had rejected the councils of God against themselves, and when doing this they could not see anything in the blessed Son of God but that which was evil.

Calling Sinners of Repentance

When they found Jesus eating with Publicans and sinners, they said to his disciples, "How is it that your Master eats with Publicans and sinners and those who wash not their hands?" But Jesus replied, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." When they had denied the fact that they were sinners, they had neither part nor lot in the plan of redemption, and you will notice in the Bible that your blessed Master never spoke a kind word to these people. They were to him, children of the Wicked One, hypocrites, deceivers, shutting up the Kingdom of heaven against themselves and refusing to enter. Once they rejected this council against themselves they looked upon Jesus as doing his work through Beelzebub, the prince of devils. It was to this class of people that Jesus said, "All manner of sins shall be forgiven, but he that blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness." This they did when they refused John's ministry, and called the ministry of Jesus Christ that of Beelzebub. So this describes the class that the apostle says, "I do not say that ye should pray for it."

Difficult Texts

May we turn again in the Scripture at this time to Hebrews 6:45, 6? Here you find the apostle describing a people who were enlightened, who had tasted of the Heavenly Gift, who were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, who had tasted of the good Word of God, and the powers of the World to come. Of them he says, "If they fall away it will be impossible to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to open shame."

Thousands of Gods' children have been perplexed over this Scripture. I believe I know some who are in a lunatic asylum because these Scriptures were misdirected into other channels, and the enemy took advantage of the physical and mental understanding. But let us notice very carefully this class of people. Please mark the statement—they were enlightened; they had tasted of the Heavenly Gift; they were partakers of the Holy Ghost; they had tasted of the Word of God, and the powers of the world to come. They had not only fallen away but they made it impossible for their spirits to be renewed, seeing "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to open shame." May I ask you to pause for a moment? What does it really mean to crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to open shame? Is it a backslider who falls in sin through the weakness of his depravity? I say, no, you can ask a backslider if he one time knew of the new birth and with quivering lips he will say, "I did, and I am ashamed to confess that I have disgraced the honorable and glorious name of Christ." But who is it, then who crucified him afresh? He was crucified at first as a malefactor guilty of high treason, one who had forfeited the citizenship of earth, as they claimed. He was not Caesar's friend, but a malefactor. Those that crucified him as a malefactor, guilty of high treason, recognized him only as the son of Joseph.

Twentieth Century Apostates

Now take the man in this age, after he has experienced all of these heavenly benefits and blessings that are described and who turns around and denies the Virgin Birth and the efficacy of his atoning Blood, what has he done? He has absolutely crucified to himself, the Son of God afresh. If Christ was not God in the Virgin conception, then his blood was as common as mere mortal man's blood. This is what every man claims who denies the Virgin Birth of the Son of God, and, of course, he must deny his sacrificial death for sin on the Cross if he denies the Virgin Birth. He naturally would deny that he bore the judgment of this lost world in his own sinless body, and in denying this he makes him a mere man, as a human example. Therefore, he preaches as a substitute for the Gospel, human atonement, which is the religion of Cain and also of the Scribes, Pharisees and Lawyers which Jesus distinctly states had committed the unpardonable sin and can never be forgiven in this world nor in the world to come" (Matt. 12:32). May I call your attention, friends, to the fact that wherever you find the sin of apostasy you will find it in rejection of God's Divine sacrifice for human redemption. You will find it in the rejecting of the blood and the Immaculate Conception.

May I notice still another passage of Scripture on this fearful subject, found in the tenth chapter of Hebrews and the twenty-sixth verse: "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, for he that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of Grace?" This is a fearful picture. But you will notice the one who sinned wilfully, had trodden under foot the Son of God, had counted the blood wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of Grace. How can there be any hope for such an one? A backslider does not do this. It is one who reaches the stage of apostasy, where he denies that salvation is in the merits of grace, when he denies the Virgin Birth, and everything supernatural, or of a superhuman provision. They make man their savior. They seek to lift man to God by human efforts, by education: they believe the world can be brought to God through intellectual knowledge. So they have gone the way of Cain and are running greedily after the errors of Balaam, and will perish in the gainsaying of Korah (Jude 11). Can you not see my friends, that our modern pulpits today are largely occupied by apostates? Anyone with spiritual illumination can see the trend of this age, rejecting God's plan, working out their own salvation, as Cain, as the Pharisees and Scribes, as the description of the Hebrew apostate—a fearful picture? They are given over to believe a lie, and to receive their error. They pity us who hold to the statements that are revealed in the Word of God.

May I close with this exhortation that we hold fast to the faith once for all delivered to the saints, which teaches that Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that he was buried, that he was raised again according to the Scriptures, and is now living at God's right hand making intercession for us? And let us hold fast to the vision of our faith without wavering for he is faithful that promised. But let us understand that such people who have maliciously, wilfully rejected the Virgin Birth, the atonement of the cross and the physical, literal resurrection from the dead, are gone in the way of Cain and will perish in the gainsaying of Korah. This is the Unpardonable Sin, "and I do not say that ye should pray for it," as God's Word teaches. May he save us today from this calamity that is falling upon the religious world as a stone of the desert? Rather let us hold on to God for those who are yet unensnared, that the glorious light of the Gospel of Christ shall shine unto them—and that they may see the look in the eye of Jesus who loved them and gave himself for them that they may continue on and on until at last they be crowned with his own self in the new heaven, a sinner saved by grace. Amen.

Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania.

A PASTORAL LETTER OF DOCTRINAL INSTRUCTION

(Rev. Claud Studebaker, pastor of the First church of Pittsburgh, sent to his parishioners the following letter of instruction, which the editor is taking the liberty to publish as a suggestion to other pastors.)

Christian Baptism. Its Importance. Does it matter how?

This is given with no spirit of criticism of other churches. We love them every one. When I review the 19 centuries of the church, I am not inclined to criticism of the church today, but to rejoice in the fine spirit of unity.

However the plan of God is fixed and eternal. The commands of Christ are freighted with love and life. "If ye love me keep my commandments. Our emphasis is on an humble obedience to Christ.

Most of the commands deal with the conduct of life. Two deal with sacraments of the church. Each of these are introduced, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth"—mighty words.

The insignia of every minister rightly bears the commission of our Lord, "Go ye, therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

He who says baptism is unimportant is in no controversy with me, the contention is with Christ. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." He was specific. It was understood by his apostles and practised in the early church until the 4th century unchanged.

The first change in formula and mode was made by Eunomius of the Arian heresy and was condemned by the council of the church.

Later in the history of the church, after unlimited power had been claimed and attained by the pope, at the council of Ravenna in the year 1311, baptism by sprinkling was made valid. Protestants do not grant unto the pope that authority, therefore we believe to be consistent, we should insistently demand that baptism given by our Lord.

This is written for those who care, and not to enforce our teaching on any. Many churches will receive members on any form of baptism or none. We are convinced the church is suffering from being too liberal. We believe there are many true hearted followers of Christ in all churches and would insist on proper Christian baptism if they knew it. The general tendency of man is to depart from the way of the Lord. I care little what men say about it, if I know the teaching of the word of God, I am content to obey.

The word used in the formula for baptism (Matt. 28: 19) in the Greek in which it was written, is a frequentative, and means to dip or immerse, the very etymology of the word means a repeated dipping, the number limited by the words of the sentence.

The Greek church so understands it, and in all the centuries has not changed the form. Practically all encyclopedias, Bible dictionaries, etc., tell very plainly that the early Christian baptism was by a triple immersion.

Various eminent denominational leaders testify to the fact.

Early church history as written by the church fathers of the first three centuries is a unit in plainly saying that valid baptism must be by thrice dipping as the administrator repeated the formula.

Ancient baptistries in stone are mute evidence of the same form.

The essential Trinity is recognized, the burial is into the death of Christ and in the likeness of it (He bowed his head and died). By faith we enter into death with him and rise to walk in newness of life. It was on the cross he dealt with sin and by faith in his blood, our sin is buried. We symbolize that faith by bowing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, by the power and love of the triune God we are made new creatures, born of the water and of the Spirit.

We are aware that this brief setting forth is very, inadequate. Our church insists that you take seriously all our Lord's commands. We judge none. Our message is broad, a whole gospel for all the world. May God quicken you to loving obedience in the Spirit.

The Holy Communion Service

Washing the Saints' Feet, The Laver at the Door, Cleansing, Coming to God, The Lord's Supper, Eating together, Fellowship, Must love our brother, The Holy Eucharist, Bread and Wine, Communion. Body and Blood, Life of God to us.

It is an unusual thing to commemorate the death of an individual. But the purpose of God in Christ was that by his precious blood he should purge the sin of man, therefore the high objective of his life was accomplished when his enemies crucified him.

All things were in his hands, he came from God and is soon to return to him. He is now finishing the work God gave him to do. He is the culmination of the whole plan of God in bringing righteousness to man, all the ceremonies of the past are fulfilled in him. He is to build his church, to be God's medium to brink all mankind together in one body, of which he is the head.

Therefore, Jesus knowing all this, at this vital time, he riseth from supper and began to wash his disciples' feet . . . This washing was not to cleanse the feet; Judas was washed but Christ said, he was still unclean. It was not according to custom for Peter did not understand it, said Christ. It was for the saints only and was made a test of faithfulness in the apostolic church, "If she have washed the saints' feet" (1 Tim. 5:10).

The disciples did not understand the significance of it at the time but would later. Blessing and joy were to follow its observance.

The very plain command, Wash one another's feet, uttered by our Lord fully conscious of its great significance.

After he had washed their feet they resumed their seats at the table and ate. There the traitor was revealed, out of fellowship and faith. He had sold his Lord, he could not come to holy communion, he was unclean and out of fellowship.

Everyone must be cleansed and continually cleansed if they are to please God.

The next requirement is, we must love the brethren. "If a man says he loves God and loves not his brother, he is a liar." But if he is clean and loves his brother he can come into a sweet and blessed communion through the body and blood of our Lord. We may enter into the Holy of Holies, where the shekinah glory of God is resplendent, where the eternal blood is on the mercy seat of heaven.

Few have grasped the tremendous lesson in this very brief sacrament which condenses the mighty flood of God's truth and purpose for man into a heart searching picture, an object lesson of cleansing. And O, how we need it today, the fellowship of God's family around the Lords' table eating in mutual love! O, how we need to learn this lesson of love and fellowship! It is all through the suffering Christ who died for us, that we come to a holy communion with him.

The cleansing vessel is at the door of the service, be sure to wash; the table is spread, eat in love; then you may partake of meat indeed and drink indeed.

The very heart of all the plan of God for man, distilled into a beautiful service of Cleansing from Sin, Fellowship with one another, and Holy Communion with God.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

CRIMINAL YOUTH

Eleven thousand two hundred and sixteen youths between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one years were jailed in New York City during 1928. This number represents 18 per cent of the total number imprisoned in that year. The figure is high. But it shows a decrease over previous years. In 1914 young criminals made up 20 per cent of the city's total; in 1916, 25 per cent; in 1920, 23 per cent; in 1923, 31 per cent; in 1924, 18 per cent; and in 1928, 18 per cent.—Christian Herald.

TWO GREAT FRENCHMEN

There is little doubt that future generations will record the names of two civilians as high, if not higher, than that of any military man, among Frenchmen who have contributed most to the maintenance and stability and welfare of their nation. During and since the war, Raymond Poincare and Aristide Briand have been continuously in the public service and have steadfastly stood for those policies which they honestly believed would make for the highest welfare of the nation. Just before the final completion of his victory in the matter of the American war debt, Premier Poincare felt obliged to retire because of a grave threat to his health. Briand accepted for the tenth time the premiership and secured a three months truce in internal politics in the interest of the settlement of pending international problems. These two Frenchmen have proved themselves great by the intelligence and singleness of their devotion to the welfare of their country.—The Presbyterian Advance.

A TACTICAL BLUNDER

The first pronouncement from President Hoover's Law Enforcement Commission has been made. Its chairman, George W. Wickersham, wrote a letter to Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt. Now this governor was the man who found Alfred E. Smith, proposed him, championed him, nominated for him, shouted for him, and on his ticket ran for governor of New York State and was elected, while Smith was defeated. We wonder why that letter was written to him to be read before the Conference of Governors' meeting at New London, Connecticut? How far can the sponsor of Alfred E. Smith, who ran on a "wet" platform under the protest of a large contingency of his party, be in sympathy with a serious, unprejudiced, unbiased, and comprehensive survey of law enforcement? Why should the "Smith Camp" be given, the least consideration by the present administration, or any commission appointed by it? The large majority of the American people do not want the judgment of that group. They are now beginning to feel a lack of confidence in the integrity of the commission. That act of approach to Governor Roosevelt was a tactical blunder. It is another evidence that many of the leaders on the upper levels do not understand the mind of the American people or are working in open defiance of it.—Western Christian Advocate.

RUSSIA ABOLISHES SUNDAY

A news item of the first order of importance that has eluded general notice is the announcement that Russia has abolished Sunday. This was to have been expected, but it is nevertheless startling. Russia is evidently floundering about badly without any guiding principle beyond human reason, and that reason in them badly composed. When one undertakes to make a nation out of human passions, and human powers, throwing off all divine sanctions it gets into trouble. The abolition of Sunday by Russia does not appear to be altogether from anti-Christian motives but from economic as well, nevertheless if it proves to be successful, which is not likely, it will be the worst blow yet they have been able to give religion.

Walter Duranty, of "The New York Times," analyzes its possible effects as follows:

"Whoever conceived this measure is little short of a genius, for it kills at least five big birds with one small stone. First, it will increase factory output 20 per cent. Second, it will provide jobs for workers eliminated by industrial 'rationalization.' Third, it will be a powerful weapon in the Soviet anti-religious campaign against Sunday and church holidays. Fourth, it will give 'more backward' countries like England and Germany a new idea for their struggle against unemployment. Finally, it will reduce overhead by the elimination of the weekly 'let-down' both of machines and man-power."

We cannot imagine how it will help a bad economic situation and it will undoubtedly tend to destroy the solidarity because it will keep the people from assembling together on a given day, and of course it will largely destroy the power of social worship. France once abolished Sunday but within our memory mobs marched the streets of Paris carrying banners which bore the words "Give us back our Sunday." The working people found it made their condition intolerable.

In the United States the Lord's Day is shamefully abused. Even the churches have "let down the bars." That is one reason why it is mistreated. And we may look forward to a nation without a Sunday unless we use it in a better way. It is not a day for sport, and gain, and self-indulgence, but the high day of the soul. It is the Lord's Day.—The Christian-Evangelist.

CAN WE PREACH DOCTRINAL SERMONS?

impressed with the need and importance of such instruction, there will appear many happy opportunities of giving it in an intensive and effective way. And granted the proper attitude and effort, we believe doctrinal preaching will usually be kindly received by the church's constituency.

As in all our preaching, love and deep sincerity will make doctrinal preaching acceptable and appreciated. Such characteristics on the part of the preacher will help him to avoid offensiveness of manner, undignified attacks on the persons and sincerity of those who differ in views, or anything that savors of unfairness, or dishonor, or unkindness of spirit. We do not believe the day of Brethren doctrinal preaching is past. Though the trend of popular thinking and preaching is against it, and so requires somewhat more courage to undertake it, we believe it not only can, but must be done, if our church is to maintain its distinctive mission and message.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments
(Keep with your Bible)

(Keep with your Bible)

Jesus taught us to pray, "Thy Kingdom come!" Since this is to be a part of our petitions, then, we have chosen the Kingdom Parables of Matthew 13 as the basis for this week's Worship suggestions.

MONDAY

Matt. 13:1-9, 18-23. The Sower.—The kingdom of God is not the product of men, except as God first sowed the seeds of the kingdom in the hearts of men, and caused it to grow and bear fruit after its kind. And the growth of the kingdom is hindered because men allow the deceitfulness of riches and the cares of this life to crowd out the good seed. May we, our Father, be as those who hear the word and understand, bringing forth much fruit to thy name's honor and glory.

TUESDAY

Matt. 13:10-17. Privilege.—The kingdom of heaven has been found, and will ever be found, only by those with an open mind, who desire to find it. Prejudice results only in the loss of what we already have, but if we truly desire to find it, we shall enjoy privileges that have been denied to many prophets and righteous men. We thank thee, Father, for the blessed privileges that are ours in Christ; may we ever rightly value them, with open minds ever seeking to understand them more fully.

WEDNESDAY

Matt. 13:24-30, 36-43. The Coming of the Kingdom.—To those who have been rightly instructed, the coming of the kingdom is no sudden or unexpected event. The good seed has been sown, and the enemy has sown the seeds of evil. As we toil on, we may watch both ripening together, and know that at the time of the harvest the evil shall be destroyed with fire and the kingdom of God alone shall remain. May we not sit idly by, but may we play our full part in working toward the time of the harvest. Even now the fields are white!

THURSDAY

Matt. 13:31-35. The Mustard Seed and the Leaven.—A smaller beginning than that of the Kingdom of God on earth could hardly be imagined: initiated by a despised Galilean fisherman and a few unlearned followers, in spite of the formalism and evil influences that have crept in, it has already become one of the most powerful influences in the world. In the same way it develops within the heart of the individual, until the whole heart and life is filled with the glory of the kingdom of God.

FRIDAY

Matt. 13:44-46. Treasures and Pearls.—People differ as to the interpretation of these parables: some say the treasure and the pearl of great price are the church, for which Christ gave himself; others, that Christ is the Treasure and the Priceless Pearl, to possess which a man will gladly give all. Both interpretations are good: as he first loved us and gave himself for us, so may we love him and give ourselves to him in loving service.

SATURDAY

Matt. 13:47-52. The Net.—If the Kingdom, as we now see its beginnings on earth, seems to include something of evil, we may know that at the end of the world order and the ushering in of the kingdom, the evil shall be purged away. Prepare us now for thy coming, O Lord, by cleansing us NOW from every evil thought and practice.

SUNDAY

Matt. 13:53-58. Unbelief and the Kingdom.—The kingdom of God was hindered in the day of Jesus because of unbelief. Perhaps it was not so much that his power was limited and he could not work, as it was that he knew their wilful unbelief and would not work. Today there is a curious mixture of unbelief even on the part of those who profess to be believers. Our Father, we believe; this day help thou our unbelief! Wherever thy word is proclaimed, may those who hear understand and do thy bidding, and may unbelief not hinder the soon coming of thy kingdom on earth. Amen.

1925—Forty-five states have adopted, in harmony with the "Concurrent" clause in the 18th Amendment, enforcement codes; Maryland, Nevada, and New York being the exceptions. The two latter had adopted such codes but later repealed them.

Summary

Only fourteen states ratified before Armistice; thirty-two states ratified after Armistice; Florida, November 29, 1918; twenty-nine states in January and one in February, 1919, with New Jersey as the forty-sixth ratifying state in 1922.

Contrary to all precedent, a limitation of seven years was put upon the time within which the Eighteenth Amendment might be ratified. Time actually required for first thirty-six states—one year and twenty-eight days!

If the "Wets" had been able to control either House in only thirteen state legislatures out of the forty-eight, they could have prevented the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment. They were unable to muster even this small number. As a matter of fact, only three of the ninety-six branches of state legislatures have voted against the Amendment. The total state Senate and House vote for the Eighteenth Amendment was 5079; total Senate and House vote against the Amendment 1265, a ratio of more than four to one.

The Eighteenth Amendment was the first to be submitted by a Congress in which the Senate was elected by the direct vote of the people. Rather interesting fact, isn't it?

The Eighteenth Amendment was submitted by a two-thirds vote in one Congress (1917), and was ratified by an 80% majority in 46 state legislatures. A second Congress (1919), enacted the enforcement (Volstead) code by a two-thirds majority and a third Congress (1921) by another two-thirds majority passed the supplemental enforcement act.

In the face of the foregoing facts how can it be said that prohibition was not fairly, justly and honestly won?

How long will the American people allow the anti-prohibitionists to "put over" their gross misrepresentation of the truth about the Eighteenth Amendment and the laws authorized by it?

Introductory Note

Four decrees concerning Jerusalem are recorded in Ezra and Nehemiah. The first decree by King Cyrus of Persia was issued B. C. 536. See Ezra 1:1-3; 2 Ch. 36:22, 23, and was for the restoration only of the temple in Jerusalem. Nothing in this first decree concerning the walls, gates and streets and moats of the city. The second decree was issued by Darius, king of Persia, between 521 and 486 B. C., see Ezr. 6:3-8. This decree did not determine anything new for Jerusalem but only confirmed what had been promulgated by Cyrus. It is important that we carefully note this difference between the two decrees, for otherwise they are certain to become confounded in our minds. The third decree was issued by Artaxerxes in the seventh year of his reign, Ezr. 7:11-26, on behalf of Ezra, which was a specific order, not for the rebuilding of the temple, but rather a royal commandment for the beautifying of the house of God in Jerusalem, Ezr. 7:27. There was nothing in this decree about the building of the temple nor about the rebuilding of the walls, gates, streets and moats of the city. It is claimed this decree was about 453 B. C. These three decrees were all concerning the temple in Jerusalem, the first for its rebuilding; the second confirmatory of the first; and the third for the decoration, furnishing, and beautifying of the house of God.—Dr. Ross, in Daniel's "Half-Week Now Closing," published by Revell's.

The exiles reached Jerusalem probably in the summer of B. C. 537, after a journey of not less than four months (Ezra 7:9). They first provided some kind of dwellings for themselves. This took two or three months. Then they rebuilt the altar on the old site and established worship there, before they laid the foundations of the temple. They then made offerings of money and materials for the temple. In May, 536, B. C., 7 months after establishing religious services and a year after the return the actual building of the temple was begun (v. 8).—Illustrated Quarterly.

Building Under Difficulties

The temple at Jerusalem was not completed until about twenty years after the return of the first group of exiles. Worship at a rude altar had been established, with daily sacrifices and observance of festivals. Prince Zerubbabel, the governor, and other leaders, gave offerings of gold and silver and priestly garments toward the rebuilding. As in the time of Solomon, materials and workmen were obtained from Tyre and Sidon, payment being made in kind. Cedar wood was brought by sea to Joppa. Three Levitical families were made supervisors. In the second year after the return the foundation was laid with much rejoicing. But the people of Samaria, some of whom were Jews deported there and intermarried with the people imported by the Assyrians to take the place of the ten tribes, heard of the temple project and requested permission to unite in the work. This was refused, and the Samaritans then did everything possible to hinder the work. As a result, bitter enmity continued down to the time of Jesus between Samaria and Jerusalem, and the temple repairs were halted. Fifteen years went by, and the people became most concerned about building homes for themselves. Finally, a young prophet, Zechariah, came to the aid of Haggai, and together they used the lesson of famine (Hag. 1; 9:11 and new gifts from Babylon (Zech. 6:9ff) to encourage the renewal of the work. This was in the second year of Darius Hystaspis, or 520 B. C. The work was again undertaken and completed in four years. The dedication took place in 516 or 515 B. C., with elaborate ceremonies, but not without some tears on the part of those who could remember the more magnificent temple of Solomon.

Even this final building of the temple was not without question. For Tattenai, the governor "beyond the river" (west of the Euphrates), came to Jerusalem and saw the progress being made. He reported it to Darius, who found the decree of Cyrus, approved the work, and ordered every needed aid (Ezra 5 and 8).—Church School Journal.

Love for God's House

Our love for God's House should show itself in little services until there is opportunity for great ones. If the Jews had not begun with an altar they would never have got their new temple. "It is one great danger of having splendid dreams, that they make us blind to present opportunities."

If we love God's house, we shall try to get others to go there with us. "Suppose one day you went out on Columbus Avenue and saw all the cars flying up and down and not one of them stopping at the white painted poles for passengers; you would say the management of the company had gone mad. And yet there are plenty of so-called Christians running to and fro to church that never think of taking a passenger with them."—Rev. James Boyd Brady, D.D.

If we love God's house, we shall speak of it with loving enthusiasm, we shall be working for it all the week and not merely on Sunday; our prayers for it will rise continually, and all our hopes and ambitions will center in it.

A Message for Today

1. Build your new altars on the old foundations, your new forms on the old principles.

2. The family altar should be set up at the first in every family, and the service of worship should be regular day by day.

3. There is a place for these in every life and in every community. There is a power in routine, in regular recurring services, in appointed hours of prayer. No one can safely neglect them. The psalmist says "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house."

4. The worship is far more important than the Temple or conveniences for worship. The commonest house, the poorest apparatus, the simplest forms will accomplish the purpose, provided they are the best we can obtain. Using the best we have for church and Sunday school proves the sincerity of our devotion and worship.—Illustrated Quarterly.

ON TRIAL

A Christian Endeavor Society Indicted for Selfishness and Brought to Court
By Dr. W. W. Bolt, Grinnell, Iowa

On a Sunday evening early in the new year, our Christian Endeavor Society had a trial. There were judge and jury, lawyers and witnesses and a very considerable group of young people, very much interested in the testimony and the final verdict. For, be it known, our society was the defendant at the bar. In spite of the fact that it had recently gone through the process of reorganization, enlarging and perfecting its work, increasing its attendance and distinguishing itself in other ways, it had been charged, in open meeting, that our society was selfish and self centered. The indictment continued that the society was indifferent to the church, which provided a meeting place with light and heat; indifferent to the church school, to which its members should belong; indifferent to other young people in the community; to the community itself, and everything except its own precious members.

The Court and the Court Room

It was a sweeping arraignment, and not without opposers, of course, but now the matter was to be settled, if not by a jury of its peers, at least by a jury of its own members.

The trial, that evening, was prefaced by the usual musical numbers and a devotional service, while the court was opened with prayer by the presiding officer himself. His Honor, in this instance, was a former college president and to his gracious wisdom and dignified conduct was due very much of the delightful interest of the evening.

The trial was given something of the setting of a court room by means of an elaborate use of screens. The boys of the "Pep Committee" had borrowed from the choir-loft a raised dais for the judge, having solemnly promised the sexton that it should be returned, later, to its proper place.

The Story of the Trial

Now comes the solemn moment when, after a whispered conversation between the judge and one of the attorneys, the case is called. There is a hush in the court room, as the judge rises to call the court to order, after which the indictment is read. The judge questions the attorneys to learn whether the defendant and all the witnesses are present, and, receiving an affirmative answer, the next step is to select the jury of twelve good and true men. When chosen, the jury proves to be equally divided between the sexes and none are challenged because time is precious.

When the jury is seated, the attorney for the prosecution rises in his place, at the left of the judge, to indicate what he expects to prove against our society. The first witness to be sworn promises, with uplifted hand, to "tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." By a strange twist of fate, which might happen in real life, I presume, the prosecuting attorney is president, and one of the witnesses a member of the Executive Committee of the society, but that does not cause them to forget, for a moment, their duty to uphold the law. If you have never had that experience it may be well to remind you that it hurts to have your friends assailed after this fashion in a court room. The witness is next turned over to the attorney for the defense and after his skillful cross-examination you feel somewhat relieved and hope for a favorable verdict.

The Jury Disagrees

So the case moves on. The witnesses for the defense are introduced and the case looks brighter for the defendant now. There

MISSIONS

The Lure of Portuguese East Africa

By George Albert Wilder

(Editor's Note:—Those Evangelist readers who follow up the work of our own missionaries in Africa and are acquainted with conditions there, will be interested in this statement by Dr. Wilder, prominent missionary of the Congregationalists, and published in the Missionary Herald. "Mr. Wilder was born in Africa of missionary parentage. He grew up in the Zulu field, and was one of the pioneers of the Rhodesia field, and for years has worked for the occupation of the Portuguese field.")

First comes the old call for help that Umzila sent over fifty years ago from his kingdom which embraced most of Portuguese East Africa, south of the Zambezi. In the early seventies he and his head men appealed, through a deputation sent to Natal, for missionaries to help his people. The call was repeated to Mr. Richards in 1880, when he reached Umzila's kingdom. This appeal, so far as I am aware, is the first and only appeal from a savage chief to the Christian world to send him missionaries. A veritable Ethiopian stretching forth his hands to God! Can any more alluring appeal be imagined than this? Yet after nearly sixty years only one station is found in that part of his dominions now known as Mozambique Company's territory.

In the year 1880 Myron W. Pinkerton tried to answer the call and his lone grave on the Gubula, right in the heart of the Mozambique Company's territory, cries to you for help.

The journeys of Jordan and Richards in 1889, of Bates and Wilder in 1888, of Thompson and Wilcox in 1890, of Thompson, Bunker and Wilder in 1892, up and down this great territory, and the more than a dozen journeys made by the missionaries from Silinda, all gave great information in plenty of interest and amusement throughout the trial, caused by the judge asking the witnesses if they understand the nature of an oath and constantly reminding the attorneys to address the court. And now the case is to be given to the jury and the judge carefully instructs them concerning the evidence and their verdict. The result is awaited breathlessly and, to avoid confusion, the jury is polled. When the first seven jurors have given their verdict it looks very dark for the defendant; the record is five to two; but the next five jurors vote for the defendant solidly. The final verdict stands seven to five for the defendant. The ladies did it. Perhaps they should be excluded from juries.

It was a very profitable evening for we saw our organization, ourselves, through other eyes and it was wholesome. This was evident from the unanimous and insistent demand that the society be given an evening to discuss the question. The quality of the evidence introduced, the testimony given could be enhanced by coaching the witnesses and by holding rehearsals, but ours was strictly impromptu.—The American Missionary.

regard to the land and its people, showing it to be ready for occupation.

In spite of spasmodic efforts at Beira and the recently opened station at Gogoi (Gogoyo), the large number of "best Christians" which the Rhodesian Branch has produced came from this Portuguese territory. Gangeni, the first Nda to be ordained to the Christian ministry, came from near the Lime Cliffs (Machemeje—Ed.). Kamba Simango comes from the region near the mouth of the Sabi in Portuguese territory. This ought to be a strong inducement to develop the lowlands. If Kamba succeeds, it will mean much towards solving the question of a self-supporting native church.

This Portuguese country in East Africa for special reasons supplies a very large number of laborers in the gold mines of Johannesburg, where many of the native miners are brought to a knowledge of Christ by our workers there. These laborers, when they return to their homes in the Portuguese lands, will be prevented from lapsing into heathenism if they find there missionaries working for their Christian development.

Again, the language in all this territory is mostly a mere dialectic variation of the language in which are issued the books by the Mission at Silinda; and, in point of fact, these have been in use in Mozambique Company's territory from the inception of the work.

Another reason why there is an especial attractiveness to the field in Portuguese East Africa is the fact that the land at and around the two stations there, namely, Gogoi and Lime Cliffs, is privately owned by the Board and its friends.

Jesus Christ came to a civilized, God-fearing people. A missionary to the primitive African soon finds that his converts have absolutely nothing economically, intellectually and spiritually to help them in their efforts to follow in the footsteps of the Master. "Take up your cross and follow me" needs demonstration to these savage converts. It is not enough for them that they have learned how to die; they must be taught how to live! Here is one of the most difficult problems before the African missionary. He must provide a home for the runaway girls, trying to escape the cruelties of the institutions connected with polygamy. He must have an asylum for the converts who are persecuted by the heathen chiefs and their people. He must have land that Christians may occupy without being subjected to the exorbitant and unjust demands which the foreign colonists and hostile officials are constantly making on the unprotected native population.

Privately owned locations on which the missionary can build industrial, educational and spiritual agencies, are necessary for the establishment of the characters of the primitive converts. Unless the Mission owns the lands on which the stations stand, it is at a great disadvantage. Even in the Natil field, which is blessed by being surrounded by immense government grants, the work is hindered by political agencies.

The marked development of the Christian communities at Mt. Silinda and Chikore is largely due to the fact that the Board is absolute owner of the lands surrounding these stations to the extent of something less than thirty thousand acres. Many missionaries and most public officials do not approve of a sudden or complete severance of the African from his own national institutions. But these well meaning objectors forget that there is absolutely nothing economically, intellectually or spiritually uplifting in the primitive African's life. There is nothing more economical nor sensible than to make a Christian civilized man out of the African just as soon as possible. As has been abundantly proved, there is no place where this can be so effectively and speedily accomplished as upon these privately owned Mission farms. The development of these then offers a most alluring field for the missionary and his supporters.

Furthermore, on the two farms of the Board, at Gogoi and at the Lime Cliffs, there are unusual opportunities for industrial training. Effective water power is at hand for running machinery and for irrigation. The lands are exceedingly rich and otherwise well adapted for raising rubber, coffee, tea, sugar cane, coconut palms, rice. The Lime Cliffs seem to make it possible to produce at a low cost lime and probably cement. Finally, such stations as these ought to appeal to the thoughtful giver, for they make it possible for the Mission to dispose of these lands to the converts in small individual holdings, a consummation most devoutly to be desired but as yet little appreciated even by the Board's officials.

All the foregoing opportunities, if effectively met, will assist materially in developing a self-supporting and self-propagating African church.

WHAT IS FAITH?

A Doctor under deep conviction of sin, visiting a patient who was happy in the Lord, said to him, "I want you to tell me what it is—this faith in Jesus, and all that sort of thing, which brings peace." His patient replied, "Doctor, I felt that I could do nothing so I have put my case in your hands. I am trusting in you."

Great light broke in on the doctor's soul. "Is that all?" he exclaimed. "Yes, that is all," replied the patient. "Simply trusting in the Lord Jesus. He has done the work."

From that sick bed the doctor went away rejoicing in Christ.—London Christian Herald.

18TH ANNUAL BRETHREN CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

July 12-21, Long Beach, California

Monday, July 15 (No Morning Session)

Afternoon Session

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions, led by Mrs. W. A. Ogden.

2:15—Address, "We Believe, and Therefore Speak," Rev. W. A. Ogden, Fillmore.

"Believe" is a very strong and definite word. Indicates conviction, a mind made up. As John Baptist, not as a reed shaken by the wind, but firm as an iron pillar.

There may be a great difference between "profession" and belief, that is, convictions. A man's life is entirely affected by what he believes. His faith is the magic power of his life. Sound doctrine is of no value unless it makes one sound in life and character.

It is the inconsistency between life and profession, or what we might call practical unbelief, that is weakening the church life and killing her testimony. Our religion is too flexible. We conform our religion to our life rather than our life to our religion. It seems apparent that in many instances we do not really believe the things we say we do.

In this closing day of apostasy, while the "spirit of lawlessness is already inwardly working itself," have we a right to expect a revival? (A plea for evangelism).

Yes! If we believe in two vital opposing forces:

1. The fact, power and destiny of sin.
2. The saving Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The fact of sin is death, the darkness of hell forever. (This doctrine has been prominent in every great revival of the past). Do we believe these things? Who is weeping over lost souls and crying with Spurgeon, "I wish I could cry my heart out, preach my heart out to you and at you." It takes twenty brethren and their pastor one year to win a soul to Christ in Southern California.

The Gospel (Rom. 1:16), i. e., the person and work of Jesus Christ, is, always has been, and always shall be the world's only Savior. (cf. 2 Tim. 3:15). To believe this is essential in winning men to Christ. There must be no compromise on a social gospel or anything less than this. "If you would make me weep there must be tears in your own eyes. "And if you would have me believe you yourself must be aflame with conviction which has penetrated to the very marrow of your bones."

We have every right to believe that the gospel thus faithfully proclaimed will "not return unto him void," but will be "quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword," and men will be saved. God is not yet through saving souls. If he were he would take his Bride home!

Do men abandon the Gospel of Christ because they do not believe it to be the power of God unto salvation? No other reason suggests itself.

The world without Christ is already sen-

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along as well as could be expected. Attendance is good considering the extremely hot and dry weather we have had during July and it is also reaching into August. Some of our people are away on their vacation, therefore a decrease in attendance from that of June. We plan to start to Winona on the 19th inst.

McLouth, Kansas

The writer and wife visited the McLouth brethren and preached for them over Sunday, July 28th, found an interesting and interested group of Brethren and Church of the Brethren people worshipping together, with a good Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society holding helpful services. It was a pleasure for me to preach to these people, several of whom I had met before. We plan to visit them again, in the near future and they expect to be represented at the district conference at Mulvane, Kansas, in October. While the weather was very warm, we had good audiences both morning and evening. We also called upon Sister H. S. Enslow of Ottawa, Kansas and she placed her membership with the Fort Scott church. We have more than 40 isolated, or non-resident members of the Fort Scott church. I for one believe in keeping in touch with all members and groups of members for our mutual well-being and encouragement in Kingdom building. The McLouth people maintain their organization, therefore should have the encouragement and cooperation of adjacent congregations. May we all try to do our best along these and all other lines of Christian activities. On to Winona. L. G. WOOD.

SOME DOINGS AT PORTIS, KANSAS

We are not writing much, but just a note to let you know we are still working. Since our last report we have held a two weeks' meeting in July.

Brother and Sister Thomas Presnell and Mrs. Coons were with us. The weather was uncomfortably hot, but in spite of this we had good crowds and fine services each night for two weeks. Brother Presnell is a native of Portis and was ordained to the ministry in the Portis church, so we were proud to have him and his wife to hold this meeting. As a visible result of their effort one young man made the great confession and was baptized and received into the church. This makes eight additions to the church in 1929.

Brother Presnell's wife is a very fine and talented musician and is a splendid help in a meeting. Our Sunday school and other organizations are functioning as well as could be expected during the summer months. Pray for us that we may be faithful in this spread of God's Word in this mid-western country.

S. LOWMAN.

tenced to an awful hell. Christ is a wonderful Savior. "I believe, therefore have I spoken."

3:00—Special musical number supplied by the Fillmore church.

3:15—Address, "The Two-Fold Revelation of God—A Fascinating Study in Redemption." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

On this subject Dr. Sale Harrison dealt with the truth of substitution with reference to Christ's work on the cross. He stated that two extremes which are leading people astray today are first that God created man for damnation and a certain number to be saved, and second, that God, being a loving Father, will save all in the end. He went on to say that God's justice demands holiness and God's mercy demands love. God placed the enmity between man and the world and it is not for us to remove it. God will in his own good time perform this. Man's condition outside of the redemption of Christ on the cross is death, judgment and alienation. God's desire for man is life, mercy and fellowship. These facts must be recognized in man's effort to worship God. If Christ's death is the consummation of redemption, all former teachings must point to the cross. God planned man's redemption before he created man, which is a manifestation of his eternal love. The fact that God's love originated in his heart before creation of man is a proof of substitution, see Hebrews 11:4.

Evening Session

7:30—Song service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions led by Harry Good.

7:55—Special musical number supplied by the LaVerne church.

8:00—Address, "The Greatest Exhibition." Rev. A. L. Lynn, LaVerne.

Brother Lynn, pastor of the LaVerne church, also a new man in our conference, brought a most forceful evangelistic message on the above subject, the greatest exhibition being the death of Christ on Calvary's cross, Luke 23:33. Picturing most vividly the three crosses, Brother Lynn first pointed to the man at the left, showing him to be the finished product of sin. This man said "If thou be the Son of God." There is no "if" about it. Jesus Christ proved himself to be the Son of God with power. The man on the cross at the right of Christ first railed at Christ according to Matthew's account, but suddenly changed in his attitude and began to worship Christ, rebuking the other man. This was a repenting cross. He believed in the Lordship of Jesus, which is more than some people do today. This was also a pardoned cross. He made his appeal and became satisfied. Man must either die in sin or in Christ.

Closing his address by centering our thoughts upon the cross in the middle upon which our Savior hung, the speaker graphically pictured Christ dying in our stead.

Tuesday, July 16—Morning Session

10:00—Opening Song and Devotions, led by Mrs. John C. Lienhard.

10:15—Address, "The Judgment Seat of Christ and the Great Crowning Day." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

The judgment seat of Christ," stated Dr. Sale Harrison, is for all believers. The Great White Throne is for all unbelievers. This judgment seat is not the judgment of nations. See John 5:24; Romans 8:1.

The original meaning of Isaiah 1:18, said the speaker, was "come now and put aside your reason," and not as is rendered in the Authorized Version. He stated that there is no argument, but that the atonement is a matter of fact. The modernist places reason as a foundation and tries to build faith upon it. The believer places faith as foundation and God supplies the reason. See 1 Corinthians 4:4, 5; 1 Corinthians 3:9 to end; 1 Peter 4:17.

This message was most heart-searching for believers, it dealing with the practical side of our Christian life.

11:00—Special number in song supplied by the Second church of Long Beach.

11:15—Address, "Standing Against the Foe." Dr. John C. Page.

Dr. Page, in his second address to our conference, on the above subject, stated that Satan was ever after the Christian to mar his testimony. Acts 5:3. Satan will seek to hinder fellowship with the Father. We should cultivate fellowship by taking time to pray and read the Word of God. Satan will endeavor to make us contented with the good instead of the best. He offers sensual gratification for spiritual satisfaction.

I. In standing against the foe, the child of God must first recognize the foe. Many are willing to have God as a convenience, but not as King of their lives. Our first foe is the world, which is organized with God left out. Second, our fallen human nature. When we recognize the foe we are made to lean harder on God. To walk in the Spirit is to rely upon him.

II. Informed Concerning Satan's Devices.

God's place for our first parents was in the Garden of Eden. Satan got them out. God placed the Children of Israel in Canaan; Satan got them out. God designs a place for the Christian which is "in Christ." The best experience for the Christian is fruit-bearing. This can only be accomplished by partaking of the life of Christ and constantly abiding in him. The chief work of Satan is to break this abiding in Christ. When a Christian sins, he does not cease to be a child of God, but ceases to be useful to God. The union is not severed, but the communion is interrupted. Paul says "We are not ignorant of Satan's devices."

The steps in the fall as seen in the 3rd chapter of Genesis are seen in the following 7 D's: Doubt, denial, deceit, disobedience, dread, degeneracy, death. Excuse making is moral degeneracy.

III. Put on the Armor.

Satan is potentially defeated. If victory over the foe is to be achieved, this must be realized in experience by putting on the whole armor of God. The original Greek for this portion of God's Word refers to strategies. In world warfare, the contending forces first organize a Board of Strategy, their main object being to outwit each other. This is exactly what the child of God is to do in his fight against the foe. We have no right to get mad when provoked.

Afternoon Session

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by George Momme.

2:15—Address, "Spirituality vs. Carnality." Rev. John G. Lienhard, North Long Beach.

During the past year, under the leadership of Brother Lienhard, pastor of the Second church of Long Beach, great progress has been made in the building up of this work. A few weeks ago our readers will recall a report from this church, giving a picture of the new Sunday school building. Brother Lienhard, a speaker on our conference program, brought a very heart-searching message on the above subject.

The subject, said the speaker, deals with the state of spiritual health. It is even possible for fundamentalists to be carnal, including members of the Brethren church. He went on to say that the object of an ordinance was to keep things in order and in contact. As a church we should stay with the ordinances and permit them to have the wholesome influence on our lives as God intended. When one practices the divine ordinances and continued in sin, it shows a very unhealthy spiritual condition. The evidence of carnality is seen in 1 Corinthians 3:3—1, envy; 2, jealousy; 3, strife, contentions and quarreling, 2 Corinthians 12:20; James 3:14-16; Philippians 2:3; 1 Timothy 6:4, divisions—twofold understanding, Philippians 2:2. There is great power in unity and in cooperation.

Passing from this dark chapter to the bright side, the speaker brought us to Colossians 3:2-17 and most clearly pictured the spiritual man. To put off the old garments is to forsake the things we did in our natural state.

The address was closed by asking the question, "Are we still wearing greasy overalls of the world, or are we clothed with the righteousness of Christ?" The secret of the spiritual life is set forth in Galatians 5:16, 17.

3:00—Special musical number supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

3:15—Address, "The Remarkable Jew. His wonderful Future. God's Great Time-piece." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

There is not one direct sign when the Lord is going to take his waiting bride home, but there are clear signs and conditions that will exist prior to his coming. Most of the Old Testament is concerned about this wonderful people. The central bit of geography is Jerusalem. Most of God's prophecies revolve around this city.

Referring to the expression of the day "I have been Jewed," the speaker showed how God's Word prophesied that the Jew would be a proverb and a by-word. The expression "by-word" is the same as the word "taunt" in the Hebrew language. Dr. Sale Harrison, in his attempt to discover the origin of the word "Sheenie," found that this word came originally from Russia, meaning "The Jew damned by God." It is interesting that this is not a Russian word but a Jewish word and a word used by God, meaning a taunt.

Turning our attention to the prophecies in Ezekiel 7:1, 24 and Ezekiel 36:2, the speaker showed how this prophecy begins a marvelous fulfillment of prophecy concerning the return of the Jew to his land. The bright side of the future of God's chosen people, the Jew, is seen in Isaiah 11:11 and Jeremiah 35.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions led by Frank Burch.

7:55—Special number in song supplied by Second church of Long Beach.

8:00—Address, "The Resurrection of the Old Roman Empire—Today's Startling Signs." Dr. L. Sale Harrison.

Basing his remarks on Daniel 7:23-28, Dr. Sale Harrison brought to our conference his closing address, on the above subject. Prior to the tribulation, he said that Christ will add all not part of his church. Hebrew word for "time" "times" and "times and a half" as given in this text is singular, dual and plural. Daniel 2 describes the latter age when the superman arises. When God has any plans, Satan always has his counter-plans. Christ said many false Christs should arise. Every solitary sin today of heresies is prophesied in God's Word. Satan uses heresies as counter-plans to God's plan. They are sugar coated pills, mostly sugar and hardest to get down. Compare this passage with Revelation 13. Daniel looks at the top of the image and goes to the bottom, whereas John in his account commences at the bottom and goes to the top.

The two beasts referred to in these passages refer to the Roman Emperor and the false prophet of the Anti-Christ. It is significant to note that the word "Lamb" is never used except to represent Christ's lamb of God.

Dr. Sale Harrison most vividly described present day conditions which correspond so minutely to the prophecies of God's Word. As an ardent student of prophecy, he has the art of presenting this subject in such a clear and concise form that even a child is able to grasp the teaching. We most heartily recommend this Bible teacher to other conferences throughout the brotherhood.

Wednesday, July 17—Morning Session

Missionary

10:00—Missionary Hymns.

10:10—Devotions led by Mrs. Elsie Rager.

10:20—Address, "The Brethren Work in Africa." Rev. Chauncey B. Sheldon (on furlough).

11:00—Intermission.

11:15—African Curios. Mrs. C. B. Sheldon.

11:45—Questions.

Our missionary work in Africa was very clearly outlined by Brother Sheldon, who is at present on furlough in this country, giving the history of the work from its infancy to its present state. We were led in thought to the marvelous workings of the Holy Spirit through our faithful missionaries, some of whom are now at present with the Lord. Many interesting incidents which took place on the field during Brother Sheldon's time there were related, which caused us to go away from this meeting deeply impressed and with a burden for prayer for the work. Closing his remarks, Brother Sheldon said that missionaries cannot evangelize Africa, but their great objective is to train native evangelists to go out with the Bible and reach the people. African curios were presented by Mrs. Sheldon, which proved most interesting and gave one a most vivid conception of actual conditions as they exist in that benighted country.

Afternoon Session

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by A. E. Neher.

2:15—Address, by Dr. Elbert L. McCreery, Dean of the Faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

Dr. Elbert L. McCreery, recently appointed Dean of the Faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, brought to our conference a most instructive exposition of the Epistle of Jude. This book, said Dr. McCreery, is most up-to-date, dealing with the situation of our day as explicitly as any book written in recent months. The speaker outlined the book as follows:

I. Authorship. II. Three-fold greeting. III. Purpose or object. IV. Occasion. V. Description of those to whom written. VI. Exhortation and closing warning. VII. Benediction.

Jude, according to Galatians 1:18, was a brother of James, a brother of our Lord, see Matthew 13:55; Mark 6:8. Christ's brethren did not recognize our Lord's position until after the resurrection. Though related to Jesus, they speak of themselves as bondservants. Spiritual relation has preponderance and prominence over earthly relations.

In the opening verses we see the preservation of the saints and the presentation of their Lord. 1. They are the called ones. 2. Loved—perfectly tense relating to the present state because of a past act. Goes back to the ages before Genesis 1. In this we can claim that the epistle was written to us. 3. Kept for Jesus Christ. We notice from verse 2 that mercy, peace and love come from God. We could not enjoy love and peace until mercy had gone before. This was given in super-abundant measure. The word "exhort" means to call to one's side, to help, to contend earnestly, to agonize. The faith referred to in verse 3 is not pleasing oneself but the body of truth. This is not received by evolution, but is delivered by divine revelation. It is not that which naturally man could compose.

The reason for the Epistle is set forth in verse 4, where the danger of the church is seen not from without but from within. Those in sheep's clothing. Who are they? First, they are ungodly, devoid or lacking reverence. Second, "turning the grace of our God, etc."—transposing of one thing into another. Setting over what ought to be the grace of God. Something else. Works over against blood. Third, denying our only Master and Lord.

In verses 12 and 13 we are given a seven-fold description of such deceivers. In verse 20, there are three things to note in the closing exhortation. First, building up. Second, praying. Third, looking for mercy. We build up by diligently studying the Word of God and by prayer. The Greek word translated "Looking" has in it the thought of looking with outstretched hands, expectancy.

The conference counted it a great privilege to have Dr. McCreery on its program and look forward to further fellowship with this saint of God.

3:00—Special number in song supplied by the Palomar Mission church.

3:15—Address, "The Madness of the Second Coming." Dr. Cortland Myers, Los Angeles.

Dr. Cortland Myers has appeared on our program for the past three or four years and brought to our conference two stirring addresses, the first of which was on the subject of the Second Coming. In his characteristic way, Dr. Myers pictured the madness of those who oppose the doctrine of the Second Coming. He said the Devil is not the author of the Second Coming, but author of the opposition to it. In almost every case those who deny the second coming of Christ deny also the virgin birth and his miracles. The madness of those who oppose the second coming logically leads to opposition of all fundamentals of the Christian faith.

The first class referred to by Dr. Myers was the madness of those who neglect. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" The second coming is part of the great salvation. The reason why they neglect this subject is because they do not study their English Bible. The man who neglects this great teaching hurts himself and his work.

The second class referred to was those who abuse it. "Coming night" does not mean coming tomorrow. Christ may come today and he may come ten years from today. We are not to give it up because it is thus abused. We do not give up the Lord's Supper, baptism and divine healing because these teachings are abused, therefore we ought not to give up the teaching of the second coming of Christ.

Dr. Myers then reverently spoke of the madness of the Christ who taught it. From his teaching on this subject, he was either mad, bad or good. Jesus distinctly taught his disciples he would return. With all reverence, Jesus Christ was a victim of a certain madness when he taught his return. Dr. Myers pled for this kind of madness in the church today.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions led by Jesse Hall.

7:55—Special musical number supplied by the LaVerne church.

8:00—Address, "The War on this Antique Modernism." Dr. Cortland Myers.

Modernism is not something new, it dates back to New Testament days. The Book of Colossians was written to counteract gnosticism, which is the same as Christian Science today. Vividly picturing the many false teachings in the world today, Dr. Myers stated that the real authority is the Christ of the Bible. Ministers of the Gospel are invested with authority from Christ to preach the Gospel. One reason why there are so many false teachings brought in the land today is that the preacher has lost his authority and preaches everything but Jesus Christ. People today want to hear Christ preached. The responsibility lies at the door of the preacher. A Prime Minister has to show his authority before being given power. On a trip on the ferry to Long Island, Dr. Myers met with a very eloquent and well-read man, who said to Dr. Myers, "I wish I could preach the gospel like you can—the evangelical gospel." His platform was that of a lecturer and traveler. He claimed he was hindered. Dr. Myers told him he could preach this gospel if he would give himself entirely to it. Three years ago his church became empty and he became afflicted and lost his message, his health and finally died. In the first place this man lost his authority which had been given him of Christ. "There is only one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus."

There is no salvation but by Christ. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." The gospel is good news. Let us glory in Christ and his cross and yield to the authority which he has given to all believers.

Thus Dr. Myers closed a very stirring and interesting address.

Thursday, July 18—Afternoon Session

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by Mrs. A. B. Cover.

2:15—Address, "The Compulsion of Divine Relationship." Rev. A. B. Cover, First church of Los Angeles.

Brother Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, speaking on the above subject, based his remarks on Luke 2:41-52. The significance of the statement made by Jesus in verse 49 is seen in that Jesus was voicing his relationship to the Father. Jesus is still asking and answering questions. He did what he did because he was what he was. Conduct grows out of relationship. In our relationship to the Father, are we doing things that he would have us do, was the question Brother Cover impressed upon the minds of his hearers.

3:00—Special number in song supplied by First church of Los Angeles.

3:15—Address by Harry Rimmer.

Rev. Harry Rimmer, scientist and evangelist, who is no stranger to our conference, spoke this afternoon on the subject of the voice of the past as it effects the voices of the present. Man has been here for a comparatively long period of time. Life is just a series of ups and downs. We see how history repeats itself by the way leaders, either individuals or nations, are raised up by God. God's policy is to honor any people who honor him. He keeps them in the limelight as long as they honor him. At this point Mr. Rimmer gave a brief review of the nations down through the ages. God's latest experiment is with the U. S. Omit the period between the letters "U" and "S" and it means the same. Experiment does not mean trying to find out something. To demonstrate by experiment is to show what God already knew. This may be his last experiment. This country had the right start. Today it sways the earth and who knows but what it was born for a purpose in the infinite plan? The civilized world recognizes the United States as the dominating factor of international affairs. The greatest empire God has ever established is this beloved nation of ours. What lies ahead? There are three possibilities. We may achieve progress and finish our course as God purposed, or fail.

1. Revolution. We cannot continue as a nation long on our present conduct. Referring to the signs of the times, Mr. Rimmer showed how homely virtues had gone, the word "homely" meaning attributes of the home. Fathers are noted for thrift and sons for spendthrifts. Obedience has left the home. The average young person does not know what this word means because the parents do not require it. Modesty is a lost art. The reason for these conditions is because faith is out of the public conscience and animalism is in its place. Chaos and revolution can only follow such conditions.

2. Rapture of the Church. We have nothing to do with this. We cannot hasten it or delay it, but it is clearly taught in scripture that when such conditions as already stated are prevalent in the world, the church is to be taken out of the world.

3. A Sweeping Revival. This is largely in our control. A revival not to be worked up but prayed down is what this country needs. When we testify and we begin to plead; then we obey scripture, then will we witness a sweeping revival over the land.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

7:45—Devotions led by Earl Hedrick.

7:55—Special number in song supplied by First church of Los Angeles.

8:00—Address, "Some Neglected Aspects of the Work of the Holy Spirit" (Commencing a series of studies on the Holy Spirit). Prof. Alva J. McClain, Los Angeles.

Commencing with this address, Prof. McClain for some time teacher at Ashland College, and recently of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, brought to the conference a series of most helpful addresses on the Holy Spirit, the third Person of the Trinity.

Some of the neglected aspects of the work of the Holy Spirit are, First, the relation of the work of the Holy Spirit to the physical and material universe. Psalm 33:6. The Spirit of God shared in the creation of the physical universe. God the Father is pictured as a Person. The word expresses the thought of God. The Holy Spirit is the invisible energizer. Son of God is the great revealer of God, Genesis 1:1-3.

Second, the Holy Spirit is the Author or source of energy and order in the physical universe.

Third, the Holy Spirit is behind the destructive process of nature. Isaiah 40:7.

Fourth, he is behind the constructive process of nature, Psalm 104:24-30, cf. Isaiah 32:12-15. The land is waiting for God to completely fulfill the prophecy of Joel, which began on the Day of Pentecost, cf. Ezekiel 1:4-10.

Fifth, the Holy Spirit is the great Artist of the physical universe. Job 25:13.

Sixth, the Holy Spirit spreads the work in relation to the Bible.

Seventh, in relation to Christ.

Eighth, in relation to man. 1. He strove with man against sin, Genesis 6. 2. He came upon man to fit him for special kind of service and work, as in the case of Joshua, Gideon and Samson. 3. He came upon man for a specific work. Exodus 31:1-11. No man upon earth can live for a single moment without the energizing work of the Holy Spirit. This is a tremendous work, not merely among Christians, but throughout the physical universe wherever motion is found.

WHEN PETER RABBIT TORE HIS PANTS

By Emma Florence Bush

One morning little Peter Rabbit's mother called him to come to breakfast. Big Peter Rabbit had gone to work some time before.

"Now, Peter," said his mother, "I am going shopping. I want you to take this pail and gather a lot of blueberries for me. Put on your overalls, and be very sure you do not touch your new blue pants with the pink buttons."

Little Peter Rabbit promised, so mother put on her bonnet, and her new red cloak, and taking her market basket went shopping.

Little Peter Rabbit put on his overalls, took his pail and started blueberrying. It was very quiet in the berry patch and he had picked a pail partly full when he heard a little sound beside him, "Grrr-rrr-rr," it said. Little Peter looked up quickly and there was little Bobby Bear coming for blueberries, too.

Little Peter was glad of company and the two picked blueberries together until they were tired. Then they sat down to talk and rest and eat a few blueberries.

"See my new red pants?" said Bobby Bear. "Nobody else has such fine pants as mine."

"I have," said little Peter Rabbit proudly. "I have a new pair of blue pants with pink buttons on them."

"Ho," said little Bobby Bear. "I don't believe it. If you had them you'd wear them."

Then little Peter Rabbit forgot all that mother told him, and he said, "I have too. You wait here and just see," and he ran home as fast as he could and put on the new blue pants with the pink buttons, and ran down to where Bobby Bear was. But little Bobby Bear had grown tired of waiting and had gone home, and little Peter Rabbit was left in the berry field all alone.

He picked a few more berries, but the sun was hot and he felt tired and sleepy, so he put his berries carefully on a stone, and crept under a thorn bush to take a nap. He slept and slept and slept, and the sun grew hotter and hotter.

By and by along came the Fox Boy's father. He saw little Peter Rabbit asleep under the thorn bush, and the pail of blueberries on the stone.

"What is this," he barked, and little Peter Rabbit woke up with a start, and jumped so that he caught on one of the thorns on the end of a branch, and there he hung dangling up and down.

"Oh, Mr. Fox," he cried, "please help me. Please take me down."

"No indeed," said Mr. Fox, and went on his way.

Little Peter Rabbit hung and swung round and round. All at once he heard a little sound—sizz-zip-rip-tear-r-r. It was the seat of his new blue pants. Then it came again, Zip-Rip-Zrrrrrr-Tear-r-r" and little Peter Rabbit felt the seat give way and he came tumbling to the ground.

He picked up his pail of blueberries and ran home. He took off his new blue pants and put them away neatly. "Perhaps mother won't see them for a long time," he said.

Mother Rabbit came home from shopping, and she brought a nice lettuce lollipop for little Peter. He took it out of doors to eat.

All at once he heard mother calling. "Peter—Peter, PETER!"

"Oh, dear," he said. "What have I done now? I don't believe mother has found out about my pants."

But that was just what she had done. There she stood with the pants in her hand, the seat all torn out. She just looked and looked and little Peter hung his head.

Then Mother Rabbit took little Peter's paw, and she took away the lettuce lollipop, and she put him to bed and tucked him in, then she got the big hickory stick and—little Peter cried and cried, and said, "Oh, mother, please don't whip me any more. I will be good."

Then Mother Rabbit said, "I took away the lollipop because you did not mind me, I put you to bed because you did not tell me, and I whipped to make you remember."

"I will never touch my new pants again unless you say I can," whimpered Peter, as Mother Rabbit mended them and put them away.

And I wonder if he ever did.—The Presbyterian.

IN THE SHADOW

MILLER—Nina Belle Miller, daughter of David H. and Della (Laufer) Miller, was born in Franklin Row, Cambria county, Pennsylvania, October 13, 1898, one of a family of four children. At the age of twelve Nina Miller united with the Brethren church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, and some six years ago transferred her membership to the First Brethren church of Johnstown. Her membership was retained with this group to the time of her demise.

Nina B. Miller and Charles J. Miller were united in marriage on December 21, 1918, to which union four children were born. The marital relations were severed by her demise on Sunday evening, June 23, 1929, after a brief illness of but one week. She is survived by her husband, three children, her father, one sister and two brothers, besides quite a group of more distant relatives. Funeral services were conducted at the family residence in (Moxham) Johnstown, on Wednesday afternoon, June 26, 1929, by the undersigned, assisted by Elder Charles H. Ashman, her pastor. Though holding her membership with the First church of the city, Sister Miller lived very near the Moxham church and worshipped with us and was teaching in the Bible school, hence the writer's pastoral service. Burial was made in the beautiful Grandview cemetery. Tears to the ashes and God rest the soul. DYOLL BELOTE.

BOOTON—Stephen Asa Booton was born in Synona, Iowa, August 10, 1881 and departed this life July 24, 1929 at the age of 47 years, 11 months and 14 days.

Mr. Booton was married to Miss Alice Jones at Albuquerque, New Mexico, July 11, 1892. To this union were born five sons and one daughter. William Stephens and Shannon McKinley are both deceased. There survive his wife, Mrs. Alice Booton and Ruby, the daughter, and Martin, all of Fort Scott, Kansas; Walter Sydney and Morris Emory of Los Angeles, California.

Mr. Booton had resided in Fort Scott for 24 years, where he made many friends. He had been of ill health for many years suffering intensely much of the time. All was done for his relief that man's skill and loving hearts could do, but the burden of disease became too heavy for his mortality and he passed on.

The funeral service was conducted from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas on the afternoon of July 26, 1929, by the writer. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Oak Grove Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

TO THE BRETHREN MINISTRY—"FORWARD MARCH"

By B. F. Owen

In this term there is action. In yielding to its command comes dynamic. In this dynamic there is sufficiency of power to overcome any obstacle and give to us ultimate victory.

This idea is not a vague assumption. It is logical and scriptural. Christ has ordered it—"Go ye." Break through the strongholds of sin and Satan, bringing sin-bound, destitute, broken-hearted individuals to the mercy seat where they will learn the ways of Christ and go forth to do his will. In the faithful performance of this duty we are assured of his presence—"I am with you."

There are no territorial bounds for the Brethren ministry. Christ orders us everywhere. This sounds strange in this day of zoning, restricting and grouping. Nevertheless our field is the world. Watch, lest we ministers fall into a rut in this day of indifference to Gods' Word and allow the great commands of Christ to rest unproclaimed and forgotten. Our message is for the world, and the world today is looking for deliverance from material bondage. Let us go forth with the balm that will heal and teach men that the only hope for prosperity and success is in believing and doing the things that Christ taught.

Brethren, the hope of the Brethren Church depends upon the attitude of the ministry. If we fail, God will raise up another group. You follow carefully the ideas of leaders in other denominations, and you will discover them emphasizing fundamentals that we have taught for years. It would not be at all surprising to me some day to learn that leaders in larger groups have decided to follow Jesus as he taught. Christ did not promiscuously give out these blessed truths like men cast meat or bread to dogs. He died for their life and so should we. Hence let us teach men everywhere the message of Christ.

Brethren, do the teachings of Christ possess you? Do they grip you? Do they fire you? Do they thrill you? Do they excite you to action? Do you feel the life-power flowing through your veins? If you do, forward march. This very impact and force will enable you to stand any storm and you will become more than conqueror through him who loves you.

OF Interest to Brethren

Here is an interesting case: A certain woman, in obtaining a passport from the United States Government, was permitted by the officials to "affirm" her support to the Constitution instead of "swearing" in the usual manner. Hearing of this, an attorney for the Daughters of the American Revolution demanded that Secretary of State Stimson revoke the passport on the ground that no "oath" had been taken. The Secretary refused to grant the demand, and replied that an "affirmation" is sufficient and conforms to "established practice."

The Daughters of the American Revolution are about to learn something which they should have known, and which even some Brethren apparently do not know: namely, that a simple "affirmation" is entirely legal in the United States for all those who are opposed to the taking of "oaths" on religious or conscientious grounds. Christian people in this country should thank God that they live under a government which recognizes the rights of religion and the conscience. And they should resist any organization, no matter how well-meaning, which tries to change that generous attitude.

The Brethren (at least those who are true to our creed which is the Word of God) have lived for two hundred years in this country, transacting business and dealing with the government, without taking "oaths". Other earnest Christians have done the same. And, by the Grace of God, we expect to continue without change. If the government changes its attitude, which is entirely unlikely, we shall say with the Apostles, "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29).

The gravest danger just now, in my opinion, comes from within the church, not from the government. Some are leaving the original position of the Brethren as declared in the New Testament, telling us that non-swearing is a matter of unimportance. The result is that members of the church, being uninstructed, are using the "oath."

The Word of God is our only guide in all these matters, and the Word is plain: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all . . . But let your communication be, Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil" (Matt. 5:33-37). "Above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, nor by the earth, neither by any other oath . . . lest ye fall into condemnation." (James 5:12).

This is the Word of the Lord, and by this Word the deeds of men will be measured in the last day (John 12:48).

CHILDREN or Battleships

President Hoover, always interested in human life, is making arrangements for a great conference on Child Welfare. Experts will plan the program and exhaustive surveys will be made to gather facts for study. Five hundred thousand dollars will be spent to prepare for the conference.

Private individuals have supplied this amount of money to make the conference possible. The government needs its money for battleships, evidently. This country is spending enormously more for military purposes than prior to the "War to end war." It's a good thing we have some private individuals who are interested in the children.

SUN-SPOTS and the Fourth Angel

A sun-spot with eighty times the magnetic intensity of ordinary sun-spots has appeared near the equator of the sun, it is announced by observers at the Mount Wilson Observatory. This new sun-spot is about 33,000 miles long, and will probably cause storms on the earth next month, the scientists claim.

Yet we should thank God that the sun remains as normal as it does year after year. Think what would happen to the earth if the outer crust of the sun would break and release the whole of its inner heat. Something like that will happen some day. Read Revelation 16:8-9;

"And the fourth (angel) poured out his bowl upon the sun, and it was given unto it to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat; and they blasphemed the Name of God who hath power over these plagues; and they repented not to give him glory."

Here is something to remember—God hath power over sun-spots, storms and the other great disturbances of nature. The Universe is not running wild. And better yet—God is able to deliver man from the violence of Nature. When that fourth angel pours out his bowl on the sun and its terrible heat breaks out upon the earth, the Church will not be here. Be sure that you are a member of the Church, the true Church, not merely written on some human church-roll. And you can be sure. Read First John 5:12-13.

MARTYR OR SNEAK?

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt.D., General Secretary, World League Against Alcoholism

Let wets boldly and publicly violate the laws to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment if they desire the American people to believe in their sincerity when they claim the right to break a law which they assert is a violation of liberty. Let them invite the police or other proper authorities to witness such violation. Let them submit to arrest, plead guilty in the courts, offering in mitigation no pleas save that they believe their liberty has been invaded. Let them accept whatever sentence the court imposes and serve such sentence without asking pardon or probation. Then they may convince some of their sincerity. Then, and only then, they may be accepted as martyrs to principle rather than as fettered victims of the drink habit or of the greed habit.

The furtive patron of the criminal bootlegger is scarcely a heroic figure. The flurry which has disturbed so-called social circles when a bootlegger's list has been discovered by the police has been one of the most laughable commentaries on the sincerity and courage of those who finance liquor criminals. The world salutes Ajax defying the lightning, but when Ajax hides between feather beds at the first roll of thunder, he deserves jeers and not cheers. The advice of a sneak and a craven is not likely to be effective with the people of a nation which honors the true sport, the genuine hero and the courageous martyr.

The recurrent outcry against the use of "spies" and "snoopers", so frequently raised by patrons of the bootlegger, is a confession of cowardice as well as guilt. The law-abiding citizen is not afraid of an officer of the law in uniform or out of it. The frank, honest rebel is honored even by the foes he is fighting, so long as he wages his war openly and not treacherously. The laws of modern warfare recognize the rights of insurgents, but they must be open insurgents. They cannot hide themselves in ambush but must openly display their banners and advertise their belligerency by their uniforms. To these are accorded the honors of war, even in defeat. They may be shot as rebels, but they will not be hanged as criminals. Thus far, the violators of the prohibition law have been conducting themselves as frightened criminals rather than as convinced defenders of principle.

PROHIBITION CUTS T. B.

Prohibition, by improving economic conditions, is helping to reduce the mortality rate of tuberculosis, Dr. H. A. Pattison, supervisor of the medical social service of the National Tuberculosis Association, said in addressing the young college women who are studying social conditions in the Charity Organization Society's annual junior month in New York City. The educational campaign against tuberculosis and the economic prosperity of the country, which makes possible the application of this program, are primarily responsible for the reduction of the death rate from this disease, he declared.

The disease took an annual toll of 202 of every 100,000 of the population twenty-five years ago and this figure has been reduced to 87, he said. Prohibition's part in the reduction of the death rate, he asserted, has come not so much from the reduction in drinking as from the reduction in the amount of money spent for intoxicants.

The money in the larger pay envelope that has resulted from our prosperity is being spent for good clothes, better food, better housing and the automobile, which is reducing the tuberculosis death rate by taking hundreds of thousands out into the fresh air of the country, he said.

The hunger for knowledge is easily satisfied; the hunger for wisdom is a higher hunger, far less easily satisfied, and few are wise enough to feel it.

Don't Believe All You Read

That may seem queer counsel from an editor, but really it is not, for editors are in a position to know that very much that is printed is not to be taken at its face value. In other words, there is a great deal printed that is not to be believed. Almost any editor would bear witness to that statement, if you should pin him down to telling the plain truth, as most editors are willing to do now and then.

It is not a confession that we are getting at, nor any startling revelation. It is not our purpose to be specific at all. We are not going to tell any tales out of school, or expose any particular person. We merely mean to throw out a warning, the importance of which grows out of certain experiences, and this we do for the common good. And "common" is the right word, for it is not any one particular class that needs to be warned against accepting everything that is read as "all wool and a yard wide." We are all more or less inclined to look with almost superstitious credulity upon what we see in print, and need to cultivate a discriminating, investigating, questioning attitude with regard to what we read, such as the Bereans showed toward the preaching to which they listened.

There are superstitious notions about which we sometimes read that should not be believed. We once had some untutored friends who became greatly excited over certain strange tales which they read in the "papers". Those tales made such ridiculous claims, contained such wild statements and foretold such calamities that belief seemed absurd, and yet they were accepted by these people with the utmost sincerity because they had appeared in print. "They would not be allowed to print them if they were not true," they insisted. Of course there is no such restriction on the printed page, however beneficial it might be in the interest of truth. There is very much nonsense to be found in print and we must learn to read with discrimination, bearing in mind that one cannot believe all he reads.

There is very much being printed today in newspapers as well as on billboards regarding cigarettes and tobacco in general that is not to be believed. A vast amount of the advertisements concerning this weed and its products are either maliciously false or suggestive of error, and are calculated to deceive and seduce. Dr. Gustave Stark, in the New York Times, agrees with this view when he writes: "The question is often asked, which form of tobacco is most harmless. There is no such thing as harmless tobacco. You might as well ask which form of alcohol is harmless. Tobacco remains tobacco, no matter how used, just the same as alcohol." Many of the advertisements about cigarettes are amusingly ridiculous, and it is only necessary to compare one advertiser's statements with those of another to be convinced of the falseness of them all and that smoking is injurious. One brand is advertising as not causing a cough in a carload, so that it must be that other brands do cause coughing. One brand is said not to irritate the throat, so that it must be that other brands do. One brand does not cause nervousness, and the implication is that other brands do. One brand does not injure the lungs, then surely other brands do. It would seem scarcely necessary to warn people of the falseness of such statements, and yet we met a very intelligent man the other day who strongly insisted that "they had learned how to make cigarettes that are not injurious," and when asked for his reason for thinking so he referred to certain propaganda material printed by the tobacco interests.

There is much jingoist propaganda about international relations that is not to be believed. Dr. Frederick K. Kershner in The Christian Evangelist says there are those "who insist upon seeing 'red' whenever they have the slightest opportunity" and also that there are "several newspapers in America which insist upon feeding us this sort of poison diet." Here is a fair sample:

The eyes of the people of the U. S. are turned longingly towards Canada and her gigantic unexplored natural resources and their hearts are filled with envy and covetousness. . . . after terrific economic pressure our neighbor now plans the actual conquest of Canada, and waits but the hour to strike. The United States has, using military aeroplanes, from Selfridge Field, Mich., and other military air ports . . . photographed, mapped and plotted for military purposes, practically every foot of the peninsular of Ontario and the settled portions of Quebec.

Of course there is no truth in it. It would seem too silly to be believed. The United States has no desire for the territory of Canada and our own citizens would as vigorously oppose any possible erratic effort to attack our neighbor on the North as would Canadians themselves. But there are those who have been greatly wrought up over such war propaganda, and it has been on the basis of such foolish statements that the persistent increase in armaments has been brought about. It is time we were taking with more than the proverbial "grain of salt" such jingoistic twaddle as is being put out on every possible occasion by our professional fighters and munition makers.

This extreme credulity toward what is printed is even more markedly manifest in regard to books. There is very much printed in books that is unreliable. It is not long since we were hearing a great deal about certain school books being written to give a false impression in matters of national history, the claim being that they were biased and calculated to deceive. Though the particular contention referred to seemed foolish and was widely discredited because of its obvious connection with politics, yet it well illustrates the fact that not all that we read in books can be accepted as true and unprejudiced. Some one has said, "Not many authorities are authors, and few authors are authorities." Now that statement is not to be accepted as absolutely true merely because it has been written and we are quoting it, yet we feel sure it points to the necessity of weighing and investigating what we read and also of inquiring about the sincerity and trustworthiness of the writer.

Is there then nothing that can be depended upon, nothing that can be believed without question or quibble, nothing that can be accepted as the utmost finality? No, nothing that rests upon human wisdom and judgment: Men can never be absolutely certain of his findings, even though he proceeds with the utmost sincerity and honesty. The full length of the highway of human advancement has been paved with mistakes and errors and corrections. But there is a Writing that is without fault, a Book that is truth without error and a Revelation that is final and on which there can be no improvement. It has endured the fiercest testings that the centuries have been able to conceive and nothing has been able to shake the trustworthiness of its authority nor the finality of its message. When men read it they do so with the utmost confidence that they have the truth and that there will be no revision and no improvement. It is the Holy Bible, the book divine. That we may read and believe without wavering.

An Evangelist "Friend in Need" Fund

There are not a few splendid, loyal Brethren people scattered over the brotherhood, who are unable to take the church paper because they are in hard straits financially. For some of us it will be difficult to understand how a person who is really interested finds it impossible to save so small an amount as two dollars in a whole year to pay for the Evangelist, but there are people who are actually in that sort of a situation, and through no fault of their own. Every week we get letters from individuals who are unable to pay for their paper any longer and ask us to stop it, or from certain ones who have been receiving the paper through the kindness of some friend, but that friend is no longer paying for the paper, and they ask it to be stopped, though they are interested readers of its pages. Here is a portion of a letter that just reached our office: "Please stop the paper as I am not able to pay for it. My husband is in poor health and has had no work since April 12th . . . Some good brother or sister sent it to me and I cannot renew." Another letter came a few days ago saying, "Please stop my paper till I am able to pay up. I have been out of work and have had sickness." Still another said, "I am sorry to have to do without our church paper, but I must ask you to stop it, as my husband is not able to work much any more and cannot pay for it."—But we need not quote any more, but simply to say that we have gotten more of such letters this year than for a long time. Our business manager is always willing to extend the time of payment to those who need it and will write him about it, but there are those who do not want time; they simply cannot pay at all.

It seems a pity that the worthy poor of our number who appreciate so much our church paper must be denied the blessing that it brings into their lives because they are unable to pay for it. But the Publishing House has no funds to draw on that would enable it to send the paper to these good brethren gratis. It occurred to us that there might be some generous-hearted members of the Evangelist family to whom this situation would make an appeal so that they would wish to send the paper to some friend in need. If it were bread and butter for some starving people that we were asking for, we are sure it would be forthcoming promptly. But is the feeding of the spiritual life any less important? We trow not. And there are others who think the same, and who in times past have come to the aid of some who were unable to provide themselves with their church paper. We believe there are still those who would be willing to give such aid if they only knew of the need, and that is why we are presenting the matter in this public way.

The regular price of the Evangelist is $2.00, but our Business Manager agrees to cut the price to $1.50 to those who wish to

---

A paper next week, but none the week following.

Brother Harold D. Fry reports fourteen added to the church by baptism at his Lanark, Illinois, charge, on the eve of his departure. It is a fine way to conclude his work at that place. He and his family and some other members of the church have started upon an automobile trip, vacationing and bound for his home in Southern California.

A goodly number of our pastors are now on their vacations, and some have been in or have passed through Ashland during the last week. Those who have come under the notice of the editor are Dr. G. C. Carpenter, of Hagerstown, Maryland, who with his wife were visiting in our city; Rev. Herbert H. Rowsey, of Falls City, Nebraska, and Rev. J. L. Gingrich of Third Church of Johnstown.

On Christian Endeavor page we have two reports that have been somewhat delayed in publication, but they will be of interest to other Christian Endeavorers, nevertheless. One is from Tiosa, Indiana, and the other from Carleton, Nebraska. Both are showing splendid interest. The former was recently organized, while the Carleton society is "evergreen." We hope other societies will yet send in their reports.

We learn from the Meyersdale Republican (Pennsylvania) that Miss Emily B. Gnagey, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. D. Gnagey of Altoona, Pennsylvania, is vacationing for two months in Europe and is writing very interesting reports of the places she visits. Miss Gnagey is a very capable writer and for a number of years was engaged in editorial work. It has not been so many years since her writings often found their way into our church publications.

From the Long Beach, California, church bulletin we learn that Dr. L. S. Bauman, the pastor, recently celebrated his thirty-fifth anniversary of ordination to the ministry, by preaching on the subject and text of his first sermon, "A Fixed Heart," Psalm 108:1. It was on Sunday, August 4, 1894, when the Kanemorado Conference (now Mid-west) was in session in the old Pony Creek church three miles and a half north of Morrill, Kansas, that the ordination took place, and Dr. J. D. McFadden then of Carleton, Nebraska and Rev. J. R. Keller of Beaver City were the officiating elders. The Evangelist congratulates Brother Bauman on these thirty-five years of very successful ministry and wishes him many more years of service for the Lord.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble reports concerning the progress of the various mission points and the activities of the workers in French Equatorial Africa. One of the things of outstanding importance is the attention given to religious education and the training of the people in the practice of the Christian virtues and the discouragement given to double living. Few pastors or deacon boards in the homeland would have the courage to exclude from the Lord's Supper those who have been living inconsistent with their Christian profession. We recognize the difference in the situation, of course, but it might help to hold the standard higher at home. Some successful itinerating trips have been made by the missionaries. Mrs. Gribble's ministry to the sick and wounded at the dispensary is a remarkable piece of service.

In a recent marked copy of the bulletin of the First Church of Long Beach, California, we read that Prof. Alva J. McClain has been called to the position of "Associate Minister" of that church for the coming year and has accepted the call. Dr. Bauman will remain as the pastor of the church as heretofore, and Brother McClain will, to quote the bulletin, "give himself largely to the teaching program which we must inaugurate this year, not the least of which will be a training class for Sunday school teachers. Our new quarters opens up great possibilities for our church in this city, and we must make the most of those possibilities." This is indeed a "great forward step" for this church, but we doubt not that the faith and consecration of the membership will be equal to the demands made of them. And it seems a most logical means of making the largest possible use of their new religious education building now nearing completion. The church's educational program, not yet fully worked out, is very ambitious and the possibilities of its realization are said to be very bright. We congratulate Dr. Bauman and his people on the advanced step undertaken for the coming year.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, says "the Brethren Church has lost millions of dollars" and then goes on to tell how it was done. His aim is to help loyal members of the church to conserve their wealth for Christ and the church, and the method he suggests is the annuity plan. Our people are just beginning to learn about that method and there has been a nice start made in that direction. He reports $9,200 added to the Endowment Fund by that means this week. This brings the total of the Fund up to $222,867.20. A few more reports of this size would show up mighty fine for the College. When Dr. Bell emphasizes the responsibility of stewardship, he touches upon a duty that is as vital as anything else required of the Christian, and one that is perhaps more widely neglected than any other. The progress of the church in both material equipment and in spiritual life depends in no small way on the faithfulness of Christian people to stewardship, and on a people that prides itself upon its acceptance of the "whole Gospel" and implicit obedience thereto, the obligation is supreme to meet the requirements of stewardship. It may not sound well, but we mean it kindly though surely—we think it would be well for us to talk very quietly about our "Whole Gospel" stand until we in large numbers are willing to make the tithe the minimum of our financial obligation to the work of the Lord. And more than that, when the Lord has blessed his people abundantly, so that they have left of the nine-tenths as they near the close of life more than is needed for the care and provisioning of those for whom they are responsible, they ought to give of their abundance to the Lord and make sure that it shall not be dissipated. And even those whose savings have been small, if such surplus is not necessary for the welfare of some dependent when they are gone, they could well afford to make an annuity gift to some one of the church's agencies. Read Brother Bell's article in this issue.

Keeping Our Distinctive Plea Prominent

By Freeman Ankrum

The Tunker fraternity in comparison with some historical movements is young. When we compare it with some denominations it is not as young as a great number of them. Therefore the question may immediately arise in our minds, as to the progress we have made. We look on either side and find denominations that are younger than we that have outstripped us in the strides that they have made, as far as membership is concerned. We cannot believe that they have any more than we and in fact we know of some that have less to offer to those who sit in their pews. The criticism is often hurled at our heads by our own numbers that we report as a Brethren church the same number or less of churches as were reported by the Statistician of ten or even twenty years ago. Reports of progress have been made from time to time. Are they reports of imaginary progress or was progress made in one section and were there sufficient losses somewhere else to counteract the gains reported? We are also told today that we are not founding churches as rapidly as they were started thirty years ago. This is also taken by some to mean that we have become decadent. However the comparison of the churches of thirty and forty years ago at their organization and establishment with the churches of the present time that are organized and have become self-supporting will not perhaps show a balance from the standpoint of numerical congregations, but will favor the modern church from standpoint of members and equipment. The demands of a generation ago were few and simple, a service one Sunday per month being deemed sufficient. Sunday schools hibernated in the Winter months and blossomed forth in the Spring time for a temporary show of life. Very little expense was required in the erection of the average church building, which in the main was rural. Donated labor and a few hundreds of dollars sufficed to provide a one roomed building and occasionally a few extra rooms were added for Sunday school purposes. The pastor traveled from one church to another, oftentimes forming a circuit. Very little money was ever turned over to him, but his membership made up in produce that which they were unable to pay in money.

Today the matter is altogether more complicated. Where one hundred dollars did the work a generation ago one thousand will be more likely to be the amount required today. Where a pastor could stop one Sunday per month and thus build up the work we find that with the pastor upon the field today and on the firing line every or nearly every Sunday, it is not always an easy task to build up a work in view of the many things that lure and counteract.

What excuse have we for building churches and establishing congregations? Have the two centuries that have looked down upon Tunker people looked down upon a distinctive and peculiar people or just another denomination that came into existence to eventually go out? If we are just a number as far as the churches of the land are catalogued, we are not entitled to a long existence. If we are a people different in that we have not strayed from the Word, we will not only be deserving of a long life, but it will be impossible for any force to shorten or terminate our existence as a church. If we are a favored people, it is in that we have been intrusted with a vital message. Sometimes it seems that we have shipped our oars and leaned back upon the claim that our pioneer elders have made, that we are a Whole Gospel People. While we do not take issue with this statement that has been repeated over and over again, a mere repeating of this phrase will not build for us congregations or convince any one else that we have anything different from some other denomination to offer.

It is not a compliment to any Brethren pastor for a visitor to leave his congregation and make the statement that his preaching is like that of all the other preachers of the various denominations. If we preach morality, other churches do likewise. If we stress honesty in business, Ethics, Philosophy, Psychology, History, Authors, or current events of the day, we are doing nothing that men of every other denomination cannot do. Perhaps we will still have to go back to the generation that has passed and sit at their feet to learn again from them. With all their failings they did not fail in that they had a distinctive Brethren plea. Few sermons were preached that they did not stress those things that made us peculiar as a people. They may have been accused of being argumentative and contentious over non-essentials but the fact remained that their messages brought results even though they often struck fire. If our forefathers leaned to one side in that they over-stressed the fundamentals of the Tunker Fraternity, we today have swung just as far to the other side in that we do not often enough touch upon those important truths. The mass production of the commercial world has entered our Seminaries and the standardized men come forth each to his particular denomination, no longer preaching a peculiar plea. There is evidently a quiet under-cover effort to remove denominational lines in order to bring about certain mergers. There are no doubt those denominations that could merge without any sacrifice or loss, but there are those that could not fraternize without the loss of all things that are held dear.

Surely the two centuries that have in their passing left a body of people who are respected by every other denomination who knows them; has saved us for a particular purpose. Yet if we fail to carry forth the message that it is our lot to herald to the world, another will be thrust to the forefront and the banner we have dropped will be uplifted by another. Even as God's chosen people were punished when they failed to carry forth his edicts, so may we be punished if we fail to make prominent that which has been a part of us in the days gone by. The punishment that will befall us will be extinction as a church.

We need not enter into competition with any existing denomination as far as organization and building is concerned to be assured of growth. From a standpoint of wealth we are far down the line. The one thing that will bring to the fold of the Brethren church earnest, conscientious seekers after truth will be a preaching of the Whole Gospel, not forgetting to keep prominent our distinctive plea. The ingathering may not measure as high from a numerical standard but from a standpoint of sincerity and earnestness they will be higher for us than perhaps any other denomination. As a church we have everything, barring wealth, any other denomination has, but we also have many things that others do not have. We have tried in times not far from the present to win people by stressing the things we have in common with other denominations. The thing we need to do is to stress that which we do not have in common with others. The public needs only its attention called to those distinctive beliefs we hold dear, to start it thinking and thought is the forerunner of action.

A pulpit is no longer Brethren that does not resound to the truths which include our peculiar and distinctive plea. Neither can it be called a Whole Gospel church.

Two Classes

By Samuel Kieh

"God who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," saith to us, "All of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you" (1 Peter 5:5-7). The believer's needed supplies are inexhaustible; it is written, "God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4:9). Jesus saith, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved by my Father" (John 14:21). Therefore "keep yourselves in the love of God, . . . in him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 21, 24); joy unspeakable and full of glory overflowing the hearts of both the keeper, and those who are kept. That joy awaits every faithful spirit-filled member of the Brethren church; every true child of God by faith in Christ Jesus: every believing soul for whom Christ died (See 1 Cor. 15:3). The unbelieving are not so fortunate, they "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone" (Rev. 21:8). A very undesirable future place or condition, (whether literal or figurative), for those who "know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thes. 1:8). "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (Mark 16:16 R. V.). Two classes; to which class do you and the writer belong?

Sir, We Would See Jesus--John 12:21

By Homer Kent

(Sermon preached at the Southeastern District Conference at Oak Hill, West Virginia, June 11 to 13, 1929)

The oldest cry of the human race is the cry for the revelation of a personal God, able and willing to forgive human sin, and to give rest to the human conscience. Job voiced it when he said, "O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his seat." Plato voiced such a cry when he said, "We look for a god, or a God-inspired man, who will show us our duty and take away the darkness from our eyes." The Jews throughout their long generations looked with eager anticipation for the coming of a Messiah, able and willing to meet man's deepest needs. In the fulness of time he came, and the fame of him filled the land. It was the saying of some who were against him toward the last of his ministry, "The whole world is gone after him."

During the latter days of his life, the great passover feast was being held at Jerusalem. People from all over the world were gathered together. There were certain men there, strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, who made the request, having come previously to a certain knowledge of the Christ, "Sir, we would see Jesus." In that request was the cry of the whole world for one able to meet the needs of a sinning race. But let us think definitely of the utterance of these words.

I. Who made the request? "Sir, we would see Jesus." The evangelist informs us that they were Greeks. It is not told us whence they came, from east or west, from north or south. Evidently they were seeking the kingdom of God. It is probable that they were Jewish proselytes. They had left paganism, believed, and had embraced the faith of the one true and living God. They were come up to Jerusalem at this time to worship at the passover. "There were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship." But we have reason to believe that; as yet, they had not found rest to their souls. They were not satisfied with the revelation of God which they had. They had heard of Jesus. They knew something of his works and deeds. Then they came in contact with one of those who was of his company. They felt this to be their opportunity. "Sir, we would see Jesus," they said. We do not believe this was simply a request of those attracted by curiosity. The deep emotion awakened in the soul of Jesus excludes such an idea. They were instead earnest inquirers. They were seeking God. They wanted to know the true way of life. Their eyes were in search of light. Their hearts longed for truth. They desired to see the Savior not with the physical eye only, but above all, with the spiritual eye. Certain Greeks, they of the noble race, came seeking Jesus. "Sir, we would see Jesus."

And note II. To whom the request was made. These Greeks saw Philip, he of the Greek name and possible Greek connections, and said to themselves, in effect, "He ought to be able to introduce us to Jesus." He knows him. He has been much with him. He is one of the inner circle. Surely he can help us to find a hearing with Jesus." And was not their reasoning correct? Assuredly followers of Christ ought to be able to introduce others to him. Those who are acquainted with him personally ought to be able to acquaint others with him. Those who have felt the throb of his great heart should be able to tell others of his great love. In fact, we are invested with this responsibility of taking men to see Jesus. It is the business of the preacher. In his preaching the people should see him. The preacher is commissioned to preach Christ. He should be constantly making mighty affirmations concerning him.

Early in his ministry a New England minister was delivering a message that had but little of the Gospel in it. One day he found on the pulpit Bible a slip of paper with the words, "Sir, we would see Jesus." He took it to heart; it was a soul-searching rebuke. He realized that Christ was not fundamental in his messages. But soon a new note began to sound in his preaching, and it was not many weeks until he found on his pulpit another slip of paper with the words "Then were the disciples glad when they saw their Lord." In the preacher's preaching and in his daily walk and conversation men "would see Jesus."

In the life of every follower the world "would see Jesus." The Greeks were happy in their choice of a go-between. Philip was himself an inquirer after truth, only he had come nearer the light. The first time he is mentioned in the Gospel history he is introduced expressing his faith in Jesus as one who had carefully sought the truth, and who, having at length found what he sought, strove to make others partakers of the blessing. "Philip findeth Nathaniel, and saith unto him 'We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.'" And he still has the inquirer's temper. A day or two after the Greeks came to him he made a request of the Master on his own account, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us."

But Philip is not satisfied to make the request known to Jesus alone. These are Greeks and Gentiles. This is something rather new. The door to the Gentiles has not as yet been opened. He calls on Andrew, a brother disciple, and fellow-townsmen, to go with him. Andrew was a man who was adept at discovering men and leading them to Christ. He was the man who led his noted brother, Peter, to Christ. He found the lad with the loaves and fishes and led him to the Savior. So the two went, Philip and Andrew, on behalf of these eager Greeks to make their request known to Jesus. There used to be, I believe, an organization in the Brethren church, composed of young men called by some such name as the Brotherhood of Philip and Andrew. There ought to be many Philips and Andrews—in every church faithfully working together, introducing the strangers to Jesus Christ.

III. What was the effect of the request, "Sir, we would see Jesus?" Strange as it may seem at this point the Greeks drop out of view. Philip and Andrew bear the desire of these men to the Lord. We know that it is received and deeply considered but there is no record of further contact between either the disciples and the Greeks, or Jesus and the Greeks. Possibly the time was not yet ripe for the door of salvation to be opened unto them. But surely such earnest men were not left to grope on in the darkness. Who knows but that these very men were among the converts at Jerusalem under Peter's mighty preaching—among the first converts after the Cross was a fact, and a fountain for cleansing was opened in Zion. We can only wish that this were true. And the more we think of them and their sincere purpose in seeing Jesus our wish grows into assurance.

But as we look to the effect of this request upon the soul of Jesus we have some wondrous truths. Jesus was mightily stirred. Never was his heart more deeply affected than on this occasion. And no wonder! What sight is more moving than that of a soul seeking after God, the fountain of life and light! These men came of their own free will. No pressure was put upon them. This was beautiful in them. And they came from an unexpected quarter and at a time when Jesus was about to be conclusively rejected by his own people. His enemies are gathering about. They are soaring above him like birds of prey ready to swoop down upon their victim. At such a time to receive an announcement which was in effect, "Here are certain Greeks who are interested in you and want to see you!" Rejected by his own people, he is made glad by the thought that some are concerned about him. Was this not just a foregleam of the time when he would be believed on in the world?

His thoughts move quickly forward now. He is made to think of his cross. He would draw all men unto him. Doubtless he was thinking of these very men of our text. They would come under its benefits. But before he could present himself to them as their all-sufficient Savior he must bear the cross. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Every one knows the law of the seed. Unless it dies, it remains alone. "So," Jesus says, "I must die in order to become on a large scale, an object of faith and source of life." And in death he sees his glorification. The disciples had not yet been able to see the truth of this. They had only looked for the crown. They could see no cross for the Son of God.

In spite of his announcement that the hour of his glorification is near at hand, his soul was greatly troubled. His humanity rebelled at the humiliation of the Cross. "Father, save me from this hour," he prays. But he goes on to say, "But for this hour came I into the world." He had come to die. His death was an absolute necessity for the welfare of man. This is what we see written all over Jesus' little sermon here. So the effect on Jesus himself of this request, "Sir, we would see Jesus," was to arouse his sympathies and stir his soul again with concern about his saving Cross. The effect on the disciples and upon millions upon millions of men down through the ages was to give them, indeed, the privilege of seeing Jesus. For in the response to the request Jesus brought a revelation of himself. Truly we see him here. If there is the request in your heart, friend, that burned in the hearts of other men long ago, let us open the word at this point and let God reveal him to us.

1. He is revealed as the Son of Man. Not a son of man but the Son of Man, for all humanity was summed up in him. "He took not on him the form of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." In Jesus God clothed himself with our human flesh. He was bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. He had a human mother and a human birth. He grew as others did in wisdom and stature. He became weary and hungry and thirsty. He craved human companionship and sympathy. How well we see this illustrated during the latter hours of his life when he earnestly besought the disciples to remain close by him as he went through his anguish of mind and soul. He was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." "For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." "Wherefore, in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest, in all things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." This puts him by our side. It makes him one of us. "He is not ashamed to call them brethren." Many titles are given to Jesus which lift him far above us. He is wonderful, Councillor, the mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. But this title makes him near us, the "Son of Man." In this Man we find all the virtues in their perfection. There is nothing lacking. The searchlight of criticism has been focused on him through the centuries and yet it has failed to find one suggestion of sin in him. Miracles? He is the miracle of the ages. Jesus, the Son of Man, but was he not more than a man?

There is a story of a conversation between Charles Lamb and other brilliant friends in London. One evening when they were together somebody proposed the topic, "Persons we would like to have seen." Many names were mentioned, among them Sir Thomas Brown, Chaucer, the father of English poetry, Dante, Pope, Dryden, Oliver Cromwell and others. Then Charles Lamb remarked, "There is only one other person I can ever think of after this." Everybody knew to whom he referred though all kept strangely silent. Continuing he said, "If Shakespeare should come into this room, we would all rise to meet him, but if that other person I spoke of should come into it, we would all fall down at his feet and kiss the hem of his garment." "That person" he added "is here." O that you may have grace to fall down at his feet and kiss the hem of his garment and say with Thomas, "My Lord, and my God."

2. He is the Son of God. He is so revealed in the response he makes to this request of inquiring Greeks. This is seen in the answer to his prayer that comes from the heavens. It is seen in the peculiar relationship he sustains to the Father. It is seen in the claims he makes for his cross-bearing. Even the devil would be utterly cast out and unspeakable glory would follow as a consequence of his passion. Only by his deity can his humanity be explained. To claim for him matchless character and deny his deity is to become involved in hopeless difficulties. So the Christ we find at the end of our quest is the Son of God.

Forever God, forever man
My Jesus shall endure,
And fixed in him my hope remains
Eternally secure.

He is the God-man and as such can meet the deepest needs of my soul. He knows my need for he has felt it. He can cope with it for he is powerful—the Omnipotent Son of God.

3. Moreover, he is revealed as the Savior. His glorification came through his becoming man's Redeemer. He came to minister unto man in his need. His greatest need was cleansing from sin. Man found himself estranged from God, living under awful guilt with a conscience defiled. Jesus responded to man's need and gave himself up to die that he might be the Savior. He is that Savior now! The way out of sin and despair is provided. He brings restoration to God, freedom from guilt, cleansing of conscience. He has been saving multitudes through the years, yea, all that came unto him. None other has brought unto man life, light, cleansing; but Jesus has. He is the Savior.

Conclusion. So, we would see Jesus. We would invite others to see him. We realize that apart from him we are destitute. After Jesus had preached his great sermon on the Bread of Life there was a turning away from him. It was a time of separation. "From that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." To the disciples he said, "Will ye also go away?" The ready response from full hearts was, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." When we think that apart from Jesus Christ there is no hope, no cleansing, no assurance of immortality, no revelation of the heart of God, we say earnestly with the men of old, "Sir, we would see Jesus."

ENFORCEMENT FATALITIES

There is no right-minded citizen who does not deeply deplore any unwarranted loss of life in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. Citizens should be on their guard, however, against accepting all the clamor about it at its face value. According to a wet press and certain congressmen, every killing is unwarranted until it is proved otherwise. In their eyes, enforcement officers are "snoopers" and irresponsible gunmen. The practice of some of these of calling every such case an official murder is false on the face of it. Why do not some of these men get excited about Chicago bootleggers armed with machine guns? President Hoover is getting at the root of the matter when he calls upon border communities to do their best to help enforcement officers to end the "systematic war that is being carried on by international criminals against the laws of the United States. It is these activities that are the root of all our difficulties."—The Presbyterian Advance.

SOME THINGS WILL NOT MIX

A judge at Aurora, Illinois, was looking at a man who had confessed to driving an automobile while under the influence of liquor. He had just sentenced the prisoner to thirty days in jail. Said the judge: "Moonshine and gasoline will not mix. There will be no fines and first offenders will get no sympathy. When persons are made to serve out jail sentences they soon find that it is best to stay out of automobiles when they want to do any drinking. I do not believe that the question enters in any way into the wet and dry controversy. I doubt if any one, regardless of his stand on prohibition, can find sympathy or excuse for the intoxicated motorist.—The Gospel Messenger.

But if liquor is to be had on every corner for so much per drink, as the anti-prohibitionists would have it, motorists are going to get drunk. It makes no difference when a man drives an automobile or a horse and buggy, if he is a man who drinks and the temptation is set before him, he is going to drink. And when he is drunk he will not have sense enough not to drive a machine. So the judge's problem does after all enter into "the wet and dry controversy."

IN ONE WEEK SIXTEEN HUNDRED VIEW LIFE OF CHRIST

Two months' wait for the new moving picture machine to reach Okayama, Japan, from America—two more weary months before it was through the customs, duty free; and now, full steam ahead! Over a period of three or four months, Rev. C. Burnell Olds of Okayama has held thirty meetings with audiences ranging from a select handful in a parlor to 500 persons in a school building, and totaling some 5,000 "watchers" and "listeners."

For, while the "talkies" have not become useful to the missionary, an explanation of the plot is given as a running story with each film, according to the Japanese custom.

These programs are conducted in both town and city, under Christian, semi-Christian, or wholly non-Christian auspices. There is no objection to the exhibition of Christian films, and as Mr. Olds puts it, "What better method could be devised for acquainting wholly uneducated people with the vital principles of the Christian faith, and for breaking down prejudice against Christianity?" In one week 1,600 non-Christians saw a program in which the "Life of Christ" was a central feature film.—The Congregationalist.

A HINT TO PASTORS ON HOW TO RAISE MONEY

A Cleveland paper reports that Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson was recently holding evangelistic meetings in the Municipal Auditorium at Denver, Colorado. Wishing to raise money for the conduct of the meetings she one night asked all who would contribute a dollar to stand up. Only a few persons in widely scattered sections of the building arose. Mrs. McPherson's band then struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience rose en masse!

This is the same lady who is reported by the daily papers as having had a boxing match with the devil while holding meetings in Detroit some time ago. According to the newspaper carrying the story, following a prize fight between two well known pugilists, she climbed through the ropes into the ring. A boxing glove was laced to her right fist. The left hand was bare. Behind her came an attendant carrying a life size cardboard figure of the devil scowling ferociously. She smiled at the crowd of fight fans. The announcer entered the ring. Boos came from the ringside seats. The evangelist grasped the cardboard figure of her adversary. A flashlight photo was taken. More boos from the ringside, and she left the ring.—Evangelical-Messenger.

MARRIAGE PREPARATORY CLASSES

The Protestant Episcopal church through its Department of Christian Social Work is planning to hold a series of "Family Relations Institutes" in various sections of the country this fall. At these institutes the clergy will be given a training course in the conduct of marriage preparatory classes. The faculties of these institutes will be composed of authorities in mental hygiene, in spiritual living, in sex relationships, and in household economics.

The underlying purpose of this is to restore and cultivate wholesome family life. It is found that broken families are as a rule lost to the church, and that the number of divorces in which both parties are active members of any church is exceedingly small. A questionnaire sent to 1,600 clergymen of various denominations brought responses which showed that more than 80 per cent of the clergymen were unable to recall any divorce at all in which both parties were regular church attendants. The number of marriages solemnized annually in the Episcopal church is 28,500, an average of five for each of the 5,575 clergymen in charge of parishes.—Evangelical-Messenger.
